RED REINFORCEMENTS REACH STALINGRAD

U.S. PASSENGER TRAIN SCHEDULES 'FROZEN'

Russians Strike Counter-Offensive Blows at Enemy

Germans Seem Unable to Deal Decisive Blow At Volga City

FRESH RED TROOPS

London, Oct. 1 (CP) — A Reuters dispatch from Stockholm said today that Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's forces, battling to relieve Stalingrad, had broken through the German defensive position at some points along the Don northwest of Stalingrad.

Moscow, Oct. 1 (AP)—Backed up by a stream of reinforcements from across the Volga and barracks from the roving guns of the Volga flotilla, Russian infantrymen under fresh telephoned orders from Joseph Stalin to yield no more were reported crunching forward today northwest and southwest of Stalingrad.

Dispatches to Red Star from Stalin's namesake city frankly pictured it as in the "most decisive moment" of its trial as an increasing weight of Axis troops and machines was thrown into the fight.

The counter-offensive strokes on the wings of the constructed front evidently were designed to wipe out or offset a new wedge driven into the northwestern flank by a fresh German tank division, as reported in the Kremlin's midnight communique.

Volga Boatmen Keep Lines Open

Even with the arrival of that division and two fresh infantry divisions, the Germans seemed unable to deal the decisive blow. At the same time Volga boatmen were keeping communications open across the river, bringing up Russian reserves under fierce German air attacks.

Red Star said that from 600 to 1,000 planes had been bombing Stalingrad each day, piling debris on debris.

Hundreds of civilians clinging to the tumbled walls of their homes and factories were reported to have died under the continued bombings. Schools, hospitals, the public library, the university and the palace of physical culture were said to have been destroyed.

Enemy Dislodged

Today's mid-day communique said that the enemy had been dislodged from one village at the southwestern outskirts of Stalingrad, and Red Star said that in that southern sector three setlements had been recaptured, with Rumanian troops thrown into panic in one place.

Disturbances in Copenhagen

Stockholm, Oct. 1 (AP) — The Stockholm newspaper Dagens Nyheter reported today from Copenhagen that one person was killed and several others were wounded Sunday when German-uniformed Danish volunteers home from the Russian front opened fire during demonstrations against them outside the Scala Theatre.

Serious incidents in other parts of the country were also reported to have occurred following the arrival of the members of the Danish volunteer corps from the east.

Urgent Need For Metal Faces Great Britain

By FOSTER BARCLAY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 1—(CP)—The British government, faced with an urgent need for heavy steel scrap and aware that the United States has no extra supplies for export, has invoked drastic measures to clean up practically every bit of scrap metal in the country.

Under a government order all occupiers of premises in which there are at least three tons of metal suitable for scrap are compelled to disclose the amount to the works and planning ministry. Heavy penalties are provided for non-compliance.

"Britain's position is that we have a little light scrap in hand, but we are behind with our heavy scrap. We want heavier scrap to supplement the lighter stuff we have collected so that the rate of production can be maintained."

During the last 14 months Britain's voluntary salvage drive realized 1,400,000 tons of scrap. Railways have been taken from about 2,000,000 homes, parks and other areas. Almost 95 per cent of the metal from bombed buildings has been salvaged. There's a pressing demand for more.

The latest ruling decrees that any metal—ferrous or non-ferrous —other than aluminum or magnesium, which forms part of any unused, obsolete or redundant building, structure, plant or article, or otherwise serves no useful purpose, is deemed suitable for scrap

The ministry, however, has no intention of taking valuable machinery and plants which will be important for post-war use. The order does not apply to firms forced to close under concentration schemes approved by the board of trade or ministry of food.

"Germany has gone much further than we have and has even requisitioned oil stoves for scrap," said Hicks. "We don't propose to do that but people must realize it is a solemn (and legal) duty to give every bit of scrap to the war effort."

TWO STORM TROOPERS KILLED

VICHY, Oct. 1 — (AP) — Two storm troopers of Collabbrationist Jacques Doriot's French popular party were killed and seven others wounded in Paris yesterday when a hand grenade was tossed over a barracks wall and exploded on their parade ground, it was announced today.

Storm troopers arrested one man and charged him with complicity in the bombing, but a second participant was said to have escaped.

Two of those wounded were reported in grave condition.

PREDICT HITLER TO AGAIN TRY FOR KNOCKOUT BLOW

Observers Believe Nazis Will Make Supreme Effort to Take Stalingrad

DRAFT SIMPLE PROGRAM

By WES GALLAGHER
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

London, Oct. 1 (AP)—Competent observers closely following developments on Germany's eastern front today interpreted Hitler's speech of yesterday as meaning that the Germans would make one more attempt to take Stalingrad and the Grozny oilfields and then stabilize the front for the winter.

These observers, whose anonymity is required, expressed a belief Hitler had already started withdrawing troops from inactive zones of the east to reinforce Marshal Rommel in Africa and the forces holding Italy, France and Norway against the prospect of an Allied second front.

Must Hold Present Lines

"For this year we have drafted a very simple program. First, hold in all circumstances what must be held; that is, let the enemy run against us wherever we do not intend to advance and let him storm as long as he wants to, hold adamantly and wait to see who tires out first. Second, absolutely attack in all circumstances where attack is necessary."

Apart from supposed German withdrawals in inactive areas of the eastern front, observers here believe that divisions heavily mauled in the Stalingrad fighting also are being replaced and withdrawn to Germany for refitting, rebuilding and rest, thence to be sent to France, Norway and Italy instead of back to Russia.

"Winter conditions on the Leningrad and Moscow fronts are rapidly reaching the point where troops can be withdrawn from these sectors as well", one source added.

Some military men stated that the reduction of Stalingrad now had become a matter of prestige rather than of any great military significance.

"The Germans have already reached the Volga at other points making use of the river impossible", one explained.

Reds Shoot Down 4 Nazi Bombers Near Leningrad

Moscow, Oct. 1 —(AP)— The Soviet radio said today German air squadrons made two thrusts at Leningrad Tuesday night, but Red army anti-aircraft gunners and fighter planes shot down four bombers and two fighters and not a single raider reached the city.

Drive to Seize Kunming in Yunnan Province May Be Next Japanese Move

Dan De Luce returned to the United States this week from three years on the world's war fronts, from Poland to Malaya. He covered 100,000 miles, saw fighting on three continents. Here he reports the possibilities of a new Japanese attempt to throttle China.

By DAN De LUCE
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 1 — (AP) — Japanese army brains directing the slow-motion war in China are reported toying with the plan of a big-scale drive into Yunnan province to seize Kunming, mile-high capital city through which passes a trickle of air-borne defence supplies from North America to Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek.

The Yunnan offensive is a winter project, revamped out of the failure of the Japanese 15th army corps to make a bridgehead on the Salween River last May and expand the corps' complete victory in Burma into a crushing blow at China herself. Yunnan is a strategical prize of the first magnitude, in which the enemy could dangerously outflank Chungking. But the cost of conquest would not be cut-rate.

Bare, indisputable facts show that the Japanese have frittered away another summer in China and now, in the autumn, they have practically nothing to show for their thousands of dead in Chekiang province on the coastal strip 200 miles south of Shanghai and for the aircraft they lost in fruitless challenge of the United States army expeditionary squadrons.

To win anything the Japanese still face the necessity of gambling more than they can afford to lose —especially when they have so many risks elsewhere.

GERMANS SEIZE GREEK HARVEST AND FAT SUPPLY

Vegetables, Milk and All Grapes and Currants Are Also Confiscated

REPORTED BY RADIO

New York, Oct 1 —(CP)— Nazi occupation authorities have seized the entire Greek harvest this year, including the olive crop and even the remaining stock of fats, BBC reported today in a broadcast heard here by CBS.

Vegetables, milk, fish and butter have been confiscated and sent to Germany, while grapes and currants have been requisitioned to make alcohol, the broadcast said.

The announcer quoted an official of the British Ministry of Economic Warfare as declaring Britain had shouldered a great responsibility when it permitted several food ships to go to Greece.

Canadian wheat has been among recent relief shipments to that Nazi-controlled country.

Coal Production Matter of Debate

London, Oct. 1 (CP).—Opening a debate on the question foremost in the minds of most Britons—"how cold will we be this winter?"—Maj. Gwilym Lloyd George, minister of fuel, light and power, told the House of Commons today that Britain would surmount the fuel shortage problem "providing we get the full co-operation of both consumers and producers."

He declared there must be an increase in production and a decrease in consumption of fuel, but added this reassurance:

"I am satisfied that very large savings can be made without real hardship to our people. I don't want people to confuse inconvenience with hardship."

He said many thousands of tons of coal already are being saved in a fuel economy campaign which, among other things, has resulted in a ban on central heating until Nov. 1 for all Britons living or working in buildings of more than ten rooms.

The minister reported that coal output dropped from 237,000,000 tons annual in 1938 to a rate of 200,000,000 during that last five months while domestic consumption sharply increased.

Although exports have declined Britain expects to have an annual domestic coal deficit of 11,000,000 tons even though using low-grade fuel and working low production mines, Maj. Lloyd George continued.

TORPEDO SINKS NAZI SHIPS

London, Oct. 1— (CP) — British light naval forces torpedoed and sank a medium German supply ship last night from a convoy intercepted off The Netherlands port of Terschelling, the Admiralty announced today.

It said that the Royal Navy lost a motor gunboat, but that casualties in the engagement were not heavy.

2 R.A.F. FIGHTERS PLUNGE INTO AXIS BOMBERS

Shoot Down 3 Enemy Aircraft Near Matruh, Return Safely

AXIS BASES POUNDED

Cairo, Oct. 1 (AP)—Two long-range British fighters plunged into a formation of Axis bombers over Matruh yesterday, shot down three and returned safely to their base, a communique announced today.

The dogfight took place, the bulletin said, during an increase in enemy aerial activity, which included attacks by dive-bombers and fighter-bombers. British bombers also were active. Two planes are missing from the day's operations.

Allied planes also attacked the Axis airdrome at Sidi Haneish and the enemy bases of Tobruk, Salum and Bardia Tuesday night.

Operations on the land front yesterday were said to have been confined to artillery exchanges.

Japanese Planes Downed by Scores

Hollywood, Oct. 1—(AP)—Japanese which sought vainly to stem the United States attack on the Solomon Islands last month were shot down by scores, says Lieut. Arthur Downing, a naval flier who participated in the engagement.

"On the first attack which they made with 40 bombers, not a Jap plane scored a hit and 25 were shot down by our navy fighters," he said. He is first naval pilot to return to the Mainland from the Solomons battle.

He was interviewed last night on broadcast program "it happened in the service."

"On Aug. 8 a flight of 25 Jap twin-engined torpedo planes came in to attack the transports. Between our anti-aircraft fire and our fighters we knocked down every one."

He added that on Aug. 25 only two Japanese dive-bombers of an attacking force of 50 or 60 managed to escape.

"Their torpedo planes were all shot down before they even reached our carrier."

ALLIED OFFENSIVE IN NEW GUINEA GAINS 10 MILES

JAP BASES BOMBED

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 1 (CP)—Australian troops were reported driving steadily up the southern slopes of New Guinea's Owen Stanley mountains today in pursuit of retreating Japanese forces after recapturing Nauro yesterday in a swift 10-mile advance from Ioribaiwa Ridge.

An Allied communique announcing the advance said the Japanese were abandoning additional supplies and equipment as they fell back and an Allied spokesman said there was no doubt their withdrawal was hurried.

Strong formations of Allied attack bombers, escorted by fighters, were reported harrying the enemy supply lines in the vicinity of Menari, about four miles north of Nauro, where it was believed the Japanese might attempt to make a stand along a ridge offering defensive possibilities.

The advance apparently was negotiated with comparatively little opposition, for the communique said there had been no contact with the retreating main body of the enemy forces It was the first time Allied headquarters had used the phrase "main body" in referring to the Japanese retreat.

No Attempt to Fortify

An Allied spokesman said the Japanese had made no attempt to fortify their positions at Nauro as they did at Ioribaiwa Ridge, high-water mark of the enemy advance. The ridge was recaptured Tuesday.

Heavy demolition bombs also were dropped on both ends of Wairopi Bridge, spanning the deep gorge of the Kumasi River on the enemy's vital supply line. The bridge, a repeated target of aerial attack, was left sagging and badly damaged, the communique said.

Other Allied air-formations attacked Japanese bases in the northern Solomons, scoring many direct hits on the Buin airdrome on Bougainville Island and bombing the airfield and supply dumps on nearby Buka.

FRESH OUTBURSTS

Bombay, Oct. 1 —(CP)— Three more fatalities were reported today in sporadic outbursts of violence in India.

Ten bombs exploded in various parts of Sholapur City over a period of three days this week killed one person and injured ten.

Two persons were reported killed and two injured at the Patacsarkughi police station when an officer fired into a mob which attacked while he was escorting prisoners to jail.

Special Trains To Sports Events Also Ruled Out

Running of Extra Sections Under Certain Conditions Is Now Banned

EFFECTIVE OCT. 4

Washington, Oct. 1 —(AP)— Director Joseph B. Eastman of the United States Office of Defence Transportation, today ordered the "freezing" of all railway passenger schedules and ruled out the operation of special trains to football games, races and other sporting events.

The order, effective Oct. 4, restricts railroads to the passenger train schedules existing Sept. 26, forbids the running of any special passenger trains or the addition of new trains to existing schedules.

It also bans the running of extra sections to regular trains unless such sections have been run at least 20 per cent of the time during the last 90 days to handle the normal flow of passenger traffic.

Also, under the order, no railroad may operate a passenger train which includes a car "chartered to, or the use of which by prior arrangement is restricted to an individual or group of persons travelling together."

This would rule out special cars, or cars chartered to baseball teams or travelling orchestras. This prohibition, however, does not apply to cars used by railroad officials or employees on railroad business.

Canadian Ministers Confer in London

London, Oct. 1 (CP Cable)—Col. J. L. Ralston, Canadian Minister of National Defence, and Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Munitions and Supply, devoted today to laying the groundwork for conferences and visits which will take up most of their two weeks' stay in Britain.

Mr. Howe spent this morning in the London office of his department while Col. Ralston conferred with Canadian army officials.

It was disclosed that the two Ministers and Dominions Secretary Clement Attlee, Malcolm MacDonald United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada, and Elliot Roosevelt, the President's son, arrived in Britain at almost the same time, travelling in three planes.

Dakar Governor Decides to Evacuate Women, Children From Coast Area

Vichy, Oct. 1 — (AP) — An official source said today that Pierre Boisson, governor of Dakar, had decided to evacuate European women and children from the French West African port.

The announcement said that Boisson issued an order Sept. 29 for a census to be taken among women and children of civilian and military families which have two or more children living in the Dakar region.

(A similar announcement over the Vichy radio was heard in London Tuesday but another broadcast shortly after cancelled it without explanation.

(Axis and Vichy French propaganda recently have pumped rumors about Dakar, apparently to plant the idea an Allied offensive against the important African port is impending. The evacuation plan may be part of the build-up.)

Together with the announcement of the census, it was stated that "The Governor-General has just decided to prepare methodically for the evacuation of European women and children in excess of Dakar."

It was explained as "precautionary" although Vichy sources stressed it as an "opportunity to relieve the city of part of its over-crowded European population."

Ship movements, presumably in preparation for an evacuation, were reported off Dakar and the announcement said the order was received calmly.

It was issued in the midst of sessions of the first "economic conference of dark Africa" at Dakar, attended by representatives from all over French West Africa, including Sengal, the Ivory Coast, French Guinea, Dahomey and the interior under Boisson's chairmanship.

R.A.F. Grounded By Bad Weather

London Oct. 1 (CP)—Unfavorable weather over the continent which has held up the R.A.F. bombing offensive on Germany for the last week kept bombers grounded again last night.

Thus the hammering of the enemy which started September auspiciously with attacks during the first four nights of the month tapered away to a seven-night lull at the end of the month.

Altogether, there were attacks during 12 nights of the month, the last being the raid on Flensburg Sept. 23.

Meanwhile, the death roll at a boys' school in Southern England which was demolished by a heavy German bomb Tuesday rose to 29.

An English east coast town had a brief daylight raid today but no damage was reported.

Legislation Ready For Signature

Washington, Oct. 1 — (AP) — A speedy adjustment of Senate and House of Representatives differences which would send the administration's anti-inflation legislation to President Roosevelt for his signature within 24 hours was forecast today by Congressional leaders.

Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, democratic leader, said he saw no reason why the bill should not be laid before the president by tomorrow at the latest. That would be one day beyond the deadline set by Mr. Roosevelt in his Sept. 7 you-do-it-or-I-will message on cost-of-living controls.

Backed by an 82-to-0 vote in the Senate, administration lieutenants sought to obtain an agreement by House members to the major features of a compromise Senate version directing the president to stabilize prices, wages and salaries at Sept. 15 levels, so far as practical.

This would entail a reversal of the House vote to alter the basis of computing farm parity standards and acceptance of an administration-sponsored amendment inserted by the Senate directing the president to raise price ceilings where they did not reflect to growers the increase in labor and other costs since Jan. 1, 1941.

Senate approval of this latter provision by an 86-to-4 vote yesterday ended an eight-day controversy between the administration and farm-bloc members over conditions under which price ceilings would be placed on farm products.

HORSE RUNS AWAY AFTER WAGON HIT

And the horse ran away and broke the buggy, but wait that's another story.

However, yesterday on Evans Street, a horse drawing a local milk wagon ran away and caused property camage amounting to nearly $100.00.

The trouble came about when a tractor, driven by Harry Palmer, Thurlow, stalled negotiating an incline to an Evans Street driveway. The brakes failed to hold and the tractor backed down the incline striking a milk wagon, that was being driven past by Glen Milligan, 28 Forin Street. The sound of the impact frightened the horse, causing it to run away and before Mr. Milligan could halt the frightened beast considerable damage had resulted to the wagon and several bottles of milk had been strewn along the street. P.C. Taylor investigated and Palmer promised to settle the damage, which was purely of an accidental nature.

SEPTEMBER WAS ONE OF WETTEST MONTHS OF RECENT YEARS

For seventeen days during the month of September, old Jupiter Pluvius made his presence felt in the Bay of Quinte district, it was reported this morning by Mr. Harry Mills of the Belleville Water Purification Plant as he tabulated the month's climatic records. Last month was one of the wettest September's in recent years, it was revealed, with exactly four and one quarter inches of rain falling.

This is approximately 2.7 times as much rain as was received in September, 1941, when only 1.56 of rain fell.

Temperature for the last month was slightly more varied than that of one year ago with the thermometer reaching 82.5 degrees as compared to 81 degrees one year ago. One degree of frost was registered at the pump house on the coldest night last month, that on Monday night last. One year ago the low temperature recorded was 32.8.

CUSTOMS RETURNS DOWN SLIGHTLY

Customs returns at the port of Belleville for the month of September were down slightly from those of the corresponding month last year it was reported this morning by Col. E. A. Geen, local customs clerk. Returns for last month were $285,067.36 as compared to $308,270.90 for September, 1941. This is a decrease of $23,203.54.

JACK BEAN LANDS 20-POUND 'LUNGE

Consistency in landing the big ones is the ambition of all Izaak Waltons but seldom have any shown more ability in this particular line than Mr. Jack Bean, of Shaw's Men's Wear, popular local fisherman.

Last August Jack was credited with giving an assist when Steve Flintoff landed a 25-pound 'lunge in Muscote Bay and not to be outdone he went back the next week and brought home a 35-pounder. Yesterday he again struck it rich again and was successful in landing a nice 20-pounder, much to the chagrin of two other members of his party, Steve Flintoff and Harry Green, who now have decided their fisherman friend has really got something on the ball.

POLICE BLOTTER

Found lying on the floor of an apartment situated at 224 Front St., Mrs. Eileen Smith, of 219 Coleman St., claimed she had been struck on the head by a bottle. The woman was suffering from a slight concussion, but later recovered sufficiently to return to her home. She was found on the floor of the apartment by a neighbor woman, who reported the incident to police. Constable Wright investigated and reported the incident.

Today a charge of intoxication was preferred against Albert Smith, of 219 Coleman St., by Chief W. R. Probert, who added that although mystery surrounded the above attack, no further charges could be preferred unless Mrs. Smith wished to state her grievances before a Justice of the Peace and prefer subsequent counts. Smith was detained at the police station, while another man alleged to have been implicated in the fracas was not held.

Some time Wednesday afternoon an automobile ran into a verandah at the rear of 326 Front St., damaging the support posts and generally making the structure unsafe for use until repaired.

Emergency Corps Formed in City For Outside Calls

To meet an ever-growing need of medical and first aid assistance being required at a moment's notice in some cases in localities outside the bounds of municipalities, a volunteer emergency corps for answering out-of-town calls, has been formed by the St. John Ambulance nursing division, it is revealed by Mrs. W. N. Ponton, head of the local division.

Twelve women, trained in all branches of first-aid treatment, have volunteered for the corps and will be ready to proceed to any place where the emergency arises, it was stated by Mrs. Ponton. Assistance of this trained corps can be acquired at a moment's notice by calling local headquarters, or the nurse's corps will proceed to localities where needed at any time on direction from Ottawa.

Three automobiles have been donated to the corps to transport the nurses to emergency calls out-of-town, while transportation of casualties to hospital will be made by Martin's Ambulance, which, with drivers, has been offered for the service.

140,000 Men Eligible Under New Call-up

Ottawa, Oct. 1 —(CP)— A new pool of some 140,000 men throughout Canada today are eligible for compulsory military training.

Under a proclamation announced yesterday by War Services Minister Thorson, the National Resources Mobilization Act was extended to include 19-year-olds and aliens of non-enemy citizenship.

The regulations were also amended to include men who have been divorced or legally separated or have become widowers without children since July 15, 1940.

Transfer of the call-up system from National War Services to National Selective Service under the Labor Department is expected to be effective Dec. 1.

Maj.-Gen. L. R. LaFleche who has been in charge of the call-up as Associate Deputy Minister of War Services since the summer of 1940, is believed to be slated for a cabinet appointment.

165,000 Medically Fit

It is estimated that since mid-1940 about 165,000 men have been called for service, found medically fit and accepted by the army, while an additional 50,000 who have received calls have voluntarily enlisted before they were due to report.

Latest extension of the regulations is believed to bring the present pool of eligible men—those born in the years 1902 to 1923 inclusive, who are single, childless widowers, separated or divorced—to 370,000. But in this number are many who have already enlisted, have been given postponement because of the importance of their civilian occupation or are medically unfit.

With the transfer to selective service, the call-up will come under control of Elliott M. Little, Director of National Selective Service. Barely 24 hours before the announcement of the extension to 19-year-olds Mr. Little, in an interview at Montreal mentioned the possibility of 18-year-olds and married men, as well as 19-year-olds being made subject to call to fill future military requirements.

Blackout Test To Be Made Soon In City

The City of Belleville will have its first real blackout test within six weeks, or immediately the organization of the local Civilian Defence Committee becomes complete and is working smoothly, it was announced by Mr. Harold Seldon at the Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday evening during an open meeting of Belleville citizens called for the purpose of laying the foundation of the local corps.

And the blackout will have teeth in it, promised Mr. Seldon. It will be held on the authorization of the Attorney General and all householders and business places will be expected to adhere to the order with penalties promised for delinquents. The last blackout held in Belleville was a "fizzle" declared Mr. Seldon.

The duties of various departments and members of a civilian defence corps were outlined by Mr. Seldon at the meeting. He declared that 75 per cent of the total members of the committee will be required for air-raid warden duties. Approximately five percent will be trained for fire-fighting service under Fire Chief William Lynch; ten percent as first-aiders with the remainder divided among the police service auxiliaries and public utility services, the volunteers of which would necessarily have to be skilled men.

To Take Lecture Course

All members of the corps will first take an eight-lecture course in basic training, starting next Wednesday night at the "Y". The lectures will take about one hour and will be held each week. At the completion of the course the members will be categorized and will then take training in one of the four special services, as wardens, fire-fighters, first-aiders or public services.

The one big task will be to organize the air raid wardens, according to Mr. Seldon. The city will be divided into four districts with a district warden over each. Air raid wardens, either men or women are eligible but their occupations must not be such that will take them from the city during working hours, will be in charge of two city blocks. Their jobs are important and they must be chosen with great care.

Stop All Traffic

In blackouts all vehicular traffic in the city will be stopped, and air raid wardens will be required to be at their posts.

Co-operation of the St. John Ambulance Brigade and of the Red Cross Emergency Corps in training civilian defence workers chosen for the first-aid course was promised by the respective heads of these two organizations with Mr. Jack Hodgson stating the St. John Ambulance Brigade had been preparing for just such an emergency since last April. Dr. Cronk, local health officer, also promised all assistance possible.

Inspector Frank Gardner of the Ontario Provincial Police in a short talk at the outset of the meeting appealed to residents to get rid of their apathy and complacency arising from the belief that air raids "can't happen here". The Inspector warned that air raids could and might very possibly happen here and stressed the value of organization to counteract just such an emergency. "Unless there is organization, utter chaos results in the emergency," he stated.

Praises O. V. C.

Inspector Gardner paid splendid tribute to the Ontario Volunteer Constabulary and claimed that the local unit had done excellent service when detailed to special jobs co-inciding with police work in the province.

The need for a great many more applicants to join the newly organized defence corps in this city was urged by Mr. Seldon who claimed personal contact by interested persons would assist greatly in arousing the interest of the general public.

Organization of the local corps is now well under way and more applications will be welcomed by Vice Chairman Seldon. Application forms are available at the police station and at the fire hall and all interested persons are urged to attend the first basic training course lecture at the "Y" next Wednesday evening.

THE WAR TODAY

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

London, Oct. 1 —Herr Hitler's boastful promise to his people yesterday that he will retaliate against Britain for the bombing raids on Germany finds John Bull quite unmoved and stoically reconciled to renewal of the Nazi war from the air.

However, while there can be no question of Der Fuehrer's intention to resume his aerial hymn of hate there is considerable doubt how far he will be able to carry out his plans. He no longer is the mighty man he was before he tangled with the unconquerable Bolshevists.

He can't just say as of old, "let Britain be bombed," and know that his Genie has done the job.

For months now German efforts against Britain have been confined largely to nuisance raids. These have included such inglorious forays as that of Tuesday, when a Hun pilot swept down within a few feet of the roofs of a sweet village in southern England and bombed a large number of boys to death in their school. Still, John Bull is smart to anticipate that such a comparatively quiet condition won't continue indefinitely.

At present, virtually all Hitler's air power, apart from essential home defence, is engaged in his now-or-never assault on Stalingrad and the Caucasus. One wouldn't expect him to withdraw any of this strength for some weeks yet until he achieves all he can before winter calls a halt.

However, once the Caucasus snow slows down, the Nazi chief will be able to withdraw a large part of his air fleet.

Whither then?

Well, it strikes me he will be faced with numerous difficult problems which are developing.

In the first place, his air fleet is no longer the great weapon with which he started the war. He is short of warplanes, pilots, oil and gasoline. His first-line planes have been and still are undergoing terrific wear and tear in the non-stop carnage at Stalingrad.

A corollary to this problem is the Anglo-American air strength already in the British Isles and steadily growing. The Allies have superiority in the air over western Europe and are reaching for absolute supremacy.

As this is being written I can hear the steady drone of R.A.F. patrol planes as they swing over London—sweet music to the population—and we presume that similar scouts are covering every strategic area. There have been great improvements in anti-aircraft defences.

Maybe Hitler will have other projects on hand at that time. For instance, he might decide to throw his strength into his now-stationary offensive against Egypt.

And there are other possibilities which one can foresee.

Finally we come to the question of that second front. In connection with this it is interesting to discover the British public is experiencing a lively hunch the Allied High Command is cooking up something in the way of a new offensive.

Of course the easiest way to explain it would be to put it down to wishful thinking. There's plenty of that here as well as in America, for John Bull and family are eager to come to death-grips with Adolf Hitler.

The old flower lady in Piccadilly Circus—for these colorful characters in London life still stick to their posts despite the bombing, God love 'em—summed the thing up for me when I stopped to buy a rose and have a little chat for old time's sake.

"Sure's we're going to win," she said, "but we wants to get ahead with it."

Internal Friction in A.F.L. Seen As Obstacle to Labor Peace

Toronto, Oct. 1—(CP)— Internal friction in the American Federation Labor raised another obstacle today, to the possible consummation of an organic merger with C. I. O.

Harvey J. Brown, President of the International Association of Machinists, disclosed he had demanded representation for metal trades union on the A. F. L. negotiating committee and, failing that, had served notice on the committee it had no authority to give the C. I. O. negotiators even a tentative commitment of any kind in behalf of the machinists or any other metal trades union.

The issue may go to the floor of the A. F. L. convention which opens next week.

Unity negotiations are scheduled to begin in the latter part of November. The A. F. L. committeemen are Harry Bates of the bricklayers, Dan Tobin of the teamsters, and William Hutcheson, of the carpenters. All are part of the building and construction trades department of the A. F. L.

Refused to Appoint Representative

Brown, a member of the A. F. L. executive council and leader of one of the largest A. F. L. unions, told the metal trades department convention yesterday the council refused to appoint a metal tradesman to the peace committee "for reasons best known to themselves."

"The statement was made, brothers," said the machinists' president, "so that some of you may be able to see the handwriting on the wall—and please don't ask me to mention names— the statement was made that when the time comes to shuffle the cards to bring about a unified labor movement, the metal trades organizations may just as well make up their minds they are not going to maintain the form of organization they have at the present time.

Told They were Crazy

"I told them they were just as crazy as hell," he continued. "I said if and when the time comes that the metal trades unions are going to agree to revamp the structure and the scope of their jurisdiction, nobody in the American trade union movement is going to give the green light excepting the metal trades unions."

Brown said he told the A. F. L. committeemen "they were without authority to even tentatively propose a solution if it means compromising to the slightest degree any of the metal trade unions."

The convention, made up of A. F. L. unions with a membership of about 1,600,000, adopted a resolution requesting the appointment of two metal tradesmen on the unity negotiations committee.

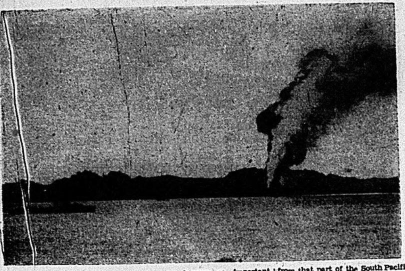
Devil Isles, Seamen's Name for Solomons

Land of Cannibals, Now Scene of Important Action in the South Pacific



A heavy pall of smoke rises from Jap installations on the Island of Tulagi, one of the Solomons, strange South Pacific group, which have now become so important strategically in the war of the Pacific. The fire is the result of action in the American offensive which finally drove the invaders from that part of the South Pacific. A U.S. destroyer, seen in the foreground probably lent the weight of its guns to the attack which routed the Nips.

By HENRY C. NICHOLAS
(Central Press Correspondent)

Washington — The first American offensive in World War II was made on one of the strangest groups of islands in the world—islands which most Americans had never heard of previously but which were known to missionaries and traders as the devil incarnate. Of all the islands of the South Pacific they were the most feared and hated.

The Solomon Islands were discovered in 1567 by a Spaniard, Alvaro de Mendana. He spent six months in exploring them and named them after King Solomon, because he was convinced they were rich in unmined gold. Mendana went back to Spain, keeping his discovery to himself, and he never returned. In Spain he obtained financial backing for another expedition, but he died before reaching the islands.

"Lost" for 200 Years

The Solomons were then "lost" for 200 years. They were rediscovered by a French explorer, Bougainville, for whom the largest in the group is named. During the following century many English, American, French and Spanish ships stopped at the Solomons for water, vegetables and provisions. But the captains of these ships could find nothing favorable to say about these islands or their inhabitants. They all agreed with Capt. Andrew Cheyne of the British brig Naiad that the natives were the "most treacherous and bloodthirsty race in the South Pacific."

Although rich in copra and although the story of huge gold deposits persisted, all ships gave these islands a wide berth. An American trader who visited the islands said that there was not a cove or bay of the Solomons that did not have its own tragedy of white men killed and ships sunk. All missionaries who landed on these islands were killed and many were eaten by cannibals.

Still Growing

One of the strange facts about the Solomons is that they are steadily growing in size. The larger islands in the group are of volcanic origin, while the smaller one are of coral formation. Bougainville has one mountain over 10,000 feet in height and two active volcanoes. The climate is hot and humid and the jungles extending down to the beaches are among the worst in the world, full of vicious insects and poisonous snakes. Here is found the largest frog on earth.

In Bougainville is the ethnic "black spot" of the world, where live the blackest of all people. In naked bushmen, who are head hunters and cannibals. Japanese who retreat back into these hills will have reason to wish they had surrendered to American marines. These bushmen wear long bones through their noses, tatoo their entire backs, and believe in witchcraft and voo-doos. To escape from them, other tribes living near the beach were forced to build artificial islands some distance from the shore. These islands were built on coral formations just below the level of the water. There they are safe from the bushmen, who have never learned to swim or build boats.

Gin for Island

The Solomons have remained almost as uncivilized as when they were discovered nearly 400 years ago by Mendana. A few years ago one of the smaller islands was purchased by a large soap manufacturer, for a bottle of gin. Most South Sea traders felt they had paid too high a price for the island.

When the Japanese filtered through the Solomons last January they found only a few hundred white men, traders in copra and those working on cocoanut plantations. These white men on the 90-mile-long double chain of 10 large and many small islands could do nothing to stop the invasion. What the Japanese primarily wanted in invading the Solomons, and what the U.S. marines have now taken from them, was Tulagi harbor, which Admiral Jellicoe said was the best fleet base in all the South Pacific.

Shorten Lines For Month

For more than a month, the Japanese command has been pulling back troops from the forward points reached in the so-called "bomb-Tokyo-airfields offensive." A shortening of lines and a reduction of fighting strength have taken place, with jubilant Chinese forces walking almost unmolested into localities the Japanese once captured by bitter struggles. About as many potential bases for bombing Tokyo now are in Chinese hands as when the Japanese command, in visible alarm, began an attempt to wipe them out after Brig.-Gen. Jimmy Doolittle's B25's roared within view of the Mikado's palace.

Three factors mainly are credited by far eastern observers for the shifting emphasis of Japanese operations.

1. The Japanese need to economize and keep reserves mobile for possible use in the South Pacific and in Siberia.

2. The meagre results achieved despite a protracted campaign in Chekiang.

3. Prospects that an attack on Yunnan would bring a final decision in China much nearer than wasteful attempts to mop up the China coast.

Air Force Augmented

Chinese intelligence operatives have confirmed that Japanese troops in considerable number have been sent across French Indo-China to the Yunnan frontier around Loi Kaw. The Japanese airforce in this area has been augmented, apparently with a view to striking hard at bomb-scarred Kunming, although American fighter pilots have been defending it with deadly skill for nearly a year. Japanese agents have started a new flood of rumors that certain Yunnan provincial officials are ready to "sell out." Activity of Japanese regiments on the Burma-Yunnan frontier has given grounds for speculation that the Yunnan offensive, if it comes, will be at least a two-pronged onslaught.

Yunnan is no picnic for an invader. It is ruggedly mountainous. Except for the old Burma Road extending to Kunming and a narrow-gauge railroad that formerly provided a link with French Indo-China, it offers little to solve the transport problems of an invasion army. But Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek doesn't rely too much on "impenetrable terrain"—which in Malaya and Burma was a disastrous illusion—to stop the enemy. He has some of his best soldiers in Yunnan, ready to acquit themselves as gallantly as ever.

Canadian Short-Wave Station Will Carry Unvarnished Truth

By JAMES McCOOK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Oct. 1 — (CP) — The plain, unvarished truth in the form of news will be the strong right arm of Canada's propaganda service when her new short wave station to carry her voice to the far corners of the world is opened in about a year's time, it was learned here today.

Two veterans of Canadian broadcasting, men who have watched the development of radio services in the Dominion and compared the mwith those of other Nations, will be guiding forces in construction and the work of the station which will rise at Sackville, N. B.

Following announcement by war services Minister Thorson that the station would be built at a cost of $800,000, it was learned that technical matters concerned with construction and operation would be the responsibility of Dr. Augustin Frigon, Assistant General Manager of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

An announcement yesterday dealing with the duties of CBC officials said that Gladstone Murray, now general manager and who will be director-general of broadcasting after Nov. 2, will be required, among other duties, to "pay special attention to the programs of the high-powered short wave stations and to the arrangements for their world-wide distribution."

Two other Ottawa personalities will be concerned with the operation of the station and the material sent over it Programs will be developed in consultation with the external affairs department, which means that Norman Robertson, under-secretary of state for this department, will have an important part in decisions to be made.

Services of writers and others within the wartime information board organization, headed by Charles Vining, are expected to be available for short-wave broadcasts. The information board recently took over the public information bureau.

Officials recalled today that the short wave station has been supported by CBC officials for several years.

Nazis Dig Pit for Selves

Victims of Nazi executions are reported to have reached the enormous total of 207,372 persons, according to a statement issued by the Inter-Allied Information Committee in London.

This vast number indicates something of the steady, persistent persecution, tyranny and murder practised by the German authorities, who have made a host of men and women suffer for their patriotism to their homelands, or as hostages for alleged offences which they did not commit and could not have committed.

Human annals have never recorded the like of these wholesale crimes. To the Nazis they bring no sense of horror and shame, and they are performed relentlessly, steadily. There have been barbarians in history but the regime that Hitler leads has performed massacres the like of which will forever cast into the shade the deeds of other tyrannies. It is unfair to the savage or barbarian to call Nazis savages or barbarians, for living in an age of enlightenment these Nazi criminals callously have sold themselves to the powers of darkness, murder, treachery and death. So far sunken in vice is the Nazi soul, when it is a matter of state policy deliberately to murder from the pure lust of killing, from the sense of frustration, and from hate of everything that is not German. In them selfishness and ambition have gone mad.

New York Times speaks of the massacres in these words: "These Nazi massacres are different. They are carried out in passionless discipline. They never cease. They follow the clock. For the first time in history a nation has adopted continuous massacre as a settled state policy. For the first time one nation is trying to decimate the population of one continent. With every new grave they open, the Nazis are digging such a pit for themselves as was never dug on this earth before."

The deeds pf poisoners and assassins of history, such as the Borgia, still chill the blood of man at the thought of their inhumanity, ,but the Hitler group and followers have outdone them. Now the Hun deliberately dose these inhumanities to kill off whole races of men. They have tried to elimate the Poles and others.

The modern Nazi German has sold himself to evil and his deeds are the perversion of everything that is true, beautiful and good.

Centuries have passed since Attila slaughtered men, but Attila had none of the benefits of civilization, he had none of the inhibitions or checks of the modern man who has come to know what law is. But Hitler's crew are by choice murderers, who make murder a department of the government service. If the present age thinks in horror of this monster and his kind who range central Europe, what must future ages think and how will they explain the fact that in the twentieth century there rose so terrible a manifestation of human depravity and degradation as Nazism and Hitlerism? These have perverted life, tried to dethrone ideals and allied themselves with wrong and injustice and crime. Modern Germany is the absolute tyranny, the worst aggression, that mankind has known in all centuries. Therefore those who fight against Nazism and its associates, Italian and Japanese Fascism, fight in the cause of justice, truth and democracy.

These figures but signify a small portion of the evil the Huns have caused in suffering to those whom they have oppressed, in the loss of life they have caused in battle and through the upsetting of the normal life of nations. The offence of the Huns against humanity is measureless in its volume. This Hitlerism and Nazism and its representatives and followers have chosen to do and the greater therefore is the punishment they will bring upon themselves. The world must be cleansed of this awful force of evil. This task the United Nations are now pledged and organized to do so that the world may again be free and secure.

DIGGING POTATOES

The boy is barefooted in crisp frosty weather;
He's digging potatoes and filling a sack.
He straightens to watch the wild geese in formation,

So briefly regretting that Summer must go.
The pheasants are strutting across the brown meadows
And black crows in chorus are chanting their woe.

Like names half forgotten that come back unbidden,
When he is a man grown, some time with a start
The boy will remember this moment of childhood,
The earth on his feet and the song in his heart.

DUCK VERSUS LUCK

Today the official duck hunting season opened, and a lot of the lads were out bright and early with their shooting eyes keen but sleepy , their trigger fingers itchy, but a little stiff, and their wives wondering just what they will do next for this thing called sport.

But perhaps the ducks will have the last laugh. True, some of them may have fallen for the hand of friendship and will rue it eventually, but in the main, from what we have seen and heard, after the first three hours of reposing gently in the bottom of a hide with a nice cool wind ruffling a rainy atmosphere, and the lads thinking of ham and eggs and nice hot coffee, the birds practically have to crawl down the gun barrels to commit hari kári, ducky wucky or whatever suicide is termed in duck language.

It's a grand, glorious feeling. You get out of a nice warm bed at four a.m., look out the window and see a nice gentle rain falling. Maybe there's ice in the water pail, but that doesn't stop the noble hunter. He climbs into his breeches, pulls on three or four pairs of socks, pats his hip pocket to see if his supply of hankies are there, buzzes his pal or pals on the phone and takes off.

He bends his head to the cool breeze, thinking perhaps of the lazy summer days, and gets in the car. The party takes off for the hide and that's all there is to it until they lie on the bottom of a wet boat, with twinges of old age, rheumatism or freshly donned woolen underwear reminding them of more comfortable surroundings.

Then all they do is lie and wait. When they get home, they don't wait. Perhaps there will be a flurry of wings. A few shots and if the visibility is good and the ducks aren't over ten feet away, there will be a duck dinner next day. Otherwise they stay there braving the elements, sometimes soaking wet, or nearly frozen, and come some luckless and duckless. Personally we'll take vanilla.

INVINCIBLE

Many anecdotes escaping from Holland reveal that this litte country, still under the German thumb, is keeping up its morale through a fine and ironic sense of humor. There is one about the tram-conductor counting his fares. "We've had you and you," he says guilelessly, "and (to the German) we shall get you later, and (passing along) you've got your ticket too?" For the furtive-eyed member of the Gestapo showing his card allowing him free travel, the tram-conductor says loudly: "Ah, Gestapo? Thank you." It is a warning for the entire tram to be on the alert.

TWO U. S. VESSELS LOST IN SOLOMONS

Small Loss of Life is Reported — Total Ship Loss Stands at 7 Craft

Washington, Oct. 1. (AP)—The total of United States vessels lost in Solomon Islands operations stood at seven today with announcement by the Navy Department of destruction of two naval transports with small loss of life.

The navy said the 8,378-ton U.S.S. George F. Elliott, formerly the liner City of Los Angeles, was destroyed August 8, the second day of the American invasion of the Solomons, when a Japanese torpedo plane crashed into the transport and set it afire.

The 1,060-ton U.S.S. Gregory, a converted destroyer, was sunk more recently by Japanese gunfire while operating off Guadalcanal Island, the Navy announced. No date was given.

The Elliott's skipper, Capt. Watson Bailey, 44, of Lynn, Mass., was reported safe and as the transports load of marines had been landed, casualties were few ,the Navy said.

Most of those aboard the Gregory also were saved, the Navy added, but the skipper, Lt. Cmdr. Harry Bauer, 36, of Chattanooga, Tenn., was reported missing in action. The vessel's normal complement was eight officers and 133 enlisted men.

The Gregory was launched at Quincy, Mass., in 1918 and was engaged in escort and patrol duty in the First Great War.

The Elliott was built at Alameda, Calif., in 1918, for passenger service and was acquired by the Navy in 1940.

ACHILLES AND TORTOISE

About 2300 years ago an old Greek named Zeno posed a brainteaser that floored all the philosophers of the time.

It is known as the paradox of Achilles and the tortoise.

Zeno became annoyed at all the nonsensical theories advanced by his fellow philosophers to explain space, time, motion and the like.

So he propounded a paradox to end all paradoxes—and incidentally a lot of philosophers.

This paradox had to do with an imaginary race between a tortoise and the legendary Greek athlete Achilles.

Like Aesop's hare, Achilles didn't win the race with the tortoise; but, on the other hand, the Greek runner didn't fall asleep by the wayside.

Said Zeno of Alea to the philosophers:

"Suppose Achilles can run ten times faster than the tortoise, and further suppose that in the race the athlete gives the tortoise a start of 100 yards. While Achilles runs the first 100 yards, the tortoise runs ten yards; while Achilles runs that ten yards, the tortoise runs one yard; while Achilles runs that one yard, the tortoise runs one-tenth of a yard, and so on and on indefinitely. Therefore Achilles will run indefinitely without ever overtaking the tortoise."

The Greek philosophers were stumped. They knew there was somethink screwy about the reasoning, but in those days there was no satisfactory system of logic or adequate mathematics to figure it out.

Some of the philosophers went crazy trying to demonstrate the fallacy of the conclusion of Zeno's paradox; others retired permanently from the philosophy business.

Any child knows instinctively that Achilles would win the race if he ran ten times faster than the tortoise. Yet it was not until the development of modern mathematics 2,000 years after the death of Zeno that it was possible to demonstrate that his famous paradox is a phoney.

Zeno resorted to the common trick of disguising a confusion of ideas with words.

Either out of mischief or ignorance, he confounded terms in his premise and in his conclusion. He completely confounded a finite distance infinitely divided with an infinite distance. The two ideas are not structurally compatible and do not supply a logical basis for showing what would happen in a race between Achilles and a tortoise.

A certain prominent cabinet minister found himself in a tight spot when a newspaperman, at a conference raised a question of press facilities which was troubling him.

"You certainly have cause for complaint there," said the minister, "and I'm glad you brought it to my attention."

The newspaperman, a bit puzzled, interjected: "But Mr. Minister, I brought it to your attention 10 days ago in a six-page letter."

"I haven't seen the letter yet," the minister replied.

"That's strange," said the newspaperman, "two days after I sent it I received an answer saying you were giving it your careful attention."

P.S.: To give the minister his due, the letter had been side-tracked before reaching him to an assistant who was investigating the complaint.

Sir Reginald Baker, who, in addition to being member of parliament for Spellthorne is an artillery major, tells this story about himself:

When the Germans were making a daily practice of shelling the coast, he frequently watched the shells fall, in company with his battery sergeant-major. One day a shell fell 100 yards behind them. The next dropped 200 yards in front.

They waited for the third, saw the flash from the French coast and counted the seconds. As the whine of the shell was heard, the sergeant-major turned to Sir Reginald and asked: "Is it to be a by-election or not, sir?"

In 1935, four prominent persons contested the Ross and Cromarty election. They were Malcolm MacDonald, Randolph Churchill, Hector McNeil and Dr. Russell Thomas—known throughout the constituency as the Dingwall Quads.

MacDonald was the victor but his three opponents sought new pastures, and, aided by the electoral truce, all reached Westminster. With them went Arthur Woodburn, who was McNeil's election agent.

The only man now in parliament is the successful candidate, MacDonald, who though still M. P. for Ross and Cromarty is in Canada as high commissioner.

Want Volunteers To Help Entertain District Airmen

Whether or not they know it, the personnel of the five R.C.A.F. air stations in the Belleville district is in for a treat in social entertainment this fall and winter. That is they will when plans fostered by Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. War Service heads and an interested group of local young women see realization.

The plan calls for a troupe of versatile local entertainers including dancers, singers, instrumentalists and comedians, to stage a series of weekly entertainments for the men in uniform at each of the district air stations. The whole gesture will be done gratis on the part of the entertainers with the result a heightening in morale of Canada's airmen in training.

Originators of the happy thought are Mr. Tom Hill of the local Y.M.C.A. War Services and Miss Jessie Martin of the Y.W.C.A. These two will be capably assisted by Miss Mary Forster, well-known local dancing teacher, and Miss Joan Maraskas.

Many volunteers will be needed, however, and considerable time will have to be spent in rehearsals so the potential troupe may stage a credible performance for the enjoyment of the airmen. Dancers and actors, together with persons of musical talent, will be needed. Any person with entertaining ability who is over 16 years of age will be welcomed to an audition at the Y.M.C.A. on Monday evening.

The training of a group of dancers will be in charge of Miss Forster and she has specifically stated that previous dancing experience is not necessary Miss Maraskas has volunteered to superintend the training of persons with acting ability and the plans are to develop comedy skits and other plays which would have a direct appeal to the boys in uniform. All those interested and with sufficient free time at their disposal to train two nights per week will be especially welcomed at Monday night's audition.

The gesture is one really worth while and one certain to go over in a big way with the boys in uniform. An appeal for volunteers has been issued by the sponsors and interested persons are asked to get in touch with Mr. Hill or Miss Martin at the Y.M.C.A. or telephone 2736.

Friction Between Rommel, Hitler Is Hinted

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Disclosure that the great Nazi desert fighter, Marshal Rommel, is in Berlin, not in Egypt at the head of his African Corps troops, tended to take the edge off Hitler's address to another German winter relief rally even before he spoke.

What Hitler said was chiefly of interest for comparison with what he said a year ago in the same setting and last spring. What Rommel's absence from his troops in Africa just at this time might mean could be much more significant than any conceivable Hitler utterance.

Rumor has been busy with Rommel's whereabouts ever since the British stand on the El Alamein-Qattara Depression line blunted the Axis threat to Alexandria and Cairo. His failure to turn the British flank led to reports of his withdrawal from Egypt because of ill health, a favorite Nazi camouflage for a military purge. Friction with the Nazi High Command over failure to give him adequate air support has been rumored.

None of these conjecturees is confirmed by Rommel's appearance at the Berlin relief rally. It is hardly possible, however, tthat he was in Berlin merely as window-dressing for that occasion. Even the special attention paid him by Hitler invites the suspicion that rumors of a rift with his generals in Africa as well as in Russia are current in Germany and required special treatment.

Although Rommel's recent failure to break through British defence lines to Alexandria may have dimmed his prestige at home somewhat, he still is a striking figure in German eyes.

Obviously, Rommel's dismissal from his African command as other Nazi generals have been ousted in Russia would stir uneasiness in Germany. Even widespread reports of friction between the desert warrior and his superiors, implying that his African corps was in grave peril due to lack of air power or other forces which could not be spared from Russia, would engender increasing public doubt as to the actual war trends.

Whatever the true explanation of Rommel's visit to Berlin, it is likely to prove of greater interest to London and Washington military staffs than anything Hitler had to say. Yet this Hitler winter relief plea to his people was in such striking contrast to his addresses of a year ago and of five months ago that it deserves attention.

For one thing, it appears to have changed entirely the purpose of his Russian campaign as announced last spring. Then it was to destroy the Russian Army, the same army he had told Germans months before was already destroyed. In October, 1941, Hitler said Russia was broken and would never rise again. This time he pictured his objective for the next twelve months as "to hold what we have," presumably in Russia.

Hitler's disappointment over Stalingrad was obvious. He had hoped to announce the fall of that important point for a winter holding line. but instead he could only promise its capture, as he promised to meet any United Nation attack anywhere and repay Britain for British bombing of the Reich.

Russian armies having escaped his clutch in the field, Hitler now explained the terrible price he is paying in German and Axis satellite blood for Stalingrad by depicting it as a "key position" to bolster the chief objective of his 1942 campaign, "disruption of traffic between central and southern Russia."

The implication is that he told his people he was preparing to halt on his present front in Russia for the winter once Stalingrad was taken.

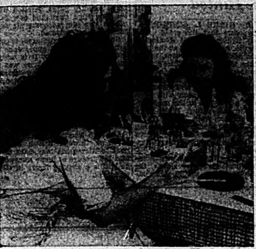
Keeping Away the Wrinkles



Jean Bennett uses a good cleansing cream to remove make-up

By HELEN FOLLETT

THE SKIN of a healthy young woman is smooth because the fibres and underlying tissues are firm and resilient. They are cushions upon which the epidermal covering rests. If, at the age of thirty or soon after, fine lines appear, it is evident that these supports are impaired. Something is wrong with the physical system. The body is not properly nourished, the victim of crinkles is not getting enough sleep; or she is under emotional stress and strain.

If a women has a sound nervous system, good health generally, has so organized her life that she has the proper proportion of work and play, she should not have a line in her face before she reaches old age. In years to come we will pay more attention to physical education, have fewer beauty sorrows.

At the first sign of softening tissues, health rules must be obeyed. Local treatment is helpful. After the face is washed at bedtime with soap and water, rinsed and dried, a heavy massage cream should be applied. Depleted fibres lap up the fragrant oils, are revived by them. They are strengthened by the massage necessary for the cosmetics application. Unless the cream is fairly firm the fingers will slip, and the treatment will not be effective.

Once a week an egg facial is in order. Beat the white of an egg till it is stiff enough to handle. Spread it on a clean skin surface, working upward from the collar bones. Let the mask remain on for twenty minutes. The flesh will feel tight and drawn: the egg white is acting as an astringent. Remove with tepid water dry gently. Then use massage cream.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

"Adults Only"

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

You recently advised me, through your column, about giving a Sunday evening buffet supper, and I have found your advice most helpful. One of my questions was about the wisdom of having this party a strictly adult gathering, and I thoroughly agree with your advice that it should be.

However, my problem now is how to inform my guests that the children are not invited. Our home is rather small to accommodate so many grown-ups as we wish to invite, and their children as well. So if the children are not to be included in the invitation, either written or given over the telephone, and still the question of the children should arise, just what would you advise me to stay? My husband and I are very anxious, of course, to do nothing to hurt the feeling of our guests by insinuating that there children are not wanted.

I really believe that your guests will take for granted that a Sunday evening buffet party would be for grown-ups only. However, this point of view might very well depend entirely on the custom of your friends. Make it clear in your invitations (perhaps a note might be better for this) that you are inviting only adults. If you wish to give a reason, you might give the completely adequate one you give me.

Don't hold the thought that you are not "welcoming" the children but only that you are not welcoming them to a party where they do not reasonably belong.

Informal Evening Party At Fashionable Hotel

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am going to a party soon, to be held in one of the fashionable hotels. The party is to be in the evening, but it is informal. What type of dress and hat should I wear? Is it really necessary for me to wear a hat? It is to be a very young crowd, mostly between 17 and 18, and we are all going with escorts.

Should I wear a corsage? I don't want to seem too formal.

Nan

A street-length afternoon dress would, I am sure, be what you would be expected to wear. It isn't really necessary for you to wear a hat but a pert hat would certainly give you a better-dressed look.

Wearing a corsage won't make you "seem too formal", if it's small and simple. (Perhaps your beau will send you one!)

COURTESY TIP

The well-groomed envelope has no abbreviations except those really necessary . . such as Mr. and Mrs. It is an "untidy" habit to abbreviate Street, Avenue, Road, and so forth. And it's both untidy and unwise to abbreviate the names of cities and states. The post office attendants are too busy these days to take time to figure out what your abbreviations mean. A minute more may save your letter from the Dead Letter Office!

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Dan Cupid Uses Machine Guns on Washington's Government Girls

Haven't we been doing a good deal of unnecessary sobbing about the loneliness and heartaches of the out-of-town girls who comes to Washington to work for the Government?

Unless she is utterly bereft of those endowments inherited from Mother Eve, the Government girl in Washington seems to have given a pretty good account of herself.

She has been siren enough to get her man, whether she hailed from the South with that intriguing drawl for which she is famous—in novels and the stage, at least—or whether she had the Boston broad "A"; or the West's resounding enunciation, or that pleasantly Canadian flavor that comes from states bordering the Dominion.

No matter from when she came or why, the War Worker has sent the marriage license boom up 62 per cent more in Washington, D.C., than it was this time last year. To what degree is the war the world is waging abccountable for this tremendous increase in the taking out of marriage licenses?

War has always been regarded as the strongest of love philters, even though in this war there is distinctly less color and heart pulsing appeal than in World War No. 1. Then we had the "tramp, tramp" of marching feet, flags flying, bands playing, picturesque uniforms of foreign soldiers—some of those now fighting against us.

We're taking this war more soberly. Highlights are lacking, in spite of which there is the old tug at the heart-strings in what might be a last forewell. So they're taking their chances, these young workers, with the men who are going overseas.

Nor is Washington an exception in the "O, Promise Me" saga with its questions and answers. That marriages licenses issued in New York City are more than likely to reach the 100,000 mark for the first year of the war is indicated by the continued rush to the office of City Clerk H. Warren Hubbard.

New Jersey is keeping right in step with the wedding march. The first six months of 1942 totalled 3,943 more than during the same period a year ago, according to Vital Statistics.

HEALTH CHATS

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

Substance From Adrenal Gland Relieves Asthma Spasm

Important structures called glands are found in many vital parts of the body. One of these, the adrenel gland is located just above the kidneys.

From one part of this gland a substance known as epinephrine is obtained, and doctors have found that this substance is of great value in the treatment of many disorders. Asthma, for example. It appears that epinephrine stops the spasm of the bronchi or small tubes of the lungs which are responsible for attacks of asthma. Almost instantly, when the spasm is relaxed, normal breathing is possible.

The relief obtained by giving the injection of epinephrine often continues even after the effect of the drug has passed off. In some cases however, the spasm returns and the injection of epinephrine has to be repeated. Unfortunately, with continued injections the body gets used to the drug so that larger doses must be given to get results. Epinephrine, given in the form of a nasal spray or a spray into the mouth, may also be used three or more times a day as a preventive for attacks of asthma. Care must be taken in using the epinephrine in patients with asthma who have high blood pressure or heart disease, since it may throw an additional strain on the heart.

Epinephrine also has a valuable effect in other conditions due to allergy or sensitivity, such as hay fever and hives. The epinephrine may be injected under the skin to quickly relieve an attack of hives. When used as a spray into the nose, it helps to lessen the symptoms of hay fever.

Epinephrine is a valuable heart stimulant. It speeds up the heart rate and produces a rise in blood pressure. Injections of epinephrine have been used in treating shock and low blood pressure. However, in the latter disturbance the effect of the epinephrine wears off so quickly that it has not a great deal of value.

Another substance made from the adrenal glands comes from the part of the gland known as the cortex. This is called corticosteron. This substance is used in treatment of a disorder known as Addison's disease, in which there is muscular weakness, fatigue, low blood pressure and a brownish discoloration of the skin.

In addition to treatment with the glandular extract, patients with Addison's disease are also given large amounts of salt daily. The glandular extract is given by injection into a muscle once or twice a week as required to eliminate the symptoms. The extract from the cortex of the gland is also used in treating shock or collapse, and has been found quite helpful.

Must Register Motor Convictions On Driving Permit

When convictions for highway traffic infractions are registered in local courts in the future, such convictions must be immediately registered and endorsed upon the convicted person's driving licence, police court officials warned here today. The announcement was made during today's county police court after Paul Szymanski, Toronto motorist, had been convicted of two highway traffic infractions despite the fact the accused man failed to respond to his name when called before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd.

Szymanski was halted by Motorcycle Patrolman W. G. Milton driving a truck west of Belleville recently. "He was travelling at 51 miles per hour and after I stopped him he could not produce a 1942 chauffeur's licence," testified Constable Milton after he had called the accused man's name in court without response. His Worship fined Szymanski $10.00 and costs on the failure to produce count and $15.00 for speeding under the War Measures Act.

It was following the above convictions that Magistrate Lloyd and Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., publicly warned that in the future all convictions must be registered and endorsed by the court upon the convicted persons' licences.

Other traffic cases heard included a conviction of speeding over a railway crossing registered against Jas. Johnson, Ottawa, with a fine of $5.00 and costs being paid Joseph Chartrand contributed $10.00 and costs after he admitted failure to produce a driver's licence for the current year, and a careless driving charge, preferred against Rennie MacLarney was laid over when the court learned police had been unable to locate the accused man. W. A. Bynom, Dundas, Ont., paid $17.50 including costs, after pleading guilty previous to the opening of the proceedings.

Finley Elmy, Deseronto, and W. A. Reeves, Belleville, both appeared on charges of careless driving. The charge was preferred by Provincial Police following a side-swiping motor accident east of Belleville on Sept. 19 when motor cars driven by the accused persons were involved in an accident. Crown Attorney Donnan suggested both charges be dismissed as the matter, he said, was purely a civil one and the parties concerned, including Charles A. Payne, K.C., counsel for Elmy, readily agreed. "If all are agreed to settle this matter in a civil court I see no reason why I shouldn't make it unanimous," commented Magistrate Lloyd as he dismissed the counts.

This ship was turned out in Portland, Ore., from keel to delivery in 13½ days—a new record—the more you study it, the more miraculous seems the feat of Henry J. Kaiser. It was actually built from keel to launching in 10 days. Workmen were still putting the finishing touches on the vessel during experimental runs, after launching. It is the victory ship, Joseph T. Neal. Every rope, spar and chain is in its proper place. Delivery was made after forced draft over a measured mile. The ship was painted after it had gotten under way.

FIRE VANQUISHED ON THIS TANKER

Usually when a tanker is burning as fiercely as this, it must be abandoned. This spectacular aerial photograph was taken of a U.S. tanker after it was torpedoed by an Axis submarine. Despite the raging fire the crew members were able to bring the flames under control and the tanker was towed to port by a U.S. navy ship. It is now in an east coast shipyard being repaired.

Naval Control Backs Up Merchantmen Who Deliver The Goods Overseas

By Lieut. William Sclater, R.C.N.V.R.

An Eastern Canadian Port—Since the war began the lot of the merchant seafarer has been considerably improved. Do not misunderstand that statement. It does not mean that the danger to ships of the United Nations has lessened, but that many improvements have been and are being undertaken.

Ships are better armed, better convoyed and better protected now than they were at the beginning and the welfare of the merchant seaman is a factor of growing importance and consideration. Most seafarers will readily grant that. It is a natural development, for it is upon the ships of the Merchant Navy that the destiny of the United Nations rests, and the men who sail the ships are heroes of the battle at sea.

Covers Big Territory

This is a story of Naval Control. It is not the sort of story you would expect to hear about the Navy. To a navyman or to a merchant navyman they spell something that covers a lot of territory. Among a host of other things, Naval Control officers and ratings are the guides, the mentors and the trouble-shooters of the ships and men of the merchant fleets. It is they who keep the ships manned and moving and it is they who succour the survivors of unlucky ones, who see they are warm and comfortable, that any man needing medical attention is ambulanced immediately to hospital and that he has an ample supply of "smokes" with him.

These are part of their ordinary duties. I have seen an officer who quelled an incipient mutiny at four in the afternoon with a doubled fist, carry in his arms an injured survivor from a torpedoed ship at ten o'clock the same night with a cheery smile.

Naval Control it is called. It doesn't use force . . . It doesn't have to. The Merchant Navy knows the uniform that protects it along the sealanes. They know it is worn by men who will give their lives gladly, in the same service and they honor it. They know, too that its decisions are final and effective and they also know that they will be fair and impartial.

Three Years of Strain

But war did not start yesterday. Some of the captains who have steered their courses across the world's waters since the autumn of '39, with minds and muscles tensed through dangerous days and doubtful nights, show signs of strain. The Navy knows how it is, for it is a familiar problem with them and they know how to handle it.

A few days ago a big merchant liner made this port with "captain trouble" aboard. Around him as he came to anchor were ships of a dozen countries, for this is one of the great seaports where the Atlantic convoys gather. Off to him in a harbor craft sped a lieutenant of the Naval Control Service.

Listens to Grievances

He held a conference aboard with the captain and his officers and he listened patiently to their grievances. The captain was bound he would not take his ship out with the bunch of grumbling, back-biting officers he had aboard. And the officers were equally bound they would sail no longer with such a cantankerous cross-grained captain.

Looking them over, the Naval Control Officers saw that they were a well-trained, intelligent and capable group of men. He also found out that they had sailed together for a long time.

However, his first move had been to draw out their grievances and in this he succeeded. When a man gets the things that are bothering him off his chest he inevitably feels much better. When a great and friendly seaport is close at hand, the way the other fellow used his fork ceases to irritate him.

After the conference the Naval Control officer had a session with the captain alone. This is a part of the story that should really be off the record for sometimes a Naval Control officer becomes a very human sort of being and, in the interests of the service, steps out of his uniform. This was one such occasion. The facts never appeared in the record.

At the start of their private session the captain was silent. His hands gripped the arms of the chair so tightly that you could see the bones through the skin on his knuckles. The Naval Control officer reminded him of his early associations with the ship and the crew, of the days when it had been a happy and competent ship's crew. He pointed out how unusual conditions had developed the bickering. The men, he said, were tired and short-tempered in face of the monotony of danger. The captain admitted these things. Something had to be done about it before the ship sailed, the captain agreed, for the ship and her cargo were vital.

"Captain, have you ever tried God?" asked the Control officer. "Not once but many times in my own life I've been faced with situations about which I felt quite hopeless. It was a hard thing for me to do at first but when these times come I have learned to ask God for succour. He has given me grace and the faith to go on".

The captain nodded his head. "It's a poor seaman who doesn't have some faith in God", he said. He relaxed and started to talk.

Captain Sees Light

The Naval Control officer showed him a picture of his wife and children and told him what they meant to him and the captain showed the Naval Control officer pictures of his wife and children. The captain began to look at his officers in a different light.

The ship sailed next day, with the same captain and the same crew. From a speeding harbor craft on the way to another incoming ship a Naval Control watched her go. Another cargo was on the way with munitions for Britain's fighting men and food for the women and children behind the lines.

NAVAL CONTROL MEN SWAP NEWS WITH FREIGHTER SAILORS

No Medicine Ever Helped Me Like Syntona Did, He Says

"A few weeks ago I was feeling so bad I didn't see how I could keep on with my work, but I'm certainly feeling a whole lot different since taking a few bottles of Syntona," said Mr. Jacob R. Lilek, 301½ John Street North, Hamilton, Ontario, recently.

"For the past 7 or 8 months my stomach had been all upset. I suffered with gas pains and a sick nauseated feeling after every meal. I had a nagging pain across my back and pains all through my arms, limbs and joints. They would get awful stiff and sore. My nerves were bad, I wasn't able to get a sound sleep and I felt tired and miserable all the time.

"I tried about everything I had heard of, but there wasn't anything that did me any good until I started taking Syntona. After the very first few days I knew this medicine was going to be good for me. My food began digesting better and I felt more like eating. The gas, nausea and distressed feeling cleared up. So, I kept on taking it and now I have a real appetite. The aches and pains have gone away, my nerves are relaxed and I get sound, restful sleep. I am now able to work long shifts without getting all tired out like I used to and I certainly recommend Syntona to any one feeling as I did."

MR. JACOB R. LILEK

Syntona is made from 12 of Nature's Finest Herbs and Roots. It acts on stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels. Aids in the elimination of excess acids and waste matter from the system and promotes better assimilation of food for increased strength and energy.

Cupful of Beverage Limit in Restaurants

To settle an argument which arose over the quantity of tea or coffee which a restaurant might legally serve to its patrons, a merchant in an Eastern Ontario village drove 20 miles to the nearest Ration Office of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board a few days ago in order to obtain the correct answer.

The argument was between the restauranteur and the merchant, one of his customers. The latter held that the restauranteur should serve him a pot of tea or coffee and not merely a cup of either whereas the restauranteur, who knew his ration regulations, declared that they forbade him serving tea or coffee by the pot unless the pot held no more than a cupful of beverage.

The ration officer was ready with the correct interpretation of the regulations when the merchant arrived. He upheld the contention of the restaurant-keeper. The latter, he said, could serve no more than one cupful of tea or coffee at the one sitting. He could serve it in a pot or in a cup, but it could not legally exceed one cupful, and the legal cup holds eight ounces of fluid. To permit caterers to serve tea or coffee by the pot, regardless of its size, would defeat the purpose of the regulations, which is to restrict the consumption of tea and coffee so that stocks may be conserved and equitably distributed and to relieve the strain upon shipping.

Defeated in his argument but satisfied that there is good reason for the stipulation that public servings of tea and coffee shall be restricted to the cupful, the merchant left for home to bury the hatchet with his friend, the restaurant-keeper.

Value to the Community of Mental Hygiene Clinics

A few years ago the statement was made that at the present rate of increase in the number of mental cases in all communities, within fifty years it would mean that at least one half the population would require mental care. Naturally health departments everywhere are trying to prevent this condition by various means.

Today mental institutions by regular and special forms of treatment by the help of visiting or resident specialists — throat, teeth, heart, lungs, and others — are able to send back to home and business about six in every ten patients admitted.

Where the greatest progress is being made, however, is the recognition of the "early" symptoms and signs of mental ailments by the family and general physician, and the sending of these early cases to a mental or psychiatric clinic.

If the average tax payer stopped to think of what it costs to keep just one patient in a mental institution, he would gladly pay a few cents extra yearly to prevent it.

Dr. Victor H. Vogel of the United States Health Service, as recorded by Science Service states:

> "It would not cost taxpayers a cent if their local health services added Mental Hygiene Clinics to their child health clinics and other services. Such clinics would prevent mental breakdowns and so reduce the number of patients cared for in mental hospitals. Mental illness is the most expensive kind because of its long duration. If only three people a year are saved from becoming public charges in a mental institution, that means enough money saved to support a Mental Hygiene Clinic for an entire year."

The saving of money is but the least of the benefits of a mental clinic. It cannot be compared with the saving of human life and happiness.

Mental hygiene clinics help people whose lives are threatened by other dangers too. A divorce can sometimes be prevented, a home kept intact, a suicide prevented, a nervous or neurotic patient saved from being an invalid for life. That is a gain to the whole community.

As it is known that mental illness makes up one half of all illness and disability, it can readily be seen what it means to a community to have a full time mental hygiene department in each state or province health department.

C.N.R. PRESIDENT SAYS RAILWAYS HAVE HUGE JOB

Traffic Double Peak Movement of Last War and 50% Higher Than '29

WARNS ABOUT TRAVEL

Toronto, Oct. 1—(CP)— R. C. Vaughan, chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways, today told a Toronto club (Empire) that Canada's railways have a "hugh job to do," and must be in a position to rush men and supplies to airfields and defence areas "at any hour of the 24."

"The extent of the demands made upon the railways, he said, "may be gauged by the fact that last year the Canadian National System moved more than 65,000,000 tons of munitions of war and other products of industry and agriculture, and this year the volume of traffic shows a further substantial increase.

"Each day we are handling more than 100,00 cars through our Canadian National terminals, and frequently a single terminal receives and despatches as many as 55,500 cars in 24 hours.

Traffic is now double that of the peak movement of the last year, and 50 per cent higher than during those so-called golden years of 1928-29."

Mr. Vaughan said the railways have been able to handle the business offering up to the present time, and, asuming they are able to obtain materials required for operation and maintenance, "face the future demands confident we will give a good account of ourselves."

Warns Against Unnecessary Travel

He warned Canadian to consider carefully the advice of Acting Minister of Transport C. D. Howe upon the necessity of curtailing unnecessary travel.

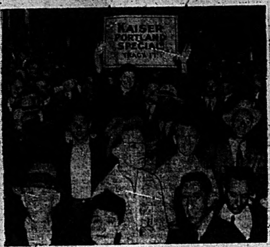
The Canadian National Railways, he pointed out, had rehabilitated cars and locomotives for war traffic and built new equipment, some of it specially designed to meet wartime requirements. This equipment included special hospital cars to serve as medical centres of trains carrying casualties; commissary kitchen cars for troop trains; "long-table" diners for soldiers, coffee shops on wheels, new types of coaches for industrial trains, with seating capacity of 122 persons, and trains of a special type for the transportation of enemy prisoners of war.

10,000 Employees in Armed Services

Mr. Vaughan said Ontario, which has placed resources of "inestimable value" at the disposal of the United Nations, has 10,500 miles of steam railways, of which the C.N.R. operates more than 5,600 miles, or 54 per cent of the total.

More than 10,000 C.N.R. employees are in the armed forces and merchant marine, and the railroad has been actively engaged in war work, engaging in the formation and operation of numerous government departments, manufacturing guns, gun carriages and secret devices in its shops and playing a "vital part" in Canada's war effort through operations of the Canadian National Steamships, which have provided an "important high-seas link for the movement of supplies to the fighting forces, unfortunately not without losses."

OFF TO KAISER'S SHIPYARDS



The first special train with 600 men as it left the Lackawanna depot at Hoboken, N.J., for Henry J. Kaiser's mass production shipyards at Portland Ore. The hiring has been officially suspended by the U.S. employment service for at least a week until Kaiser classifies 10,200 applicants. The workers have been told to bring as little baggage as possible and leave their families at home "for the present." Here we see a group of the workers just before they left for Portland.

Jury Recommends Closer Supervision Of Pleasure Craft

Midland, Ont., Oct. 1 — (CP) — A recommendation that closer supervision and inspection be given pleasure craft by the proper department of the Dominion Government was made here late yesterday by a coroner's jury investigating the death of Bert Corbeau of Midland and 24 other men who drowned Sept. 21 when the motor launch Wa-Wi-Net sank suddenly in Georgian Bay.

At the end of the hearing, Dr. Smirle Lawson, supervising coroner for Ontario, suggested a fund be started for some 100 children left fatherless by the disaster. He made a contribution to start the fund and jurymen and other officials gave money. Mayor Oliver H. Smith of Midland was named chairman of the fund committee.

A suggestion that special recognition be made of the acts of heroism of many of the survivors was made by the jury, which singled out Henry Deschamps and Henry Lavigne, both of Midland, for special mention.

Deschamps, who leaped in the water when a crowded lifeboat started to sink, told the jury he believed the Wa-Wi-Net was, topheavy "and for that reason I didn't like her."

Witnesses told the jury the launch had not undergone a government inspection and it was possible for a boat to use the waters of the bay without having been inspected. There were no lifebelts on board, although there were a number of kapok cushions as well as two oar-equipped boats in tow.

The jurymen found that Bert Corbeau, former National Hockey League star, came to his death by drowning. He was owner and wheelsman of the boat.

Blackout Effective Within Short Time

OTTAWA, Oct. 1 — (CP) — Blackout of a large section of the St. Lawrence south shore area, ordered Wednesday to minimize danger of attacks on shipping by enemy submarines, is expected in official quarters here to be effective within a short time.

The order is to be put into effect "immediately" but a government spokesman said last night it would probably take a few days to acquaint all the people in the district affected.

The area to be blacked out—from the town of Isle Verte, 40 miles upriver from Rimouski, Que., down through the Gaspe Peninsular coastline and around the Bay Chaleur shore as far as Douglastown, is sparsely settled.

The spokesman said officials had been sent down to the district to advise people living there of the order.

RUSSIANS RETAKE

Another height was seized in the Russian relief offensive northwest of Stalingrad, where several Axis divisions were reported massing in support of the drive already estimated to be employing as many as 500,000 of Hitler's troops.

Captured railways helped the Germans in the transport of men and supplies. Red Star said more than 1,000 planes were engaged in the effort to conquer Stalingrad, now in its 38th day of siege.

Secretary A. Chuianov of Stalingrad's Communist Party committee reported in a dispatch to Moscow that Stalin's words had played a definite role in the stubborn defence.

The newspaper Pravda said thousands of civilians were aiding the Red army troops in street battles. Dozens of tanks and other implements of war were reported assembled in bomb-damaged factories and sent into the fray.

Continue at Jobs

Volga River sailors and dock workers continued at their jobs, moving troops and supplies despite aerial raids.

It announced one reverse elsewhere along the long front. The invaders wedged into Soviet positions in one sector of the western Caucasian battle zone southeast of Novorossisk.

Stalingrad mortar gunners were credited with having disabled or fired 13 tanks, destroyed a six-barrelled mortar and wiped out 500 Germans.

A 14-man detachment was cited for a day's fighting during which the communique said "they repulsed a number of enemy attacks, wiping out 200 Germans and destroying two tanks."

Red army troops were said to have accounted for three more tanks and killed perhaps 7550 Germans in overnight fighting northwest of Stalingrad.

At least 15,000 Germans have been killed at Stalingrad in the last week of the siege, the Moscow radio said.

"The situation remains serious," it added, "but the city's defenders are determined to fight to the last drop of blood for every house and for every yard of the streets."

Repel All Attacks

The Rusian army of the central Caucasus, standing guard in the Mozdok region before approaches to the Grozny oil fields and strategic mountain passes, was officially declared to be "repelling all enemy attacks and inflicting heavy losses."

"Twenty-six German tanks were crippled or burned and about 1,500 Hitlerite officers and men were wiped out in two days' operations on this sector," the midnight communique said.

Casualties of a Rumanian mountain infantry division routed in the western Caucasus southeast of Novorossisk were estimated at 8,000 and one of its platoons was reported to have "come over to the side of the Red army," switching allegiance.

(A Berlin radio broadcast—speaking of an action not touched upon by the Russian midnight communique—said strong Red army forces were attacking incessantly on the Lake Ilmen front south of Leningrad and one Nazi battalion had to face 50 assaults in a day.)

The Soviet Information Bureau said Russian war ships had sunk a 10,000-ton Axis transport in their Baltic Sea campaign.

Earl McCready Disqualified But Not Before He Gave Katan, Referee and Others Going Over

A GOOD SHOW

Things came to a pretty pass again last night at the Hume Arena when the peoples' choice, the popular Earl McCready litterally went berserk to hurl officials, wrestlers and even patrons from the Arena ring as bedlam broke loose, when McCready refused further to accept the illegal attacks of his opponent in the British Empire eliminations, "Calgary John" Katan. McCready's supporters, which numbered fully a thousand of the 1,200 on hand for the season's best all-around show, were still behind their favourite despite the fact he punched Referee Al Dunlop so pugnaciously the Commission Referee was hurled bodily from the ring and rendered hors de combat on the Arena floor, gazing longingly at the ceiling and having no further part of Messrs. Katan and McCready's personal differences. Later in his dressing room Referee Dunlop declared, that no wrestler could attack him in the manner in which McCready manhandled last night's official and, still suffering from the results of McCready's well-directed fists, Dunlop announced McCready had been disqualified and Katan declared winner.

"It's robbery. I'll take the matter to the Wrestling Commission. I was the last man in the ring and you can't give the decision to anyone else," screamed McCready as it took the efforts of preliminary-bouters to save Dunlop from a second attack by McCready. Still objecting he had been the victim of circumstances and recipient of what's generally termed "the business", McCready left the local sports palace threatening revenge and demanding justice.

Katan Very Rough

The trouble came about after Katan had actually strangled McCready on several occasions, gouged his eyes and applied every possible illegal attack in and out of the little blue book. In the early stages Katan even tried to chew Earl's shoe off, but found the leather a rather tough morsel. When Katan found it difficult to floor his opponent he turned pugnacious attentions upon Referee Dunlop with the patrons enjoying every move. Katan finally gained a strangle hold on McCready, that saw Earl's tongue stick out far enough to see his tonsils and in a flash Katan switched to a headlock and won the first fall with a reverse body press off the ropes after 31 minutes of high class hauling and bending of muscles.

The patrons weren't even comfortably settled in their seats for the second round before McCready clamped on a rapid-fire flying scissors and flattened Katan with a reverse body slam — just like that — and all was even on the night's go.

Came the fun, well it was fun for some of the spectators, who wisely remained at a safe distance. Katan hurled McCready into Referee Dunlop's fat tummy and the latter howled "ouch", or words to that effect. Katan tried another strangling act and that was the spark that set off the ring dynamite. "Big Earl" just wasn't for taking any more roughness and let fly a perfectly timed right cross that knocked Dunlop bodily from the ring and in no state to continue his (?) official duties.

Gives Katan the Works

Then McCready turned his attentions upon Katan and it was pitiful what he did to the "Calgary eye-opener", because when the dust of battle had settled, McCready had hurled Katan, friendly patrons who entered the ring jubilantly to embrace Earl and preliminary wrestlers, who came to assist in restoring order, into all corners of the ring and without concern or regard. Alone in the ring and with bedlam reigning supreme outside, McCready considered himself champion and conqueror of all he surveyed, but he didn't survey Dunlop in the latter's dressing room until after he had been disqualified. Thus ended another hectic Katan-McCready ring struggle and the bulk of the patrons aren't satisfied yet.

Referee Loses Shirt

It was really a bad night on referees at the local sports palace last night because in the preliminaries Referee Eddie Sobel was the victim of attacks, the results of which saw his shirt torn completely from his back. Eddie stood his ground and finished his duties in his skin. Incidentally Promoter Tunney presented two of the best preliminaries of the season that introduced four new faces. In the curtain-raiser Ivan Kalminoff, the mad Russian, battled George Burns, of the Nebraska Burns, to a 30-minute draw in a scrap that saw a goodly number of wrestling holds exemplified. Then in the semi-final another member of the Burns family, 234-pound Jake by name, proved too strong for the Flying Frenchman, Walter Siroris, and won following a series of successive head scissors and a press in 25 minutes. However, here again Referee Sobel was the victim of some questionable attacks, but managed to weather the storm and went home to bed all in one piece, but it was no thanks to any of the boys in the prelims. Now the grapplers will be back at the Hume Arena again next Wednesday with more tricks of the trade and some new faces, that are bound to please.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.
(Associated Press Sport Writer.)

New York, Oct. 1 (AP)—On the way out to St. Louis some of the boys were discussing the Cardinals' speed and Joe McCarthy asked: "What are they, a bunch of Ty Cobbs on motorcycles?"..After the ninth inning yesterday, he probably figured the answer was "yes." ...At that, we can't think of a much easier job than trying to second-guess Joe on the World Series ...He doesn't leave anything for you to do...He picked Rufus the Red Ruffing to start yesterday instead of Bonham or some other young pitcher with a good record and for eight innings nobody could have done any better...If it hadn't been for the ninth, old Rufus might have done better than Herb Pennock and Waite Hoyt in the 1926 and 1928 World Series openers against the Cards. They both tossed three-hitters.

World Series Shoves Hitler Off Front Page

Washington, Oct. 1 —(AP)— Ignoring Pancho Villa's astute precedent of 25 years ago, Adolf Hitler, clean-up man on the Axis ball club, walked up to the American publicity plate and popped out yesterday.

Washington front pages showed that on the nation's news diamond, Der Fuehrer's sportpalast speech played second fiddle to a hunk of hot horsehide out in St. Louis.

In the capital, where newspapers headlined the victory of the New York Yankees over the St. Louis Cardinals in the first World Series game, Hitler's harangue hardly raised an eyebrow.

He was the headline writer's forgotten man, buried down with the smaller type.

Now, had Der Fuehrer followed Villa's example, he might have fared better. The Mexican insurrectionist was planning an attack on the town of Ojinaga in early October of 1917 when Norman Walker of the Associated Press appeared on the scene.

Publicity-conscious Pancho asked Walker for his professional advice, and the straight-faced scribe told him to wait until the World Series was over if he wanted to make the U. S. front pages.

Pancho promptly postponed the attack.

When the series was over, he captured Ojinaga, and made the front pages.

Ruffing, On Brink of Baseball Immortality, Knocked Out But Yankees Win First One 7-4

Cardinals Stage Rally in Ninth to Score Four Runs but Chandler Puts Out Fire

DRAMATIC CONTEST

By GAYLE TALBOT
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

St. Louis, Oct. 1 —(AP)— The picture of lion-hearted Red Ruffing, on the brink of World Series immortality, suddenly going to pieces and being pounded from the hill under the four-run assault by the ever-fighting Cardinals still was fresh in the minds of every man, woman and child who watched yesterday's thriller as the Yankees and the Cards prepared to clash in the second game at Sportsman's Park today.

It was a game, that first one, that will be remembered a long time. Those who saw it probably will forget the final score in time —7-4 for the Yankees—but they will remember how the 38-year-old Ruffing, within one out of a two-hit World Series shutout, had his dream shattered like a thunderclap from the blue.

Some thought the ninth inning deserved to rank in dramatic quality with the storied seventh frame of the final series game in 1926, when old Pete Alexander struck out Tony Lazzeri, and with another wild inning in the '29 classic, when the Athletics scored 10 runs to overcome an eight-run Chicago Cubs' lead.

Rally Failed to Win

An important difference was, of course, that the rally failed to win yesterday's game for the Cards. Ruffing, too, received credit for his seventh World Series victory, a record unmatched by any pitcher, in spite of his getting his ears knocked down at the finish.

But that blazing rally of the Red Birds might have an important bearing on the remainder of the series.

As the Cards went out behind their great youngster, Johnny Beazley, to try to trim the Yanks today and carry the series all-square into New York, they at least knew that Yankee pitching could be hit. Having blasted Ruffing, they probably stood in much less awe of Ernie Bonham, the Yankees' big forkballer, than they would have if Ruffing had humiliated them right to the end.

Looked Painfully Weak

The youngsters really looked painfully weak while Ruffing mowed them down for the first seven and two-thirds innings. They were over-anxious and obviously nervous, a perfect set-up for a crafty old stager like Rufus the Red, whose fast ball isn't what it used to be. Ruffing's first pitch to Stan Musial in the opening inning, with two Redbirds perched on base as a result of walks, was a slow ball on which Musial nearly broke his back.

Up to the ninth inning, Captain Terry Moore was the only Cardinal who even looked like he might get a safety off the former coal miner. Twice he had sent Yankee outfielders chasing far back to pull down his drives before he came up with two down in the eighth inning and pumped a clean single into right, the first hit off Red the tormentor.

In pitching eight and two-thirds innings of hitless ball, Ruffing, at least, smashed the previous World Series record of eight and one-thirds frames, held jointly by Herb Pennock and Monte Pearson, who were, of course, pitching for the Yankees when they did it.

Fans Not Downhearted

St. Louis players and fans were surprisingly light-hearted about losing the opener. The town has a lot of solid confidence in the scrapping club that set such a searing pace to overhaul Brooklyn and win the National League flag. Roy Stockton of the Post-Dispatch said last night: "They won't feel natural until they've lost the first two games."

Willingness, coupled with some jittery support, was what proved the undoing of Mort Cooper, the Cards' ace pitcher, yesterday. He had a world of stuff, but walks kept him in almost constant hot water up to the time he was removed in favor of Harry Gumbert with two out and five runs across in the eighth inning.

In the last 63 innings he pitched in the National League race, Cooper issued just three walks. He granted the Yankees the same number in the first four innings. As a result, they had men on base in every inning except the seventh.

The first two Yankee runs in the fourth and fifth innings were well earned Buddy Hassett doubled Joe DiMaggio home with the first one and Roy Cullenbine's two-bagger scored Red Rolfe with the second. A third also was honestly come-by in the eighth on solid knocks by DiMaggio. Bill Dickey and Hassett, but the last four—the winners, as it turned out—were tainted.

Slaughter Makes Bad Error

Country Slaughter, Card right-fielder, let a couple across in the eighth when he dropped a smash into right-centre by Ruffing. It was an extremely hard chance, incidentally, and might have been ruled a hit by a more lenient scorer. Left Max Lanier, who hurled the last inning for the Cards, let in the fnal two Yankee scores with a pair of errors that were real beauties.

Many of the nearly 35,000 spectators had left the park when the Cards staged their amazing outburst in the ninth. They missed something that would have renewed their faith in their team. Starting with Walker Cooper's single that Red Rolfe tagged at third base but couldn't handle cleanly, the Red Birds slugged six hits, including a triple into the right-field corner by Shortstop "Slats" Marion.

The bases still were loaded, the tying run on first, when Musial bounced to Hassett at first for the out that ended the game. Spud Chandler, figured as the probable Yankee starting pitcher in the third game at Yankee Stadium Saturday, finally had retired the side.

The betting commissioners, to whom sentiment is only a three-syllable word, were quite frank in thinking that the Yanks, with Bonham breaking his forkball and fast one past the Cards, had the inside track today. James Carroll, the city's top price-maker, had the Yanks 3 to 5 favorites to win the second game and 1 to 4 choices to capture the series.

Brilliant centrefielder of the Yankees hit safely first three times up and played a smart game afield.

"RED" RUFFING

GAME BROADCAST FOR ALL TROOPS IN U. S. FORCES

BBC Carries Full Account of Game in St. Louis to Farthest Corners of Earth

By OSCAR KAHAN
Associated Press Sports Writer

St. Louis, Oct. 1 — (AP) — Thirty-five thousand persons paid $150,000 to see a baseball game that wasn't played for them at all.

The spectators at the world series opener between the New York Yankees and the St. Louis Cardinals yesterday seemed to sense they weren't the fans for whom the teams were performing.

The game had all the normal trappings and pageantry — the band, the buffoon and the bustle—but little of the usual tumult and shouting. The crowd was frequently silent and even its cheers lacked a full-throated, booming roar. There was almost a feeling of why all this fuss over a ball game when a war is being fought.

If nothing else, a little sign told why.

The sign's message was plain, even without the sight of two army bombers winging low over the field. It said, in effect: This game is being played for American forces in the British Isles, for the navy on the seven seas, for the bulletin board "Gazette" of the helmet-clad marines on Guadalcanal Island.

Situation Described

In their dressing rooms after the little war they're fighting, the Yankees were serious, the Cardinals sombre.

J. Roy Stockton of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch sports staff described the situation graphically not so long ago:

"Next year many of the players will be fighting in the big war," he wrote. "Some leader on a field of battle will have reason for satisfaction if he gets some of the men who are fighting so gallantly in their baseball war.

World Series Notes

(By FRANK HOOD)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

St. Louis, Oct. 1. (AP)—St. Louis baseball fans will be recalling the second game of the 1926 World Series as they file into Sportsman's Park today.

That was the year Herb Pennock pitched the Yankees to a 3-2 victory in the first game with the Cardinals. The next day, with the aging Grover Cleveland Alexander hurling and right-fielder Billy Southworth, the present Card manager, smashing out a timely homerun, St. Louis evened the count and then went on to win the series.

Much of the sorrow over the St. Louis defeat is evinced by the ever-present scalping gentry. Six-dollar tickets, pedalled yesterday for as high as $20, are on the market today for $10 or less.

Today's best parley: The name of the winning pitcher will begin with the letter "B" and the victory will be his 22nd of the year. Rookie John Beazley of the Cards and the Yanks' Ernie Bonham are scheduled to do the mound chores and both have been credited with 21 victories.

About an hour before the first game started news reel cameramen asked the customers to give out with cheers for a crowd picture. The fans obliged so willingly that people waiting to get into the park yelped frantically—believing the game actually had started.

Two of the hardest workers during the game were Harry Gumbert, Red Bird reliefer, and Manager Billy Southworth, and both were rewarded. Gumbert started warming up in the first inning, and kept on until he finally got his chance in the eighth. He retired the only man to face him and then gave way to a pinch hitter. Southworth wore a small trench in the third-base coaching box as he paced back and forth waiting for one of his charges to get in scoring position. When he entered the clubhouse after the game President Sam Breadon presented him with a new contract.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

AN OLD CUSTOM IN MAJOR league baseball parks, and especially in the clubhouse, is the conventional bashing, of all straw hats worn on or after Sept. 15th However, there was an exception in one major league clubhouse this season when Coach Zach Taylor, of the St. Louis Browns, was permitted to wear his summer straw skipper until the Browns had cinched third place in the 1942 American League standing. Once the spot was cinched, however, Taylor's straw bonnet went the way of all such lids.

Yet, these September straw hat scrimmages have had some unpleasant aftermaths. The most damaging one came when Rube Waddell, great southpaw hurler of the Athletics, was put out of the 1905 Athletic-Giant World Series by a "straw hat" accident. To historians of the game, the tragic thing about this accident is that it prevented a meeting between Waddell, the game's greatest left-hander, at his very peak in 1905, with Christy Mathewson. The Rube won 27 games and lost ten, while he struck out 286 men in 1905. Matty won 31 games and lost nine and whiffed 206 in the same season.

After the Athletics had clinched their pennant, Connie Mack gave Andy Coakley, now University of Columbia baseball coach, permission to pitch an exhibition game. Coakley reported back to the A's at Providence, R. I., as the club was returning from Boston to Philadelphia. The Rube saw Andy on the station platform wearing his straw hat past closing day. In the scuffle for Coakley's skimmer, Waddell tripped over some bags on the platform, and fell heavily on his left shoulder. He was out for the balance of the season, including the World Series, and it was a terrific blow to the morale of the Athletics before a ball in the classic was pitched. The A's lost, four game to one, with Mathewson winning three by shutout scores.

BUCK BURROWS, WHO PROVED most prolific at the art of kicking out pucks for Wally Elmer's Kingston Combines a couple of seasons ago, recently received his commission in the R. C. A. F. following which he visited Kingston and his old hockey haunts. Of course PO. Burrows' return to the Limestone City gave Kingston Scribe Bill Walshe an opportunity to get in some wishful notes in his breezy column, which went like this. . . .

"Kingston is searching for a top goal-tender for the senior team, so imagine Coach Wally Elmer's pleasant surprise when Buck Burrows, brilliant cager of the Kingston Combines 1940-41 O. H. A. senior "B" champions, paid a visit yesterday. But the pleasure was only in a quick visit. Burrows cannot remain here long enough to tend goal this winter as he is on his way to an important coast patrol as an officer observer in the R. C. A. F. Burrows would sure be welcome in Kingston hockey. He can kick out pucks with the best. In winning the O. H. A. senior "B" crown two years ago Burrows was an outstanding star, especially in the finals with Owen Sound. In the deciding games he stopped more than a shot a minute. Although his eyes were fast enough to see flying pucks for split second shot, Burrows was turned down in his first R. C. A. F. medical for defective vision, but Buck went about the business of being a fighting flier in this man's war just as he did in his hockey and college work. He kept trying. He was accepted in the Air Force a few weeks before the start of the last hockey season, leaving Kingston without a goaler. Doing his part in the war was more important to Buck than playing hockey. He has earned rapid promotion in the R. C. A. F. and was recently granted a commission Kingston fans would welcome Buck back and perhaps he will return here when he gets through his job of fighting the Axis."

YOU'VE OFTEN HEARD THE expression—"he hurled 'em around like rubber balls,"—well, that's just about what Big Earl McCready did to all and sundry at the Arena last night. Earl really got his dander up and perhaps he was justified, as he had been the subject of some fairly questionable attacks at the hands of John "Calgary eye-opener" Katan all through their bout. However, once Mrs. McCready's little boy (pardon he's grown up lately), got his ire in high gear it was a picture to see him swing into action as he punched Referee Dunlop clean through the second-strand ropes and left him hors-de-combat before he hurled Katan bodily from the ring and finished up on a couple of prelims, and a pair of over-anxious, who no doubt today are nursing bruises and are much wiser young men. It was a thrilling wind-up for a good all-around show, as Skipper Tunney's preliminaries last night were just about tops and the Burns boys will be welcomed back even next Wednesday when the boys resume ring hostilities once again.

REMEMBER WHEN DR. J. LEE Richmond, who pitched the first perfect major league baseball game on record, died at Providence, R. I., thirteen years ago today? On June 12, 1880, Richmond, on the mound for Worchester, then holding National League franchise, shut out Cleveland, allowed no hits. Not a single Cleveland player reached first base.

LENGTHENS COMEBACK VICTORY

Oakland, Calif., Oct. 1—(AP)—Henry Armstrong, former triple boxing champion, lengthened his comeback victory string last night by knocking out Earl Turner, Richmond, Calif., welterweight prospect, in the fourth round of a scheduled 10-rounder. The bout between the two negroes drew approximately $20,000.

The former champion weighed 142 1-2, Turner, 148 1-2.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Romance on The Range"

"Romance On the Range," a rip-roaring new Republic western, is now playing at the Capitol Theatre, and chalked up another triumph for the popular singing cowboy star, Roy Rogers.

Rogers turns in one of the best performances of his career, and is capably supported by an excellent cast.

George "Gabby" Hayes, who furnishes comedy relief for all the Rogers westerns, again garners many laughs in "Romance On the Range." Also appearing to advantage in comedy roles are Sally Payne and Pat Brady. The Sons of the Pioneers group — of which Brady, Bob Nolan, Tim Spencer, Hugh Farr, Karl Farr, and Lloyd Perryman are members — score in both the action and musical sequences of the picture.

"Fast and Furious"

One of the season's brightest pieces of entertainment is "Fast and Furious," which opens today at the Capitol Theatre as the second feature. Teaming Franchot Tone and Ann Sothern, fresh from her success in "Maisie," as bibliophile — amateur detectives Joel and Garda Sloane, the picture presents a novel comedy-mystery story which completely engrosses the audience.

Lending splendid support to the fine work of Tone and Miss Sothern are Ruth Hussey, Lee Bowman, Allyn Joslyn, John Miljan, Bernard Nedell and Mary Beth Hughes. Nor should the outstanding direction of Busby Berkeley be overlooked. Ray June makes the most photographically of the many beautiful settings, and Frederick Stephani's production is of the highest caliber throughout.

A Popeye cartoon and the serial "Spy Smashers" completes a very entertaining program.

AT THE McCARTHY

George Formby

George Formby's series of laugh providing pictures has built up for him so enviable a reputation as an entertainer that the announcement of his new picture "Keep Fit" opening next at the McCarthy Theatre is truly welcome news to all showgoers of the City and District.

"Keep Fit" comes with the reputation of being George's funniest offering to date. It is now in it's second week at the Uptown Theatre, Toronto.

This time he has the role of a barber's assistant with an unfortunate habit of cutting chins and an undeserved reputation as a crack athlete. Force of environment, including that of the pretty manicurist in the barber's shop, makes it compulsory on George to manage by hook and crook to come up to expectations as oarsman, swimmer, gymnasium expert and champion boxer. How George with the fortunate help of a mascot, is put through his paces in a multitude of feats of prowess and marvellously emerges triumphant, is said to provide the meat of the story and roars of laughter for his audiences. New song hits are promised with George accompanying himself on the ukelele among them being the theme number "Keep Fit." We urge you not to miss the king of comedy in "Keep Fit." For more laughs the new streamlined Hal Roach comedy "Miss Polly" featuring Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville will be the second feature, making the entire program one long laugh show.

This is Foto Nite at the McCarthy, first offer will be for $175.00 and the second offer for $15.00. You may be selected. Last week Mrs. E. J. Stewart, Belleville was selected and this evening will receive her cheque for $80.00, for her photograph. Two splendid screen attractions will also be shown, first "Drums Of The Congo" starring Stuart Erwin, plus The Weaver Brothers and Elviry in the fun hit "The Old Homestead."

AT THE BELLE

George Sanders as the Falcon; Allen Jenkins and Lynn Bari in "The Falcon Takes Over," new, exciting adventure story, now at the Belle Theatre. Booth Tarkington's prize-winning story, "The Magnificent Amberson's," is the major feature.

AT THE BELLE

"The Magnificent Ambersons"

Bringing Booth Tarkington's Pulitzer-Prize-winning novel of changing fortune and shifting social conditions in a Mid-West city to the screen in stirring fashion, "The Magnificent Ambersons" marks Orson Welles' second film production now on the Belle Theatre screen.

A brilliant cast headed by Joseph Cotton, Dolores Costello and Tim Holt is featured in the offering which, produced, directed and scenarized by Welles, is said to be an unusual and absorbing film in a totally different field from his earlier Citizen Kane".

The plot deals with the growth of a little Indiana town, and what happens to it and to its inhabitants when the sulking factories of the 'Nineties' replace the fields and orchards around it.

Old Major Amberson is the most important man in the town, and his daughter, Isabel, is its undisputed social leader, ruling the hugely ornate Amberson Mansion in regal style. Isabel throws over talent-uninspiring, Wilbur Minafer, and Eugene leaves town.

Isabel's son George grows up to be a spoiled, arrogant brat; twenty years later he is insufferable. Eugene returns, a widower with a lovely daughter, Lucy, and builds a plant to make horseless carriages. George scoffs at this example of modern industrialism. When Wilbur dies the two former sweethearts console one another, and George is horrified to learn that his mother plans to marry Eugene, whom he thinks an upstart.

George forces the weak-willed Isabel to abandon her plan. He takes her abroad. Eugene's business prospers, but the Amberson fortune decreases; and when Isabel finally comes home to die and is soon followed by the old Major, George suddenly finds he is penniless and forgotten. How he strives to redeem his wasted life and to make amends for the injury he had done Eugene and Lucy, forms the dramatic conclusion to the picture.

Young Halt has the role of George, and Cotton that of the faithful Eugene, with Miss Costello as Isabel. Anne Baxter, as Lucy, Richard Bennett as the Major, Agnes Moorehead as Isabel's sister-in-law and Ray Collins as her brother, have the other principal roles in the offering; Erskine Sandford is also featured.

"Falcon Takes Over"

Dealing with the disappearance of a mystery girl and the perilous search made for her, RKO Radio's "The Falcon Takes Over" the second feature attraction is rated as one of the season's most thrilling films.

A clever amateur detective, the police and an escaped convict seeking revenge all take part in the pursuit, which leads to many suspenseful moments.

George Sanders again enacts the title role and Lynn Bari makes her debut as the heroine in the production, while James Gleason, Allen Jenkins, Ward Bond and Helen Gilbert are featured.

A funny Pluto color cartoon "T-Bone For Two" will also be exhibited. The Belle is warm and comfortable.

REMEMBER WITHOUT WANTING

by MARGARET GORMAN NICHOLS

CHAPTER EIGHT

Ames' Honeymoon Ends

On Thursday evening the motif was Hawaiian and over Judith's blue frock was a blue lei and over Max's dark coat a coral-colored one. They had dined and danced, and now they sat, their hands joined over the table as blurred figures danced to soft music.

"I'd like you to meet some of my friends, Max."

"I'm sure they're very charming, darling, but I want to keep you all to myself. You don't object, do you?"

"I couldn't when you put it that way. Will we ever exhaust things to talk about?"

"How can we when we can always talk about—us? Stop frowning. I love that dear face eager and young. The trouble with most women, you know, is that they cannot live for the moment. With me you must, darling."

"You're not unstable."

"Simply a realist, and the stardust in your eyes frightens me. I'm not perfect. But this imperfect man loves you very deadly."

"A meteor across your sky . . ."

His fingers tightened around hers as she laughed. "You remember that!"

"I remember everything. And I've never talked so much to anyone before. You make me glib. You make me want to give you impressions and ideas that until now I kept to myself. But even so I can't tell you how I feel."

"Your hands tell me."

"I lived quite well without you, but now I know I wouldn't live at all without you." She smiled. "I date my life—B.M. and A.M. Before Max and after Max."

"I won't like it at all if you neglect your work. I'm enormously interested in it."

"I'll have to be famous and successful so you'll be proud of me."

And yet her work had become remote. The centre of her existence, it had been pushed aside for Max to occupy the centre. Her passion, it had become a pleasant chore, and Max had become her passion.

She said, "I didn't know that love was like this, Max. I thought it was sweeter, gentler."

"You didn't know that love is a harsh ecstasy."

"A harsh ecstasy?" Yes . . ."

He smiled. "My analytical darling."

"I've always taken things apart, looked at them and put them together again."

"But human beings are full of inconsistencies, remember. They squirm out of place, topple from their pedestals. They change. . ."

"We'll never change, she thought, seeing him look away, his thick, fair lashes shielding the alert blue eyes that had narrowed because of the smoke.

Presently he stroked her hand gently. "I'm going to take you home now and you mustn't get any wrong ideas when I tell you I can't see you for a week."

"You treat me as if I were a child."

"You are, and the more I see of you and know you and love you, the more I realize I must be a brake for you. For all the arrogance you don't believe you possess, for all the adorable self-sufficiency you really do possess, you could be reckless. I'm up to my neck in things I've neglected to do because of you. But I'll miss you and think of you and ring you up every few days. And I love you."

* * *

The white flanks of the cruise ship moved alongside the same pier it had left two weeks ago and the same passengers who then had been eager to be at sea were now equally eager to be welcomed back by a vast crowd of welcoming faces.

Tim had brought Judith and Emily. But before they had arrived at the pier Tim, who liked any excuse to be festive, had bought flowers and they had stopped at Phyllis and Ames' apartment to open the window and arrange the flowers so that the apartment with its new, unlived-in look would be more homelike.

"I've forgotten how Phyllis and Ames look," Tim said, grinning. He towered above the two slender girls.

"Phyllis has red hair. You can't miss a red head," Emily said. "I don't see Ames' father."

Judith, on tip-toe, peered over the bobbing heads, her attention divided. Was Max here to greet the "friend" he had seen off two weeks ago? Anxiously she looked for him as she tried also to pick out Phyllis and Ames from the faces along the deck. That you could love someone so much that he became the centre of your existence without knowing his life apart from you seemed very odd indeed.

Tim had become like a member of the family. Gay, helpful, at home in the apartment, she had found him and Emily scrambling eggs in the tiny kitchen several times and he had been insistent that they all be his guests tonight. But Max went his exclusive way alone, wanting to share her, Judith, with no one. But she would not have him different. The day-by-day, informal, boy-and-girl relationship of Tim and Emily was not for Max and her. Because they were in love must they share family and friends? No . . . She had asked for a man who was no ordinary man such as Tim or Ames and, yes, Stephen Larrabee were, and Max had come as though she had ordered him and the gods had delivered him.

Phyllis, in a green suit, looked radiant and lovely. There was a bridge of freckles across her small nose. Ames' deep tan added to his good looks.

"The most marvellous time," Phyllis was saying to them a few minutes later. "The loveliest places . . . Wait'll we get our pictures developed."

"We'll have to get our baggage inspected, dear," Ames said.

"Inspected?" Phyllis asked vaguely. "Oh, yes, of course, darling. I'd forgotten. What a nuisance. What do they do?"

"I'll attend to it. You talk to Tim and Judith and Emily."

"Don't be long, dear. We're Tim's guests tonight. Isn't that sweet of him? I was hoping I wouldn't have to go straight to the kitchen after my honeymoon."

Ames seemed somewhat disappointed, Judith thought.

"But, Phyllis, I thought we were going to the apartment, dear."

"We are first, to leave our things, but there's nothing to eat in the place and Tim wants . . ."

It was obvious, Judith thought, that Ames wished to go directly to his new home with his wife and remain for the evening and that while he seemed pleased that friends had met them he wished also, now that the greetings were over, they would all go. Two weeks of marriage had given him a good solid, married look. Incredible that he should look older and soberer so soon. But to Ames marriage was not a romantical excursion, but a serious and enduring journey. Stable, conventional, his attitude toward Phyllis was that of the protective, stronger male.

He turned to Judith. "Have you seen Dad?"

"No, Ames, I haven't."

"Probably couldn't get away from the office. I'll get our things through and join you later."

When he left, Phyllis said, "You know, I'd forgotten all about Ames' father. I suppose . . . but never mind. There was the most wonderful party on the ship last night. We didn't get to bed until nearly five. I wished we could have cruised for thirty days. You simply wallow in luxury and the food was superb."

Emily was smiling. "But you have your own kitchen now and I'm sure Ames has some socks that need darning."

"Don't tell me about it! I haven't the slightest idea how to begin."

How Emily would love a kitchen of her own and Tim's socks to darn. But Tim didn't know Emily was voicing her own desires.

After a long while Ames, warm and perspiring, joined them. On the street they parted, promising to meet later for cocktails and dinner. As Judith's eyes followed them to the taxi, she thought, "For Ames the honeymoon is over. But not for Phyllis. What will she do? What will she be when she discovers that it is over?"

And all at once she had an intense longing for Max.

In the car Tim took her hand and Emily's. "Two beautiful gals. What more could any man ask for? Ames is a swell person. He'll make your red-headed Phyllis a fine husband.

Judith wanted to ask, "But will Phyllis make him a good wife?"

When they were driving, Tim said, "You're very quiet, Judith."

Emily looked over her shoulder and smiled at her understandingly. "Our Judith doesn't bring work home from the office anymore, Tim. Now draw your own conclusions and don't tease her. I'm glad for her."

Judith thought, "I want Max."

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop is the air raid warden for our block now, and last week the telephone rang for him twice after he had went to bed, making pop mad on account of both being false alarms and making me mad because they didn't wake me up so I could jump up and answer them like a junior air raid warden, and last night I went to sleep thinking, If the phone rings for an air raid tonight I bet I'll hear it all right, I'll sleep with one eye and one ear open.

And the next thing I knew I was sitting up straight in bed, thinking. There it goes now.

Meaning the telephone, and I hurry up jumped out of bed so quick I bumped into my desk and knocked about 5 things off of it in the dark, all of them sounding heavy when they hit the floor and some of them rolling and making still more noise, and I thought the door of my room was open but it was part ways closed and it shut all the ways with a fierce slam when I banged into it, and half ways down the stairs I tripped on the bottom of my pidjammas and went down the rest of the ways on my sitting position and ended at the bottom with a big bump and pop ran out of his room in the dark and called down, For peet sake who and what is going on?

Me, pop, I'm answering the telephone, I said, and he said, What telephone? Anymody that invents a telephone that doesn't wake me up can have half my fortune and the hand of my son in marriage. You've been dreaming, and now go back to bed, and if you dream about bells again, kindly confine all your reactions to your dreams, he said.

The result being I had the same dream twice more without waking up, making it more comfortable for everybody.

Moscow, Oct. 1 —(AP)— Yemelian Yaroslavsky, member of the central committee of the Communist Party, said in a long article in Pravda today that the absence of a second front in Europe calls for double and triple efforts from the Russians.

However, he added that "today the U.S.S.R. is not alone, together with Great Britain and the United States it is joined by a large part of the world in the fight on Hitlerite Germany."

Airmen From No. 5 I.T.S. Continue To Assist Farmers With Harvesting

Airmen from No. 5 Initial Training School at Belleville are still doing yeoman service in helping district farmers garner their late crops through the local crop saving campaign arranged by the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, it was stated today by Mr. J. Owen Herity.

Jobs in which airmen are still assisting include digging potatoes, picking apples, tomatoes and corn. One local resident sought permission to have airmen repair a roof, but the boys declined the job owing to lack of tools and equipment.

In the opinion of Mr. Herity, the crop saving campaign, instituted through the action of the local Chamber of Commerce when approached by district farmers stating their inability to secure assistance to harvest crops, has been of inestimable value to the district. Through the haying and harvesting operations as many as 50 men were sent out daily to assist in the fields.

By far the greater majority of the men sent out from the central office at the Chamber of Commerce were airmen from No. 5 I.T.S. who volunteered their services to help harvest the crops. An unavoidable delay in posting airmen to elementary training schools after having finished their Initial Training course helped considerably in the success of the venture and with several weeks spare time at their disposal many of these men responded willingly to the call for farm help.

Airmen offering their services for the assistance of farmers getting in their crops were paid 30 cents per hour while they were on the job, this money being made payable to the Chamber of Commerce which turned it over, without reduction, to the Benevolent Fund of the Initial Training School at Belleville.

The part played by the Chamber of Commerce and by Mr. Herity in fostering the crop saving campaign is one well worthy of commendation. It was responsible for much of the district's crop being saved that otherwise would have been wasted and should win much appreciation from the farmers concerned.

The duck artillery thundered its first salvos along bay, marsh and lake this morning as the official hunting season opened under Spring-like conditions.

Scarcely had Old Sol poked a pink nose over the eastern horizon than the hidden duck anti-aircraft sections opened up its spasmodic firing which later swelled as the feathered "enemy" flew overhead singly and in formation.

With almost perfect weather conditions prevailing, insofar as physical comfort is concerned, a number of hunters decided to make a day of it. For this reason specific reports of the bags were difficult to obtain early in the day.

One duo of hunters, who do their shooting from the hurricane deck of a Bay of Quinte "submarine chaser," stated that teal were noted in fair numbers with the occasional black seen on reconnaissance duty. Apparently the black bombers were scouting the territory for possible "enemy" positions before the main body decides to move up in force.

Small Bag

However, they brought back one lone black and winged another. When last seen, the second bird was making a forced landing on the water and immediately made for the safety of a hidden hangar in the rushes. It must be considered "as lost."

If the noise of the early morning "barrage" can be judged a criterion, there were plenty of nimrods out for the opening season ceremonies. Some district hunters were noted in the city yesterday, one party bringing with them a duck-boat camouflaged in a pattern that would do credit to the Royal Navy.

However, according to one report, the feathered squadrons are believed to have been "tipped off" for several formations of blacks were seen flying high out of range, with no apparent desire to investigate the lower regions.

Lounging Rooms Needed for Use Of Airwomen Here

A well-attended meeting of the Y.W.C.A. Rooms Registry Committee was held Wednesday at the "Y". Representatives from the Hostess Houses at Mountain View and Trenton as well as officers in charge of girls at both those stations were in attendance also ladies from several of the city churches. Mrs. A. H. Ketcheson was chairman and briefly outlined the problems to be met in the coming season. One of the most urgent needs is a heated room or rooms, where the girls, who are giving their services in the Air Force and who come from all parts of Canada can go and meet their friends, write letters and generally relax and feel at home, and anyone has any suggestions or ideas, where such a room can be procured the committee would feel most grateful if they would phone Miss Martin at 2736.

There will be in the neighborhood of 500 girls at nearby air stations this winter and any hospitality that could be offered them by the citizens of Belleville would be vastly appreciated by them and make our town live in their memory as a real home from home.

Time To Be Set For Debate On Indian Situation

London, Oct. 1 —(CP)— Sir Stafford Cripps, Lord Privy Seal, announced today in the House of Commons that time would be set aside in the near future for a debate on the political situation in India.

L. S. Amery, Secretary of State for India, told the House that measures taken by the government of India to restore order, "in the circumstances the seriousness of which is, I think, still imperfectly appreciated in this country, have my full support."

"I am not prepared to interfere with the Viceroy's discretion in this matter," he added.

Mr. Amery was replying to Rev. Reginald Sorenson, Labor, who asked if he had any information with regard to aircraft machine-gunning crowds in India and whether steps would be taken to prevent aircraft being used for the suppression of disorder.

"It was found necessary to use aircraft in order to check sabotage by mobs in areas in which the movement of troops on the ground was hampered both by widespread interruption of railways and exceptional flooding conditions," Mr. Amery said.

He reiterated an official Indian statement that during the recent disturbances mobs were machine-gunned five times from the air and that, after an airplane crash at Bihar Sept. 5, the crew were murdered.

Obituary

REV. ADAM ARMSTRONG
(Thurlow)

In failing health for the past two years, Rev. Adam Armstrong, 4th concession Thurlow township, former United Church minister at Cannifton, passed away at his residence early Thursday morning. He was in his 67th year.

A minister in the Methodist Church, and in the United Church since the church union, for the past 31 years, Rev. Armstrong had ministered in Ontario for the past ten years, during which time he was stationed at Hilton and at Cannifton. Prior to that he was stationed in Alberta and in Saskatchewan. Failing health necessitated his retirement from the active ministry about two years ago.

Born in England, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Adam Armstrong, Rev. Armstrong took leave of absence from the ministry during the last Great War to enlist with the Canadian Army in the chaplain service. He served for three years in this capacity, going overseas with the 195th Battalion, City of Regina.

Surviving him are his wife, the former Mabel Hawken, and two daughters, Misses Jean Armstrong of Washington, D. C., and Marguerite, now attending Peterboro Normal School. One brother Mr. Jack Armstrong of England, also survives. A son Lyle Emerson Armstrong, a member of the R.C.A.F. met death in a flying accident in Yorkton, Sask., on October 30, 1941.

The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this edition.

Entertainment of Men In Homes Stressed

Speaking to the members of the Women's Guild of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Tuesday night, Miss Jessie Martin, superintendent of Room Registry of the Y. W. C. A., stressed the urgent need for entertainment for enlisted men in the homes of the city.

There is a special necessity, she said, for the opening of homes to the many airwomen now stationed near Belleville. "This," she said, "will serve a double purpose. Not only will it give the residents of the city an opportunity to meet intelligent men and women from all over the world, but will provide places of entertainment for these strangers in a city where such places are limited."

"There is a real necessity for providing a satisfactory way of spending leisure hours for these people," she pointed out.

Mrs. Gordon Robertson presided at the meeting with Mrs. Argue introducing the speaker. Mrs. M. Barlow read the minutes and correspondence which included several letters of thanks for boxes sent overseas by the members of the Guild. Thirty-two boxes were mailed last month, and work is now being started on the preparation of Christmas boxes for overseas.

The Guild will discontinue the serving of refreshments at all future meetings, it was decided. The Auxiliary of the Guild were the hosts for the evening, providing refreshments, and a social hour which was featured by an amusing "soap" contest.

Lt.-Col. Merritt Awarded V.C.

Husband of Belleville Girl First Canadian to Win V.C. Award in Second Great War

Winner of V.C. in Dieppe Raid Prisoner Of War and Believed Slightly Wounded —Father Killed in First Great War At Ypres—A Brilliant Student and Athlete

Ottawa, Oct. 2 —(CP)— A sharp-shooting, grenade-throwing lawyer from Vancouver, Lt.-Col. Charles Cecil Merritt, is the first Canadian to win the Victoria Cross in the Second Great War.

Defence Minister Ralston today placed Col. Merritt's name at the head of a list of 178 Canadians who fought with the gallantry which calls for distinction in the battle of Dieppe.

Col. Merritt is a prisoner of war and is believed slightly wounded. He will not be able to collect his award personally, for a time at least, but his wife at Belleville, Ont., and his mother at Vancouver, in the midst of worry over his safety, were thrilled at the fact that his bravery was recognized by bestowal of the Empire's highest award for gallantry.

Descended From Fighting Family

Col. Merritt is descended from fighting men on two sides of his family as well as from men who played great roles in Canadian history. All his honors have not been won on the battlefield. He was a brilliant student and an athlete.

In 1932 he was captain of the Vancouver Athletic Club rugby team and the year before had been a member of the Vancouver team which lost to Calgary in the two-game Western Canada Championship.

Col. Merritt's father, Maj. Cecil Mack Merritt, was killed at Ypres in the First Great War and mentioned in dispatches for conspicuous bravery. Further back in his family, on both his mother's and his father's sides loom the shades of high ranking officers, a general in India, another in the Crimean War, a builder of the Welland Canal, and a Prime Minister of Canada—Sir Charles Tupper, his great-grandfather.

Entered R.M.C. at 16

Col. Merritt is 33 years old and was born at Vancouver. He entered Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., at 16, was graduated with honors, was commissioned in his father's old regiment, the Seaforth Highlanders, and studied law in Vancouver.

When war broke out he was appointed a major in the active army and proceeded overseas with the Seaforths but was later appointed deputy provost marshal of the 1st Division and still later deputy adjutant-general. He took a course at the staff college at Camberley, England, and became general staff officer second grade of the Third Division. Last March he was appointed to command the South Saskatchewan Regiment which he led with such gallantry at Dieppe.

"Take good care of yourself and forget about V.C.'s," Mrs. Merritt, the former Grace Bone of Belleville, told her husband on his departure for overseas.

On cereiving word of her husband's honor, with their two small sons at her side, she recalled her parting admonition and indicated she was not sorry he had not obeyed her.

"Cecil, even from childhood never knew the meaning of fear," said his mother, Mrs. Cecil Merritt of Vancouver, who was with her daughter-in-law at Belleville when the word came.

Mrs. Merritt, Senior, has another son overseas, Lieut. William, also with the Seaforth Highlanders, who wrote her describing his brother's conduct as "God-guided leadership," after talking with men who came back from the battle.

10 KILLED IN SWISS TRAIN WRECK

London, Oct. 2 —(CP)— Ten persons were killed and 16 injured seriously by a head-on collision of a passenger train and a freight at a bend in the railway track near Biel, Switzerland, the Swiss radio said today.

The first two cars of the passenger train were telescoped and 10 freight cars were wrecked.

The Citation Of Award

Here is the citation accompanying the award:—

"For matchless gallantry and inspiring leadership whilst commanding his battalion during the Dieppe Raid August 19, 1942. From the point of landing his unit's advance had to be made across a bridge in Pourville, which was swept by very heavy machine-gun mortar and artillery fire and the first parties were mostly destroyed and the bridge thickly covered by their bodies.

"A daring lead was required. Waving his helmet Lt.-Col. Merritt rushed forward shouting 'Come on over. There is nothing to worry about here.' He thus personally led the survivors of at least four parties in turn across the bridge. Quickly organizing these he led them forward and when held up by enemy pill boxes he again headed rushes which succeeded in clearing them. In one case he himself destroyed the occupants of the post by throwing grenades into it.

"After several of his runners became casualties he himself kept contact with his differed positions. Although twice wounded Lt.-Col. Merritt continued to direct the unit's operations with great vigor and determination and while organizing the withdrawal he stalked a sniper with a Bren gun and silenced him. He then coolly gave orders for the departure and announced his intention to hold off and 'get even with' the enemy.

"When last seen he was collecting Bren and Tommy guns and preparing a defensive position which successfully covered the withdrawal from the Beach. Lt.-Col. Merritt is now reported to be a prisoner of war. To this Commanding Officer's personal daring the success of his unit's operations and the safe re-embarkation of a large portion of it were chiefly due."

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—The citation for Capt. Donald Fraser MacRae of Cornwall, Ont., listed today as a winner of the Military Cross at Dieppe, discloses that he was the only Essex Scottish officer who reached shore and got back to Britain.

Capt. MacRae, a member of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders, was attached to the Scottish for the Dieppe battle. He was wounded early in the fight.

"Capt. MacRae . . .was the only officer of this unit who returned from the shore landing," the citation said ". . . His leadership, coolness and resolution set a fine example to the men during the operation and in the withdrawal saved several valuable lives."

Premier Praises All Who Fought at Dieppe

Ottawa, Oct. 2 —(CP)— Today's list of decorations for the battle of Dieppe does not begin to cover all who proved themselves heroes in that engagement, Prime Minister Mackenzie King said today in a statement on the awards to 178 Canadian soldiers.

Dieppe Taught World Canadians Can Fight, Ralston Tells Dieppe Units

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in England, Oct. 2 —(CP CABLE)—Col. J. L. Ralston, Canadian Minister of National Defence, made a day-long visit to Canadian troops today, starting with an inspection of units which participated in the raid on Dieppe.

The minister was accompanied by Lt.-Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, Army Commander; Lt.-Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, Corps Commander; Maj.-Gen. J. H. Roberts, who was in command at Dieppe; Lt.-Gen. Kenneth Stuart, Chief of the Canadian General Staff, and Col. H. A. Dyde, the minister's military secretary.

"It is a great morning for me," Col. Ralston said in addressing the men. "It is the first time I have had the opportunity of standing really in the presence of Dieppe. It is a source of great pride to be on the parade grounds with you."

He said by that operation the United Nations had found out what they would have to dislodge and how to go about it. The described Dieppe as a test which "above all taught us that Canadians can fight and taught also the Allies and the world that Canadians can fight."

"I do not think there ever was a finer exhibition of arms by the co-operating services and I do not think there ever was a finer demonstration or confidence between officers and men.

He described Dieppe as "the toughest assignment the Canadian army has had, an assignment carried out magnificently. He said Canadians are fighting for the safety, comfort and happiness of every man, woman and child of Canada, who are threatened just as the people of every other country.

Col. Ralston said he was addressing to the men a call as an old comrade to carry on with the show.

As he inspected the men the minister moved among the ranks with the inspecting party and officers of the units. He chatted with the men here and there.

Col. Ralston and Gen. McNaughton visited Dieppe units at three different places during the morning.

He marked at one point that Dieppe was "a epoch in Canadian participation in the way and

"Every Man Who Went Up Dieppe Beaches Won a Victoria Cross" Says Wife of Dieppe Hero in Tribute

"Every man who went up the Dieppe Beaches won a Victoria Cross".

There was a look of deep sincerity in the eyes of Mrs. Charles Cecil Merritt, wife of Lieut.-Colonel Merritt, hero of Dieppe, and Canada's first Victoria Cross winner in the present war, as she uttered these words, in her Charles Street home today.

Lieut.-Colonel Merritt was the officer commanding the South Saskatchewan Regiment, one of the units which emblazoned Canada's name in glittering letters across the pages of history in the now famous Dieppe Raid.

Mrs. Merritt is the former Grace Bone, daughter of Ex-Mayor and Mrs. Jamieson Bone of this city.

Colonel Merritt, who led his regiment in a daring advance up the blood-stained beaches to Dieppe, and single-handed covered the regiment's withdrawal to the sea, is now a prisoner of war. He was twice wounded during the battle.

Today's news dispatches brought the word that Col. Merritt has been awarded the Victoria Cross, the highest honor the Empire can bestow. He is the first Canadian to win the coveted honor, and heads a list of 178 awards made to Canadians of all ranks in the Dieppe Raid.

Remembers the Fallen

Interviewed in her home today, the wife of Canada's outstanding army hero, was not concerned with the honor and glory that the award of the Victoria Cross brings. "Naturally, I am delighted", she said, "but my thoughts when I learned of Cecil's honor were with the

FDR FINDS WAR PLANTS OPERATING AT NEAR PEAK

President Travels 8,754 Miles Throgh 24 States to Visit Plants

A SECRET TRIP

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Oct. 2 — (AP) — President Roosevelt's inspection of bustling war establishments around the edge of the United States worked out so well he was giving earnest consideration today to another tour or two through the central and southeastern sections of the country.

He missed those areas while travelling 8,754 miles through 24 states in the last fortnight, paying surprise visits to private war plants and army, navy and marine bases. But he had hopes of visiting them next spring to find out at first hand what they are contributing to the war effort.

He voiced that hope late yesterday, at a press conference at which he released details of his tour and gave his impressions of what he had seen.

The trip was conducted with all

JAPS WITHDRAW DEEPER INTO MOUNTAIN RANGE

APPROACH MENARI

Allied Headquarters, Australlia, Oct. 2—(CP)—The Japanese, balked in their drive toward Port Moresby, withdrew deeper into the fastnesses of New Guinea's Owen Stanley mountains today, cautiously pursued by Australian troops and harried by Allied planes.

A communique from Allied Headquarters indicated the Australians were approaching Menari, a mountain hamlet 46 miles north of Port Moresby, where it was believed the Japanese might try to make a stand, but apparently there was no contact between the opposing forces yesterday.

Menari is about four miles beyond Nauro, which the Australians reoccupied Wednesday after a swift 10-mile advance from Ioribaiwa the preceding day.

The comparative slowness of the Australians' progress over the tricky terrain indicated they were taking no chances on running into an ambush.

BRITISH BOMBERS POUND FLENSBURG ON BALTIC COAST

Resume Aerial Offensive Against Germany After Seven-Night Lull

17 PLANES MISSING

London, Oct. 2 — (CP) — The R. A. F. struck at Germany last night after a week of bad weather, blasting anew at the Nazi U-boat building centre at Flensburg with a bomber force described officially as fairly heavy.

Flensburg, which turns out and repairs a large percentage of Hitler's submarines, apparently was hit even harder than on its last raid, Sept. 23.

Seventeen planes were reported lost last night, compared with 10 the night of the previous attack.

The port has been bombed six times before in an R. A. F. campaign to weaken Nazi U-boat operations by smashing their source and bases.

The German High Command claimed that 22 raiders were shot down during the night and asserted the bombings at "several places in the north German coastal district" caused civilian casualties.

The home front remained quiet, with the government announcing there was nothing to report.

A Berlin broadcast a DNB dispatch saying the British attacked points in Northern Germany, but claimed the raids were of no military importance and caused slight damage.

The news and propaganda agency claimed 20 raiders were shot down.

Toronto, Oct. 2—(CP)—Attorney-General Gordon Conant said here today recommendations for compulsory registration and inspection of small water craft would be made to the Department of Transport.

Red Riding Hood's Wolf Wasn't Very Smart Says Veteran Hunter

By ELLIOTT CHASE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Lake Charles, La., Oct. 2 (AP)—If Little Red Riding Hood's grandmother was eaten by a wolf, it probably was a very dumb wolf. And, says Rev. George Hines, this is no reflection on the grandmother.

In 25 years of hunting wolves through regional swamps and brushlands, this white-haired Protestant preacher has learned practically everything about wolves except how to like them. But he insists they are uncommonly smart; too smart to run around gulping grandmothers.

Well, no matter how many sheep he kills, say 20 or 30, a wolf siphons just a jigger of blood from each, says Mr. Hines. Driven by extreme hunger, he might bite off a chunk of meat; come back an hour or so later for another snack.

The wolves are at their canniest when raiding a large flock of sheep. They don't barge in and tag perhaps a leading citizen, or a raving beauty who is the spice of the party. Instead the wolf waits, finally knocking some socially uncertain party off the flock's edge.

That way the wolf can gumshoe about, murdering for hours before the flock realizes there is a war going on.

"Because wolves are so devilishly efficient," Mr. Hines says, "their handiwork is seldom confused with that of sheep-killing dogs.

"Although some dogs become fair hands at lunching on fresh mutton, none of them develop the wolf's unholy skill as an assassin. Dogs sink their teeth into a sheep's neck and sort of chew the fellow out of commission. You and I could do the same thing with a little practice, and dental care."

Germans Dislodged From Strategic Hill Northwest of City

Heavy Toll Levied On Enemy in Mozdok, Leningrad And Novorossisk Fronts

PRESS OFFENSIVE

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Oct. 2 — (AP) — A Red Army guard division of Stalingrad's siege-worn garrison was reported routing the Germans from house after house today in a counter-attack coupled with Soviet offensives outside the city while invasion forces inched deeper into the Northwestern suburbs.

The Germans pressed their own offensive from the northwest even as the Russians struck back along the fortified and blast-pitted streets of the Volga River industrial centre.

The noon communique stressed defensive action within Stalingrad. It stated Russian detachments accounted for 10 tanks of a large attacking force with shell fire, rifles and grenades and killed 200 men, driving the survivors back to their initial positions.

The outnumbered fliers of the Red Air Force were declared to have brought down nine enemy planes in combat.

Capture of another settlement south of Stalingrad and seizure of a strategic hill-top northwest of the city were attributed to Red Army men in the day's official reports.

300 Officers Killed

In the dislodgment of Germans from the height northwest of Stalingrad, the noon communique said, about 300 enemy officers and men were killed and 18 dugouts and blockhouses were destroyed.

Further tolls were reported levied upon enemy strength on the Mosdok, Leningrad and Novorossisk fronts. The communique said one Soviet unit wiped out about 1,500 German and Rumanian officers and men in three days of the battle of the western Caucasus southeast of Novorossisk.

This was the 39th day of the siege of Stalingrad.

Fresh Nazi divisions brought from other fronts rushed into the struggle, but the Russians said a decisive turn still was not sighted.

As evidence of intensity of the battle, Isvestia said the Germans rained 3,000 shells as well as many trench mortar projectiles against one narrow Russian salient.

U. S, Heavy Bombers Score Hits at Pylos

Cairo, Oct. 2 —(AP)— Heavy bombers of the United States Army Air Forces raided the Greek harbor of Pylos again yesterday, scoring two direct hits on one ship and numerous near-misses on others, it was announced today.

U. S. Subs Sink Five Jap Ships

Washington, Oct. 2 (AP) — The Navy Department announced today that United States submarines operating in the western Pacific have sunk five more Japanese ships, probably sunk two others and damaged one.

A communique said:

"Far East

"1. United States submarines have reported the following results of operations against the enemy in far eastern waters:

"One large seaplane tender sunk.

"One large cargo passenger ship sunk

"One large freighter sunk.

"Two medium sized cargo ships sunk.

"Two medium sized cargo ships damaged and probably sunk.

"One large tanker damaged.

"2. These actions have not been announced in any previous navy department communique."

These successful attacks by American undersea raiders raised the total bag of Japanese ships taken by submarines, as reported by the navy here, to 74 vessels sunk, 19 probably sunk, and 22 damaged—a total of 115 ships.

U. S. Delivers 93 Cargo Ships in Sept.

Washington, Oct. 2 (AP)—The Maritime Commission announced Thursday that United States shipyards had reached their promised goal of three ships a day by delivering ninety-three new cargo vessels with a deadweight tonnage of 1,009,800 in September.

This, the Commission said, was "the most outstanding ship production record ever achieved in world history."

Rear Admiral Howard L. Vickery, vice-chairman of the Commission, said the achievement was proof that shipyards could not only reach the President's goal of 8,000,000 deadweight tons in 1942 "but will have ample capacity to turn out the 16,000,000 tons set as the 1943 construction goal on the basis of available steel."

QUARTETTE OF AIRMEN CAUSE DISTURBANCE

Four non-commissioned officers of the Mountain View Bombing School base of the R.C.A.F. were apprehended on Front Street by city police shortly after three o'clock this morning after causing considerable disturbance. The airmen are alleged to have over-turned a number of garbage cans along the street and generally wrecked any movable object within their sight. When approached by P. C. Wright the quartette at first refused to be identified. However, later, Constables Rathwell and Ellis arrived to assist and the airmen were finally lodged in the police station where they continued to refuse to reveal their identification. Later an officer from the Mountain View base was called and the men identified. They were released in custody of the air force officer, but police officials today revealed the matter is by no means a closed issue.

NEW RAILWAY ENGINE PASSES THRU CITY

Fresh from the shops of the Kingston Locomotive Company a new Canadian Pacific Railway engine passed through the centre of the city on Thursday afternoon. The latest type passenger engine was built in Kingston and on its initial run rode the Canadian National rails from Kingston to Belleville, where it was shifted over the C. N. R. city spur line along Pinnacle St. to the Canadian Pacific road south of the city: Hence the new engine, 2401, was driven light to C. P. R. shops at Smiths Falls. It was the second 2400-type engine built in Kingston for the C. P. R. this year.

However, upon the arrival of civil authorities it was found that a detachment of soldiers were engaged in rifles practice, directing their fire into the heavy gravel pit along the south side of the island thus avoiding any possibility of damage.

Fire Prevention Week in City

The local program coinciding with the Provincial Fire Prevention Week being observed all next week starting on Sunday was commenced in Belleville on Thursday, it was announced this morning by Fire Chief William Lynch.

Observance of the week in this city, insofar as the local fire department is concerned, will consist of inspections of local schools, churches, public buildings and business places. Firemen will make a thorough and systematic inspection of premises and will be on the look-out particularly for any fire hazards that might exist.

Fire drill will be observed in all city schools with firemen timing the children in their exit from buildings. This fire drill in the schools is closely contested by the children who vie with pupils of other schools in their ability to clear the rooms in the shortest possible time.

With the coming of autumn weather, Fire Chief Lynch particularly warned residents to closely examine all stoves, furnaces and smoke pipes and make sure they are safe and well away from woodwork or other burnable materials. Have the chimneys cleaned regularly, he advises. By far the greater percentage of fire alarms in the city arise from chimney fires, it was stated.

Removal of rubbish, waste papers and all unnecessary combustible materials from the premises was also advised strongly by the fire chief who advised that rubbish should be burned only in safely covered brick or metal incinerators. Care in the use of cleaning fluids and in the use of electric appliances was also advised.

Story of Terror Told by Speaker

"Christians in Japanese occupied China are permitted to worships their own God only if they first worship the sun god of Japan."

Thus spoke Mrs. H. M. Griffin, wife of Rev. Griffin, Assistant Home Director for North America, as she addressed an open meeting in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Sunday School Room last evening on the China Inland Missions. Mrs. Griffin and her husband were for many years stationed in China as missionaries.

Mrs. Griffin told a realistic story of terror and hardships in the Chinese cities of Chekiang and and Shanghai as the result of Japanese air raids, which in Shanghai alone resulted in 30,000 orphans, all of whom were left homeless.

She told of the unceasing work of hospital officials in striving to relieve the suffering of thousands of wounded refugees, of the many thousands of bandages necessary to dress their wounds and of the struggle to provide sufficient food. Soya beans were utilized to a great extent to provide milk for the children, she said.

Despite the almost universal suffering and trying conditions of the Chinese people in the occupied zones, the Christian faith of the people was still very strong, according to the returned missionary. The missionary spirit never waned. The gospel was preached to refugees even in hospitals.

A great many missionaries have now been returned home but the gospel is still being preached by Chinese converted to the Christian faith. "May our prayers be borne out that God may still work through these people," concluded Mrs. Griffin.

Rev. Griffin also addressed the meeting choosing as his theme, "Attacking on all Fronts,". Mrs. Griffin also addressed a Women's Missionary meeting at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church during the afternoon.

San Francisco, (CP)—"Careless matches aid the Axis", is the new slogan of the United States forest service.

Group Captain Cox Opens Picton Fair

Picton, Oct. 2—Group Captain J. Cox, D.F.C., officer commanding No. 31 Bombing and Gunnery School, R.A.F., here, officially opened Picton Fair this afternoon. Opening ceremonies followed a parade of two thousand school children from town and county led by Midland Regiment Band of Kingston.

The fair continues tomorrow when three horse races and a county horse race will be the main attraction, along with the Trenton R.C.A.F. Band.

Group Captain Cox referred to the outstanding war record of Prince Edward County and the part the children are playing by collecting salvage, raising funds for patriotic purposes, sewing and knitting for the Red Cross and buying War Saving Stamps. He urged a continuance of work on the home front as a vital factor in the war effort.

Farmers were praised by S. P. Dodds, president of the Fair Board. "We as farmers are proud of the fact that Canadian farmers have met, by work and sacrifice, every food war quota to date. This has been done despite the labor shortage. They have done it for returns on a level far short of parity with other groups. They have done it out of devotion to a humanitarian purpose and a patriotic ideal," said the president, who also referred to the value of fall fairs.

Fine Exhibits

Exhibits in all classes are up to par despite the fact farmers had little time to prepare exhibits. A severe frost though costing the farmers thousands of dollars in produce, aided the fair by enabling them to take a holiday.

A new feature is a County School Fair with hundreds of pieces of art, writing, woodwork and other articles as well as a variety of pets.

In keeping with the times, displays of war work are predominant. Extensive exhibits of completed work are shown by the Red Cross, I.O.D.E., Navy League, Legion Ladies' Auxiliary and Salvation Army.

Other organizations with displays publicizing their work are Picton Public Health Nurse, Prince Edward War Savings Committee, St. John's Ambulance Division.

Many Model Planes

That the young boys are air-minded is seen in the big display of model planes.

Ladies' work entries are large, all baking has been done by using substitutes for sugar, entry of roots and vegetables is very large, the fruit display is in keeping with this fruit centre, flowers are a little less numerous due to the frost but plants make up for any deficiency, a collection of oddities contains many freaks in vegetables and other lines.

While the horse show is as good as ever, cattle entries are down. Poultry, sheep and swine classes are well filled.

Entertainment is provided by a good midway.

Directors feel that they have the most interesting fair in years and expect a record crowd tomorrow.

may, in history, even mark its turning point," and added, "Canadians paid a price but its always necessary to pay for information. The prices sometimes are big."

"The Nazis are gangsters who must be cleaned up and cleaned out," said Col. Ralston as the men doffed their tin hats and cheered. Then he asked the men the names of their home towns and what they had done at Dieppe.

Present were French-Canadians, members of the south Saskatchewan Regiment. Camerons, Royal Canadian Engineers, members of a field ambulance unit and gunners of a Canadian field regiment.

At a rendezous in a southern English village he met Gen. Crerar and a division commander and his staff.

British Troops Hold Position On Egyptian Front

(By FRANK L. MARTIN)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Cairo, Oct. 2 (AP) — A declaration by Lt.-Gen. B. L. Montgomery today that his 8th. Army is preparing for the "next round" in the battle of Egypt gave added significance to a sudden thrust in which British forces, striking at dawn, gained a strategic elevation and wiped out a small salient held by the Axis in the central sector of the El Alamein front.

In this operation, carried out on Wednesday and described as "strictly local," the British forces pinched off a wedge which had existed around the Bir El Munassib depression since Rommel's recent frustrated attempt to break thru' toward Alexandria and the valley of the Nile.

Axis Loses Fairly High Ground

This line-straightening move drove the Axis forces back from fairly high ground at the lip of the depression, gaining for the British forces an elevation commanding battlelines extending southward toward El Hamelant.

Gen. Montgomery's statement came as he pinned the Victoria Cross, the Empire's highest decoration, on a New Zealand sergeant.

"We are preparing for the next round, in which I am sure New Zealanders will play an important part," he said.

The end of summer on the barren North African desert brought the general expectation that the El Alamein front would not long remain quiet.

Prospect of Fighting

Military informants agreed that the present situation there was satisfactory to neither the British nor the Axis, and Rommel's presence this week in Berlin was interpreted to mean that fighting in Egypt will be one of the German high command's major preoccupations this autumn and winter.

Recent information from the Balkans told of continued heavy movement of military supplies toward Greece and Crete for transshipment to North Africa.

But a substantial portion of this flow is finding its way to the bottom of the Mediterranean as a result of air and submarine attacks. Much also is being destroyed in continuous raids on Tobruk and Bengasi.

Axis Fails in Counter Attacks

A British communique said that Axis forces failed in counter-attacks to regain positions lost to the British army in the central sector of the El Alamein front and that the British forces consolidated their hold on the new-won ground yesterday.

Six Axis planes were shot down by Allied airmen warding off dive-bombing assaults on the British troops and the enemy pilots forced to jettison their bombs on their own lines.

Axis artillery also shelled the British lines ineffectively on Thursday after fighting had raged through Wednesday.

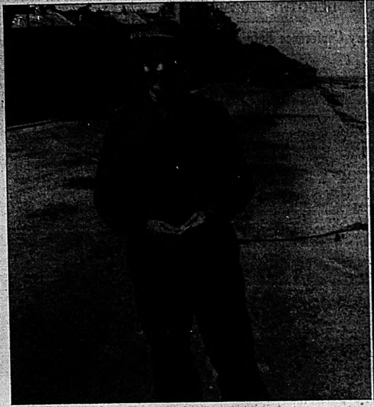
Never an Officer More Highly Thought of By Men Than V.C. Winner



Lieut.-Col. Merritt photographed on manoeuvres "Somewhere in England" last July when he and his unit were training intensively for the assault upon Dieppe. It was at Dieppe that he won the Victoria Cross.

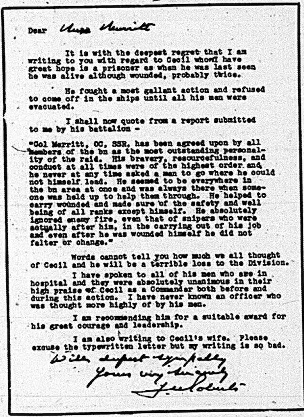
This smiling soldier today holds the highest tribute of a grateful Empire yet accorded a Canadian in this war, for the masterly service he performed at Dieppe while leading his unit, the South Saskatchewan Regiment.

He never asked a man to go where he could not, himself, lead. Thus did Lt.-Col. Merritt's battalion report to headquarters upon his resourcefulness at Dieppe. Here he is with a fellow officer pausing for a chat along a peaceful English lane.

Three members of the Merritt family now overseas. Canada's new V.C. winner, Lt.-Col. C. C. I. Merritt, his sister, Mrs. Jack MacMillan, with the Canadian Mechanized Transport, and his brother, Lt. Bill Merritt, with the Seaforth Highlanders of Canada.

"... He Did Not Falter Or Change"



Dear Mrs Merritt

It is with the deepest regret that I am writing to you with regard to Cecil whom I have great hope is a prisoner as when he was last seen he was alive although wounded, probably twice.

He fought a most gallant action and refused to come off in the ships until all his men were evacuated.

I shall now quote from a report submitted to me by his battalion -

"Col Merritt, OC, SSR, has been agreed upon by all members of the bn as the most outstanding personality of the raid. His bravery, resourcefulness, and conduct at all times were of the highest order and he never at any time asked a man to go where he could not himself lead. He seemed to be everywhere in the bn area at once and was always there when someone was held up to help them through. He helped to carry wounded and made sure of the safety and well being of all ranks except himself. He absolutely ignored enemy fire, even that of snipers who were actually after him, in the carrying out of his job and even after he was wounded himself he did not falter or change."

Words cannot tell you how much we all thought of Cecil and he will be a terrible loss to the Division.

I have spoken to all of his men who are in hospital and they were absolutely unanimous in their high praise of Cecil as a Commander both before and during this action. I have never known an officer who was thought more highly of by his men.

I am recommending him for a suitable award for his great courage and leadership.

I am also writing to Cecil's wife. Please excuse the typewritten letter but my writing is so bad.

With deepest sympathy
Yours very sincerely
J H Roberts

Writing to the wife of the V. C. winner, Major-General J. H. Roberts, D.S.O., Commander of the Operation, indicated he planned to recommend Merritt for "a suitable award." Above is a photostatic copy of his letter.

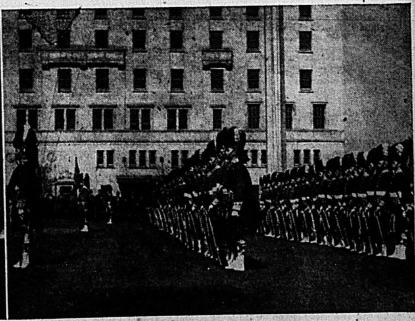
Lieut.-Col. Merritt's family were overjoyed to hear of his award. Left to right: His youngest son, Peter, aged two years, nine months; his wife, the former Grace Bone, of Belleville; his mother, Mrs. Cecil Mack Merritt, of Vancouver, B.C.; and eldest son, Cecil, aged three years, nine months.

The V. C. winner's devotion to duty on the shores of Dieppe was inherent. His father, Captain Cecil Merritt, also of the famed Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, was killed in action during the Battle of Ypres in 1915.



When serving in the Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, Col. Merritt, shown at extreme left, was with the Guard of Honor that attended Lord Bessborough, former Governor-General of Canada, during his visit to Vancouver, B.C. Captain of a Vancouver football championship team he was a graduate of Royal Military College, Kingston.

Canadian Soldiers Decorated

The list of decorations awarded to the Canadians who fought in the battle of the Beaches of Dieppe is a long one containing the names of one hundred and seventy - eight officers, non-commissioned officers and men. The list announced today is headed by the first Victoria Cross awarded in this war to a Canadian and the soldier honored is a native of Vancouver, Lt.-Col. C. C. I. Merritt, whose wife is a Belleville girl, the former Grace Bone, and is living here with her two sons. His mother, Mrs. Cecil Mack Merritt of Vancouver, is also in this city. Lt.-Co. Merritt is singled out "for matchless gallantry and inspiring leadership." He comes on both sides of his family of a line of soldiers and persons who have played a notable part in Canada. His father, Captain Merritt, was killed while serving with the Canadians in the first great action in which Canadians fought in the First World War at Ypres. Col. Merritt is believed slightly wounded and is a prisoner in the hands of the Germans since Dieppe. His wife and mother have in recent weeks had their anxiety allayed as he was first reported as missing, then news came of his being a prisoner of war and now the announcement of the highest honor "for valour" which anyone in the British Empire can merit has come to inspire them and make them proud of the gallant husband and son.

The name of Lt.-Col. Merritt is associated in the list with the names of 177 heroes, twelve officers receiving the D.S.O., twelve N.C.O.'s and men the D.C.M., 16 officers the M.C., 45 of other ranks the M.M. and 92 officers and men mentioned in dispatches. The citations give some hint of the deeds of heroes performed on that nineteenth day of August, 1942.

The story of Dieppe has been told in graphic words by the correspondents who there saw the first great land action in which Canadians formed the greater part of the attacking force, in the stories told by the men who returned wounded or unhurt to Britain, in letters home from the boys and in the list of casualties, particularly in missing and as prisoners of war, and latest is the list of decorations to emphasize the deeds of heroism and leadership there performed for the sake of freedom.

Canadians knew their sons would fight gallantly on the field of honor and they know they have upheld and will uphold the highest traditions of the race in honor and courage in the face of the enemy.

The memory of the deeds of the men who fought at Dieppe will never pass out of the hearts of Canadians. Rather will they become another symbol of Canada in the world as the men who have fought for their freedom. Their influence on the men who are now serving and will serve in battle is an inspiration which promises that when the war's story is fully told Canadians will have played their part worthily and in a way fitting the race and the freedom for which they battle. Dieppe is a symbol of achievement which will bear fruit in the days ahead and a symbol of the march of the United Nations on Berlin and the other Nazi capitals.

Nazi Infamy

The depth of Nazi infamy was again reached the other day when a German bomber attacked an English schoolhouse in a small town and killed a large number of schoolboys.

This deed is to be linked with the machine-gunning of civilians on streets of English towns or in the country fields. It is to be linked with the butchery which goes on under Hitler's authority in occupied Europe. It is what the German Nazi will do anywhere and everywhere—a wilful act destroying the innocence and beauty of life.

The madness of the Hun is shown in this that he flouts the punishment to come for his crimes. No man unless filled with the spirit of evil, could do such a deed and expect that he can escape the judgment of this world and of the world-to-be.

To will and not to do when there is opportunity is in reality not to will; and to love what is good and not to do it is in reality not to love it.—Swedenborg.

WHEE! THE PEOPLE!

They're under my feet when I walk about town,
And I am oftentimes under theirs,
And when I am footsore and want to sit down
They seem to possess all the chairs.

When famished from hunger I visit the bean'ry,
And tho it be early or late,
I find that the people have filled up the scen'ry,
And so I stay hungry, or wait.

I invade a bus with the urgent desire
To decrease the load on my feet,
And e'en though I'm shoved about till I perspire,
I'm seldom shoved into a seat.

But while with all people I may not agree
As to what is sound or unsound,
I realize, too, just how lonesome 'twould be Without any people around.

CARELESS TALK

A Naval Intelligence officer has appealed to 400 publicans and barmen in Glasgow to stop careless talking on their premises.

The publicans had been invited to a cinema meeting by Rear-Admiral Troup, Flag Officer of the Western Approaches, as part of a campaign against fifth columnists, potential saboteurs, and "armchair spies."

Lieut. G. C. Clairmonte, of Naval Intelligence, told the publicans:

"It is in the bars and pubs of the country that the enemy get most of their information.

"A word of warning from a barman who hears a Service man speak about the wrong things, and a ship might be saved or even a convoy said unmolested.

"People think that the fifth column only applies to other countries. Don't you believe it," he continued, and told how in 1923 several thousand "nice friendly people had been encouraged to enter the country from Germany when Britain had what was called a domestic problem.

"It was part of their job to make friends who would be useful to Germany when the time came.

Hidden Enemy.

"When war broke out," he said, "there were 70,000 German-speaking aliens in Britain. Multiply that by six — six being the average number of friends each alien would make — and there is our fifth column today.

"They are at this moment fighting for Germany in our very midst, putting out information about us and our supplies.

"They are people just like you and me. We meet them every day.

"During the past 12 months," added Lieutenant Clairmonte, "a number of people in the country have lost their identity cards.

"Where do you think the cards are?" he asked. "For what object will they be used when the time comes?"

Lieut. Clairmonte said that for 12 days before the Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, and Prinz Eugen left Brest there was no shore leave, embarkation leave, "or other sob stuff like that" for the German sailors.

No one was allowed within three-quarters of a mile of the ships under pain of death. No one knew when they would sail except the three commanding officers and they could not talk if they wanted to.

"A perfect state of security was maintained — admittedly by force . . but Germany still has those three powerful men-of-war to fight again. — Daily Mail.

PERSUASIVE

This Week.

—Recently Eric Knight, author of "This Above All" among other successes, gave a talk in the hospital of the small Pennsylvania town near where he lives. He spoke eloquently on the need for everyone to pitch in and do his bit for the war effort — every American, he said, must give until it hurts.

A few days later a friend met Knight and said: "That certainly was an impressive speech you made."

Knight laughed: "I agree. Do you know who was really impressed by that speech? —I was. It sounded so good while I was making it that when I finished I gave my brand-new car to the Ambulance Corps."

Coal passed over the market scales and was delivered to citizens to day. This is the first time in many months that the scales have been used for weighing hard coal. The price has been set at $16. a ton for hard coal and is under the supervision of the City Fuel Controller. This price is 50 cents a ton higher than in Toronto. It is explained that the freight charge per ton is 60 cents higher to Belleville than to Toronto and an additional charge here for weighing at the market scales. More coal is on the way to this port.

AXIS PROGRAM

All that the Axis stands for,
Is tyranny, hate and greed;
Youth to be cannon fodder;
Women more lads to breed,
Soldiers for Hitler's service,
Servants for Hitler's crew
And why they salute "Der Fuehrer"
Is something I wish I knew.

All that the Axis offers
Is hunger and want and pain
And poverty and starvation
And slavery's clanking chain.
Be done with the God you worship;
Have done with his morals, too!
And why they support "Der Fuehrer"
Is something I wish I knew.

All that the Axis stands for
Is horror and filth and crime!
An end to the rites of marriage,
A stop to the church bell's chime;
Return to a life barbaric,
All serfs, but a favored few!
And why they adore "Der Fuehrer"
Is something I wish I knew.

Military Conference Before Hitler's Speech

New York, Oct. 2—

Fedor von Bock. Again, Mein Fuehrer, I advise you what I advised last November before the disastrous winter campaign in Russia. We shall go on the defensive.

Hitler: Not before we have taken Stalingrad.

Bock: The conquest of Stalingrad is useless except as a strategical point from which to pursue the campaign further. But our offensive has lost its momentum, and we cannot stay in Stalingrad the whole winter. It will be worse than last year.

Hitler: "Worse things cannot and will not come any more. That we conquered last winter and the German front lines were finally maintained and that we could attack again this spring . . ."

Bock: "That is to say, in the early summer."

Hitler: "That, I believe, is proof that Providence was satisfied with the German people."

Bock: The German people are grumbling. "When one man becomes rich at the cost of others, he gets, in the best case, some hours' arrest or some weeks' or months' prison, and lives afterward better than every soldier on the front."

Destruction to Be General.

Hitler: "That's in England. In Germany there's no place for criminals or good-for- nothings who destroy the nation. We'll see to it that not only the decent shall die on the front, but also the indecent at home shall not survive this time. We'll destroy pitilessly every saboteur of the community."

Bock: The destruction of the German people is being take care of by the R.A.F.

Hitler: "I must assure the front how tremendously courageous this German hinterland is . . . how it suffers the hardships of this war."

Bock: "I know a Frisian city which I wanted to evacuate a long time ago because it had been attacked again and again. I wanted to take away the children, to bring them into security—and the women. But it was impossible."

Hitler: "They came back again and again, and it was impossible to remove them, in spite of the fact that this city suffered so much. They know that either we will win victory all together, or we will perish all together."

Second-Front Question

Bock: Mein Fuehrer, we must plan the strategy for the next year. "If we advance a thousand kilometres, that is nothing. That is a positive failure. If we, for instance, during the last few months—in the few months during which one is at all capable of waging war in such country—if we then advanced to the Don and down that stream, and finally reached the Volga—if we continuously storm Stalingrad—"

Hitler: "Which we shall also take —you may depend on it".

Bock: "Then all that means nothing. The second front will come. The second front is already marching ahead".

Hitler: "I do not mean to say that we do not prepare ourselves of course for a second front". But where and when will it start?

Bock: "Churchill says: "We shall leave it to the Germans to worry and think, you are right".

Bock: "If I had an opponent of adequate scope, of real military size, then I could actually calculate approximately where he would attack. . . ."

Idiocy Is Disagreeable

Hitler: "You are an idiot. "If one has before one military idiots, in such a case one can't guess where they will attack! That might actually be the craziest undertaking!"

Bock: "And that is the only disagreeable factor".

Hitler "One never knows in the case of these mentally diseased persons what they are actually about to do next."

Bock: "For that we naturally must now prepare ourselves in all places". We ought to withdraw in the East to normal lines.

Rommel: "There are people on the side of our opponents who say 'Why then do they stop suddenly?'"

Bock: "Because we are careful."

Hitler: "We do not run to the very end in order to be forced to run backward afterward."

Keitel: "Because we halt so long at any given place until we have our supply lines in complete order."

Bock (dryly): "People who are not military schooled cannot, naturally, grasp that fact. That's why they have no successes."

Unique in History.

Hitler (sarcastically): "People, however, who have undergone only a little military education will admit that all that we took in the past few months merely "in the terms of space is unique in the history of the world. There might be among us some old reactionary philistines who would say, 'Now, what, after all, is all that? Already, they have been standing still for eight days.' Well, now, my dear philistine, you are really the one whom we need most! You should go out there and regulate traffic for us!"

(Exit Bock.)

Keitel: "In the first place, under all circumstances, we must hold . . . whatever must be held. That is to say, we must let the others attack as much as they wish..."

* * Everything in this column which appears in quotes, whether in the mouth of Hitler, Bock, Keitel or Rommel, is directly quoted from the Hitler speech of Sept. 30.

A Keep Well Crusade

It is estimated that by the end of 1942, about one-third of American physicians and dentists will be in the armed forces. Just one minute's thought about this brings home the startling truth that many individuals and many whole communities may be without a physician or dentist for the duration of the war.

When we remember that at least one half of the patients who consult a physician have no organic disease, but have various symptoms which keep them from being at their best physically, then a large percentage of the patients who consult a physician would not need to do so if they knew how to live properly.

In an effort two maintain the health of the individual and the community and to lighten the burden of physicians and dentists who must carry the increased load, the Institute of Life Insurance has published an excellent poster "Keep Well Crusade." The poster outlines 5 Simple Health Rules which, if faithfully followed, will conserve the health of the nation on the home front. These rules are:

1. Eat right: milk, butter, eggs, fish, meat, cheese, beans, peas, fruit, green leafy vegetables and the yellow ones whole-grain or enriched cereals and bread—these are the key foods. Eat plenty of them. And eat three meals a day.

2. Get Your Rest. Regularity counts most. You can't catch up on lost sleep or missed relaxation. Try to keep on a regular schedule every day. Take it easy for a little while after lunch and dinner. Go to bed on time, get up on time.

3. See your Doctor (and Dentist) once a year You have your car checked and serviced every thousand miles. Do as much for your body. Physicians (and dentists) can prevent many diseases and illness for both children and grownups nowadays. Give your doctor a chance now: before you get sick go to see him.

4. Keep Clean. Plenty of baths, lots of soap. Clean hands, clothes, houses, beds. Get fresh air, sunshine. Drink lots of water.

5. Play Some Each Day. Romp with the family, visit friends, take walks, play games—or do whatever you like to give your mind and body a rest from the daily grind on the job.

All physicians will endorse this Keep Well Crusade and the five simple rules. These rules should maintain the health and morale of the individual and the nation at large.

Conboy Says Beef May be Added To Rationed Foods

Toronto, Oct. 2. (CP)— Mayor Fred Conboy of Toronto said here today that by the end of the week 'beef may be added" to the foodstuffs rationed in Canada.

Mayor Conboy spoke following his return from Ottawa where he attended an executive meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors at which plans for establishing local rationing boards were laid.

GRAMMATICAL ERROR

Every once in a while somebody gets exercised about the phrase "grammatical error" and writes a letter to the editor about it.

Recently our esteemed contemporary Robert Ripley went so far as to proclaim: "There is no such thing as a 'grammatical error. It should read: 'ungrammatical error.'"

This conclusion is absurd on the face of it. "Ungrammatical construction" or "ungrammatical language" may be all right; but "ungrammatical error" doesn't make sense and has no standing in the English language whatever.

Some reputable writers hold that "grammatical error" in the sense of "an error in grammar" violates precision and is incorrect, because "grammar" means "in accordance with the principles or rules of grammar" and accordingly an error cannot be grammatical.

The propriety of the phrase, however, is no longer questioned by the majority of good writers and speakers.

The objection to "grammatical error" is based on the mistaken notion that the adjective "grammatical" has only one meaning, namely, "in accordance with the principles or rules of grammar."

As a matter of fact the word now also means "pertaining to grammar," a meaning that is recognized by all unabridged English dictionaries.

Because a word has one meaning is no reason why it may not acquire another. Language is in a state of constant change and growth and frequently an expression that is erroneous in its inception becomes correct by long usage.

The final arbiter of propriety in language is good usage and good usage has decreed that the convenient and expressive phrase "grammatical error" means "an error in grammar," for which it is a proper substitute.

A similar objection has been made to the phrase "bad grammar." When used to mean "ungrammatical" or an "ungrammatical construction" the expression is, strictly speaking, a logical absurdity provided we construe "grammar" in its narrowest sense. But "bad grammar," like "grammatical error," while erroneous in its conception, is an expressive, convenient and clear phrase that has been accepted by long usage.

The English language is a living organism and refuses to be put into a strait jacket by the purists.

12 D.C.M.'s AWARDED

(By FRANK FLAHERTY)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 2.— (CP)— Gallantry in the face of the enemy during the Battle of Dieppe brought decorations to 178 Canadian soldiers today.

The Department of National Defence topped the first big list of honors for the Canadian Army in the Second Great War with the award of the Victoria Cross to Lt.-Col. C. C. I. Merritt of Vancouver and Belleville, Ont., the man who waved his helmet as he led his troops across a bullet swept bridge and now is a prisoner of war.

The Battle of Dieppe gave the army its chance to share in the decorations which have been handed out from time to time since the start of the war to men of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force as a result of gallant conduct in widely scattered operations. It was the second big and costly battle waged by the Canadian army, the first being the battle of Hong Kong in December last year.

The blackout of Japanese occupation and capture, however, descended on Hong Kong and its defenders and no information became available to the authorities on which to base awards.

Col. Merritt was the sole winner of the Victoria Cross, the Empire's highest award for valor, but 12 officers received the Distinguished Service Order, the next ranking decoration, and 12 non-commissioned officers and men the Distinguished Conduct Medal, its equivalent for non-commissioned rank.

The Military Cross was awarded to 16 officers and its equivalent non-commissioned award, the Military Medal, to 45 men.

The decoration "Mentioned In Dispatches" was awarded to 24 officers and 66 other ranks, including four officers and one other rank who were killed in action or have since died of wounds.

The Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders of Winnipeg, the unit which went ashore through a bridgehead established by the South Saskatchewan Regiment at Pourville to the west of Dieppe, drew the largest number of awards of any unit. The Camerons fought their way some two miles inland and received a total of 24 awards.

Maj.-Gen. J. H. Roberts of Vancouver, commander of the military force at Dieppe, received the Distinguished Service Order, as did his Second-in-Command, Brig. Churchill Mann of Toronto.

Brig. Sherwood Lett of Vancouver, who was wounded, also received the D.S.O., and other recipients were Lt.-Col. Dollard Menard of Quebec, officer commanding Les Fusiliers Mont-Royal, who is a prisoner; Lt.-Col. John Begg of Calgary, officer commanding the Calgary Tank Regiment; Lt.-Col. A. H. Fraser of Ottawa, who has since been appointed to Command the Royal Regiment succeeding Lt.-Col. Douglas E. Catto of Toronto, who was taken prisoner; Lt.-Col. D. G. Cunningham of Kingston, Ont., a brigade staff officer; Lt.-Col. D. H. King of Halifax, another staff officer; Maj. J. E. McRae of Weyburn, Sask., of the South Saskatchewan Regiment; Maj. A. D. Law of Winnipeg, of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders; Maj. W. D. Whittaker of the Royal Hamilton Light Infantry; and Maj. E. P. Garneau of Montreal, a staff officer.

Followed Intensity of Fighting

Roughly the decorations followed the intensity of the fighting to which the units were exposed as the units which drew most of the decorations were those with the heaviest casualties.

The Central Ontario Regiment casualty list which includes those from the Royal Regiment of Toronto and the Royal Regiment of Canada (totalling 1,056 to date) was the heaviest of any of the regional groups under which casualties are listed and both these regiments drew decorations in sizeable number.

The Queen's Own Camerons of Winnipeg, which led in honors, and was the only Manitoba Regiment in the battle, was fourth in number of casualties.

The Western Ontario Regiment whose unit in the battle was the Essex Scottish of Windsor, was second in severity of casualties and broke even with the South Saskatchewan Regiment in honors.

Every Man

wives, mothers and sweethearts of the gallant boys of his regiment, who lie now in Dieppe. My heart goes out to those mothers and wives whose men are reported missing, and from whom no word has been received".

"While I thrilled to the news that my husband had won the Victoria Cross, the greatest thrill I received was the news that he was alive after being reported missing."

"I am proud of my husband, even if he did disobey my orders to look after himself and not to bother with any V.C.'s" Mrs. Merritt smiled. "But I am, also, proud of the fine men who went up the beaches with him and stayed with him until the withdrawal".

Being the wife of Canada's first Victoria Cross winner, is not exactly an easy lot for the first few days at least, Mrs. Merritt said. "There has been so much said and written about Cecil that much of the thrill of hearing about the award had gone when the news came".

"I think Cecil will agree with me when I say the less said about it the better".

"There were other fine men at Dieppe, and I think that every man who went up the Beaches won a Victoria Cross".

"Not For Personal Glory"

Agreeing with this statement was Mrs. Charles Mack Merritt, mother of the Dieppe hero, and widow of Col. Merritt's father, the late Captain C. M. Merritt, killed in action with his regiment the 16th Seaforth Highlanders of Vancouver, in the early part of 1915.

In a beautiful tribute to the sterling qualities of her here son she said simply, "Cecil's aim was not for personal glory, but the glory of the cause."

"Naturally, I am proud", she said, "but when so many fine men are over there, all doing their duty in a splendid manner, giving their lives for their country, it doesn't seem fair to pick out one and give him all the glory'. I am sure those splendid members of the Saskatchewan Regiment and other units, were as much a hero as anyone. My heart goes out to their relatives. I [illegible] thankful that Cecil is alive, but like Grace cannot help but think of the fine lads who will never come back".

Military Family

Lieutenant-Colonel Merritt comes from a family rich in military tradition. His father was associated with things military since early boyhood. Farther back his forebears number a general and other high ranking military officers.

A brother, Lieutenant William Merritt, is with the Seaforth Highlanders of Vancouver in England. His only sister, Beatrice, not to be outdone in point of service by her husband, Dr. McMillan, with the R.C.A.M.C., in England, and her two army brothers, underwent training as an ambulance driver and is now doing that work overseas.

Yesterday marked a red-letter day in the history of the Bone family here. Jamieson Bone, naturally elated with the honor bestowed upon a gallant son-in-law, stated, "My wife will be delighted. Today is her birthday, and I can think of no better birthday present that the news of Cecil's award. And I'm not saying this from the traditional Scottish angle".

Recently Mr. Bone received the news that a nephew serving in the Royal Air Force in England, had been awarded the Distinguished Flying Medal for gallantry in action. Mr. Bone's brother, Herbert, is chief of customs at Dover, England, and has remained there with his family since the war started through the raids and shelling that occur quite frequently over the south of England city.

Younger Son of V. C. Winner More Interested in His Lunch Than in News of Father's Award

Two husky young gentlemen played on a Charles Street lawn this morning, oblivious to the fact that the name of their daddy is on Canada's lips today.

They were Cecil, three years and nine months old and Peter, one year younger, sons of Lieutenant-Colonel C. C. Merritt, Canada's first Victoria Cross winner in this war, and Mrs. Merritt, the former Grace Bone.

Cecil, a sturdy young fellow, is the third of the Merritt family to bear that name in line. He played with his younger brother, and was apparently wondering what the sudden interest in his family was about, but seemed more particularly interested in his lunch.

Peter, who bears a strong resemblance to his hero daddy, took everything in his baby stride. He has never seen his father for he was born in January 1940, one month after Col. Merritt left for overseas with his regiment.

They waved gaily to their grandfather, Jamieson Bone, and exhibited a sudden interest in a trip to the family summer home. Both are exceptionally healthy children, who will, in all likelihood, follow in the military footsteps of an illustrious father and forebears.

12 Canadian Officers Awarded Distinguished Service Order For Bravery in Dieppe Raid

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Following are the citations for the twelve Canadian officers awarded the Distinguished Service Order for bravery in face of the enemy during the August 19 Dieppe operation:

BEGG, JOHN, Lt.-Col., Calgary:

This officer, who was second-in-command of the 14th. Canadian Tank Regiment, was on L.C.T. during the attack on Dieppe August 19th., 1942. This craft came under a barrage of heavy shell and machine gun fire from shore position. At great personal risk and with complete disregard for his own safety he succeeded in having two of the three tanks on board land safely.

Lt.-Col. Begg directed the handling of these tanks under a frontal fire so intense that many members of the landing party and crew were killed or seriously injured, the craft itself being almost completely destroyed . . . when the commanding officer of the regiment was reported missing, Lt.-Col. Begg assumed command.

CUNNINGHAM, DOUGLAS GORDON, Lt.-Col., Calgary:

Major (now Lt.-Col.) Cunningham, A/BM of Canadian infantry Brigade . . . continuously manned the rear link set to force headquarters ship from the beginning of the operation at 0430 hours (4.30 a.m.) until the evacuation was completed at 1200 hours (12 noon) . . Major Cunningham had played an essential part in the preparations for the raid and this combined with his courage and determination during the actual operation constitutes a very important contribution to its success.

FRASER, ARTHUR HAYWARD, Lt.-Col., Ottawa:

This officer, Brigade Major a Canadian Infantry Brigade (now lieutenant-colonel) displayed the greatest coolness and steadiness under heavy fire. When the destruction of one of his wireless sets left him without contact with force headquarters he transferred himself, his staff and another set to the L. C. T. carrying Headquarters of a Canadian Infantry Brigade and thus re-established touch between the force headquarters and the units of his brigade.

On this L.C.T. although under intense fire from the shore and bombardment from the air he maintained effective contact with his battalions and was mainly responsible for the successful re-embarkation from Green Beach.

GARNEAU, MARIE EDMUND, Acting Major., Montreal:

Major Garneau, while acting staff captain of a Canadian Infantry Brigade, was on board his L.C.T., when all the engine room staff were put out of action and the craft was drifting helplessly, Major Garneau . . got the engines running. Not only did he reorganize the A.A. (anti-aircraft) defence of the ship after heavy casualties had been suffered, but he himself acted for a time as No. 2 gunner on one of the ship's pom-poms.

KING, ROBERT DOUGLAS, Lt.-Col., Halifax:

General List (Princess Louise Fusiliers), the assistant adjutant and quartermaster general Lt.-Col. King . . . took charge of an L. C. T. after Brigadier Lett (Brig. Sherwood Lett of Vancouver) was wounded . . as A.A. and Q.M.G. he spent long hours on the necessary preparations for the operation, an administrative task which he performed in a most efficient manner.

There is no doubt that Col. King's devotion to duty contributed very considerably to the success of our attack on Dieppe.

LAW, ANDREW THOMPSON, Major, St. James, Man.:

Major Andrew Thompson Law was second in command of the regiment (Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders of Canada) .. the commanding officer having been killed on landing, Major Law took over the unit. This officer successfully and efficiently fought his units approximately two miles inland, inflicting heavy casualties on the enemy. On the order for withdrawal being given, Major Law fought a rearguard action to the beach, and so effectively controlled the battalion that approximately 80 per cent of the personnel were intact at this time.

LETT, SHERWOOD, Brig., M.C., Vancouver:

An officer commanding a Canadian Infantry Brigade . . . Brig. Lett . . spent long periods at the wireless sets sending and transmitting orders and reports under heavy machine gun, mortar and shell fire. During one of the most intense periods of enemy barrage while working at an exposed wireless set he was seriously wounded.

MANN, CLARENCE CHURCHILL, Brig., Toronto:

Brig. Mann was the military commander aboard the second headquarters ship.

Although his ship was repeatedly attacked and hit, Brig. Mann continued to carry on his duties.

Brig. Mann's work in preparing the detailed military plans for the Dieppe enterprise was most exceptional.

MENARD, DOLLARD, Lt.-Col., Quebec:

Landing with the first attacking parties he was wounded almost from the beginning, but he continued to direct the operations

St. George's Anglican Church was the scene of a wedding of wide interest last Thursday morning when Miss Phyllis Gertrude Little, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orloff B. Little, York Road, Trenton, became the bride of Pilot Officer Donald M. Armstrong, R.C.A.F., Dartmouth, N.S., eldest son of Mr and Mrs. R. M. Armstrong, 126 King Street, Trenton. The groom is the grandson of the late Canon F. Armstrong, who was rector of St. George's Anglican Church for forty years. Rev. J. L. Hutchinson officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a Chinese tan suit with brown accessories and corsage of yellow roses. The matron of honour, Mrs. W. A. Brennan, wore a brown tweed suit, matching accessories and corsage of pink roses. Pilot Officer W. A. Brennan of the R.C.A.F., Dartmouth, N.S., formerly of Trenton and Belleville, was best man.

Following the ceremony, the reception was held at the White House, Brighton, where the bride's mother received the guests including the immediate families of the bride and groom, wearing a black dress, matching accessories and corsage of red roses. She was assisted by the groom's mother in a black dress, matching accessories and corsage of yellow roses.

Bad Eating Habits Mar Beauty

By HELEN FOLLETT

TELL ME, pretty maiden, are you a snatch-and-run eater? Thousands of girls are holding down jobs for the first time; they'd better learn how to take care of their health, so they won't play out in a hurry. It won't do to start the day with a cup of coffee and one eye on the clock. Take time to eat fruit, cereal and egg. Remember, it's a long time since dinner the night before; the digestive works are looking for fodder. If you're to get through the day without fatigue, you'll have to partake of good grubs that will stick to your ribs.

If you're going to use up energy — and active young women seem to do that faster than coal heavers—you have to stoke up on materials that build energy. That's just horse sense. Yet many women, young and older, are suffering from physical ills and beauty griefs that can be traced directly to bad eating habits.

Mealtime should be a rest time. Every meal should be a pleasant period of relaxation. There should be no excitement or hurry to disturb the nervous and digestive systems, to interfere with normal assimilation.

Seek a quiet spot for luncheon, you workers and wage earners. Order simple, nourishing food. Have a maintenance meal. You will get it in a sandwich, a salad and a glass of milk. Eat slowly. Don't think about the job.

The process of digestion is regulated to a certain extent by the mental state, also by the sense of taste. The appearance of food, the manner in which it is served, affect the appetite.

Miscellaneous Shower

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

Will you answer some questions, please, about a bridal shower I am planning to give?

1.—If the wedding is to be in November, would October be appropriate for the shower?

2.—The shower will not be of any particular kind. What is such a shower called?

3.—Do you agree with me that a buffet would be the best kind of service? What would you suggest for refreshments?

4.—What kind of invitations should I send?

5.—Are toasts made at a shower?

Vivian

1.—Yes, some time in October would be an excellent time.

2.—When no special type of gift is to be named, the shower is called a "Miscellaneous Shower".

3.—Yes, by all means use the buffet service. If the shower is to be in the afternoon, a tea-menu is customary. For an evening shower, you might serve assorted sandwiches, ice cream and small cakes coffee, nuts, candy. Or, for a more elaborate menu, chicken a la king on toast; or chicken salad (always popular) with small hot biscuits or finger rolls; or cold sliced meats and a green or vegetable salad; or hot bouillon and then fruit salad.

4.—You can buy very attractive special shower invitations. Or you can write your invitations, as so many people do now on the inside pages of Informals". You may write personal notes on semi-note paper.

5. It will be charming to have a toast.

Country Club Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am planning an afternoon wedding at a Country Club, with a reception immediately following the ceremony. In the invitations is it necessary to mention the reception, or is that implied by the fact that the wedding is to take place in a Country Club? How should the invitations read?

Martha

No, in the invitations, it would not be necessary to mention the reception, since, as in a home wedding, this invitation would be implied.

Your invitation should read:

Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Dexter request the pleasure of your company
at the marriage of their daughter Martha
to
Mr. John Worthy
Tuesday, the tenth of November at four o'clock
The Dale Country Club

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Wants Convalescent Home

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm a married woman of 39. Have raised my two children and now they're married and have homes of their own. My husband is so mean to me, and has mistreated me so much in the past years, that I've been very ill, having undergone two operations. He doesn't pay his bills, is behind on the house rent, and I'm not yet able to get a job.

I don't believe in divorce, but what can I do? Is there any place one can go to be cared for until they're strong enough to work. My husband never wants to go places with me, but tries to force me to go places I disapprove of.

V. M.

Better inquire of the hospitals where you've been operated upon, if they know of such a convalescent home as you require. You do not state in your letter whether you expect to pay for such care or not. If you can afford to pay, there are, of course, places to which they could direct you.

The Salvation Army is often helpful in suggesting places and so is the Red Cross. After your health is restored, there are a great many jobs open for a woman of 39. Best wishes.

Is Her Husband at the Silly Age?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My husband is employed in an office where there are many men and women. I've had reasons to believe that my husband is unfaithful. He is 60 years old. Do you think he's took old to be a play boy or is he just at the silly stage when he can't see when a woman in making a fool of him?

He has a good position and I feel the women are just after his money. What should I do? I can't ignore it. I am thinking of a divorce.

Worried.

Not every man at the "silly age" is wholly accountable for his butterfly flights. Medical science has now decided that those antics, amusing to outsiders and often tragic to the victim himself, are frequently an unavoidable process like teething or voice-changing.

A good wife is she who stands by with tolerance and patience, and waits for the giddy old party to emerge from this encore adolescence. No, I wouldn't get a divorce just yet. Some fine morning he's likely to wake up and understand what the gold-diggers are really after.

Intestinal Ailment Likened To Weakened Rubber Tree

When the wall of a rubber tire becomes weakened, a little outpouching may occur at the weakened spot. This same thing may happen in the large intestine. The outpouchings are known as diverticula, and as many as 400 may occur in one person, and their size may vary from a grain of wheat to a walnut.

Diverticula usually are round, but when they get larger they have the shape of a pear. In many instances they become inflamed and the disorder is then known as diverticulitis. The inflammation is often long-continued or chronic. The condition tends to come on slowly and the patient suffers from attacks of colicky pain in the abdomen and constipation. The abdomen becomes swollen, and there is usually pain in the left lower part. From time to time acute attacks of pain may occur which are quite severe. In some instances there may be blood present in the bowel movements. When these acute attacks come on, proper treatment will usually bring about relief. In occasional instances, one of the diverticula may rupture or break open. Of course, in such cases immediate operation is necessary.

If the diverticula are not inflamed, surgical treatment, as a rule, is not required. However, when they become inflamed, removal of the affected part of the bowel may be necessary, although not in all instances.

Dr. A. Ceballos of Argentina has found that in some instances the use of diathermy to the abdomen brought relief to the patients. These treatments may be given several times a day. Diathermy is a form of electrical treatment which produces heat deep in the tissues. When attacks of pain occur frequently and there is danger that one of the diverticula may rupture, operation should be carried out.

To make a definite diagnosis of diverticulitis, the X-ray is especially useful. In carrying out the X-ray examination, the patient is given barium sulphate by mouth, and X-ray plates are taken after a period of 36, 48 and 72 hours.

Once a diagnosis has been made, the decision can be reached as to what treatment can be employed. By the use of the proper diet, usually a bland one, the pain and constipation may often be controlled. A bland diet is one which contains no rough or irritating foods, such as whole-grain cereals, raw vegetables, or fruits, or highly-seasoned foods. If, however, with diet, rest and the diathermy treatments the condition is not controlled, the physician will decide whether or not an operation is necessary.

C.W.S.F. Affords For Women Pleasant Training

Unheralded and unsung the Belleville Company of the Canadian Women's Service Force are doing a quiet efficient job in training young women of the city and district for duty to their community and country.

Trim in their khaki uniforms a number of young women are undergoing training under the unit's commanding officer Major and her efficient staff of officers.

But like their fellow units in the Reserve Army here, the company needs recruits to bring it to war strength.

The C.W.S.F. offers fine basic training for young women who intend to enter the Canadian Women's Army Corps, Canada's active service women's force They are given courses in First Aid; Air Raid Precaution; Map Reading; Gas Drill, use of Respirator; Motor Mechanics, Wireless and Rifle practice.

In addition to this the aim of the C.W.S.F. is to give community service, and is ready and willing at all times to co-operate with any organization or community enterprise that demands their services.

Recruits must be dependable women or girls from 18 to 45; be ready to observe and obey the rules laid down by the organization; be willing to give freely of their spare time to assist in any public service.

The C.W.S.F. appeals to all eligible women and girls to join the company now, and while carrying on civilian occupations, to train and prepare for any emergency.

Fashion Flashes

STILL TOPS with the college girl trade is the silk dirndl skirt and separate blouse ensemble. A typical model is of black faille, made with unpressed pleats worked into fullness at the waistline and worn with a black and white checked gingham blouse edged with self ruffles.

Popularity generally means plenty of dates, and an ideal date suit is a model in brocaded taffeta with velvet collar and cuffs. Rhinestone set plastic buttons set off the black fabric. Crisp peplum on the snug jacket.

There's no stopping the fad for bows and flowers and such for the hair. An autumn version of the hair ornament craze is a headdress composed of three tiny fuchsia or purple ostrich plumes combined with black velvet and black bows and attached to a comb.

A good combination of the pretty and the practical highlights the new bags. Black broadcloth softly shirred and combined with red calfskin is used for a big bag. The red calfskin makes the sides and extends into rigid square handles. Lining of red leather for the centre compartment.

Easy does it when the wind comes blustering around chilly corners. That's when a girl wants a good head-hugging hat rather than some thing extravagant. Purple felt is used for a flat but full beret held to one side by a turquoise rope twist from which is suspended a cluster of turquoise cotton cord balls.

The seal of approval is on Alaska seal, that most beautiful and silky of pelts. A beautiful new coat is of Alaska seal cut on boxy double-breasted lines with high closing and big flap pockets. The matara seal shades from brown to a delicate silver sheen, and there are silver buttons.

Jap Attempt To Take Port Has Backfired

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Japanese troops which "sit on New Guinea," as Hitler put it in his Berlin broadcast, probably do not wholly share either his confidence that "they will get all New Guinea into their possession" or his scornful contempt for General MacArthur.

It is conceivable Japanese leadership is more concerned immediately over extricating its mountain-climbing forces on New Guinea from what begins to look like a MacArthur-prepared trap than with way and means of taking over the whole island.

There is no doubt that the Japanese attempt to take Port Moresby by crossing the Owen Stanley range from bases on the north coast of New Guinea has backfired. Whether the Japanse retreat nothward is actually an attempt to withdraw to the bomb-battered beach heads of the expendition for a sea evacuation or a withdrawal to less exposed defense positions is not yet clear. Surrender of Nauro Ridge without a fight, permitting an almost unopposed Australian advance of another ten miles, has the look of an escape effort in which the prime factor is speed at the price of abandoned stores and installations.

Perilous Stab.

New Guinea developments tend to explain to this writer something that greatly puzzled him weeks ago. The first word of the Japanese break-through by way of a 6,600-foot mountain pass to begin a descent upon Port Moresby came from MacArthur's headquarters, not Japan. That was on Sept. 10. It said Australian defenders of the heights had been outflanked both north and south of the gap, the enemy driving through beyond a point on the south flank of the ridge.

It seemed a perilous stab. Japanese forces had penetrated the tremendous mountain barrier where only jungle trails were available and ultimately were within thirty-two miles, air line, of Port Moresby. Yet the MacArthur bulletin was quite bland about it. It was obvious that the general had not thrown heavy reserves into action to hold the pass despite his readily available superior forces and shorter and less difficult lines of communication. It invited the conclusion that he had some other defense design.

The obvious weakness of the Japanese thrust was its extended and difficult supply lines. They ran from the Buna beach head more than 100 miles over narrow trails and through rugged country. Every manpower replacement, every gun or round of ammunition, every pound of food for the troops at the front had to make that passage over the pass. And every foot of the way as well as the sea approaches to Buna was under relatively close-range American-Australian bomb fire.

Never Let Up.

MacArthur's recognition of that weakness was promptly demonstrated. His air force began a harrying attack on those supply lines that has never let up. His planes combed the sea approaches. It is a reasonable guess that Japanese losses, in tying to maintain the threat to Port Moresby by that route were out of all proportion to the gravity of the threat itself.

If it turns out that Tokyo has ordered withdrawal and evacuation, risking a Japanese Dunkirk, there will be justification for the thought that actually this, like the Milne Bay action, was a trap. In effect, he offered just enough resistance in the mountain passes to lure the foe on.

A sea withdrawal by the Japanese from their New Guinea beach heads would require concentration of an umbrella of fighting planes to protect embarking troops and their shipping from Australian-American bombers primed to deal with them. And to provide that air prrotection from carriers, not from close-up shore bases as was the British protection at Dunkirk, would seem to be all but impossible for the Japanese.

For that reason, if no other, the Japanese withdrawal seems likely to be only to defensive positions supported by much shorter communication lines. Even so, the sting has been taken out of that Nipponese enterprise.

JAPS WITHDRAW

Allied planes meanwhile attacked the enemy's bases at Salamaua and Buna on the east coast of New Guinea and hammered the mountain trails along which the Japanese were trying to keep supplies moving up to the front.

A special target was the Wairopi bridge over the Kumasi river, which was attacked four times yesterday. A large section of the span, damaged the previous day and partly repaired by the Japanese during the night, was reported destroyed by high explosives.

The bridge is the bottleneck of the Japanese supply line, for it offers the only means of moving heavy material across the rain-swollen Kumasi river, and hence has been the object of daily attacks by Allied airmen.

Relatively little action was reported elsewhere in the southwest Pacific, though Allied air scouts maintained ceaseless patrols over the waters northeast and northwest of Australia.

PRESIDENT OF C.P. SPEAKS IN LONDON

Freedom of Press Places Heavy Responsibility on Newspapers Says Arthur Ford

London, Ont., Oct. 2 (CP)—Freedom of the press in democracies places a heavy responsibility on newspapers in wartime not only to bolster the morale of the people but to maintain a balance of just criticism, Arthur R. Ford, editor-in-chief of the London Free Press and President of The Canadian Press today told a service club (Kiwanis) here.

One of the first acts of dictatorships is to seize control of the press and make it part of the government for purely propaganda purposes, said Mr. Ford.

By contrast, newspapers of the democracies "have a duty to perform if we feel a government and the authorities should be criticized," he said.

"But it is difficult at times," he added, "to draw the line between thorough support of the war effort and proper constructive criticism."

Pointing out that this autumn marks the 25th anniversary of the founding of The Canadian Press, the co-operative news gathering organization of Canadian daily newspapers, Mr. Ford told how in 1907 western papers formed the first All-Canadian News Association. The need of a national organization reached a climax in the war year of 1917 when Canadian Press was born.

How News Gathered

Mr. Ford told how news across the Dominion, from the United States and from overseas flows into the head office of The Canadian Press at Toronto.

The Canadian Press operates its own Washington and New York bureaux and in wartime today there are eight men in the London, Eng., bureau which covers not only British events but specializes in reporting the activities of the Canadian armed forces overseas.

Mr. Ford praised the story of the Dieppe raid by Ross Munro, Canadian Press War Correspndent who accompanied Dominion soldiers to France on the combined operations. Telling of the cost of getting war news, he said cable tolls on Munro's story were $1,500.

The Ottawa Bureau of The Canadian Press offers the reading public impartial and non-partisan news of the national scene.

"The fair and unbiased coverage has made for independent thinking in Canada and our British service has brought us closer to the heart of the Empire."

Later, in order to gain a better point of vantage, he crept forward to higher ground but was again wounded. When finally taken on board an L.C.T., although wounded for the fifth time, he still insisted on organizing A. A. (anti-aircraft) defence and looking after his men.

McRAE, JAMES EARL, Major, Victoria:

Major McRae was second-in-command of the South Saskatchewan Regiment .. during the withdrawal to the beach, Major McRae ... although under intense and continuous enemy fire, encouraged the wounded to carry on and directed the flow of men along under cover of the wall. On reaching the L.C.A., although himself in deep water and thoroughly exhausted, he assisted the wounded to climb aboard.

ROBERTS, JOHN HAMILTON, Maj.-Gen., M. C., Vancouver:

Maj-Gen. Roberts, as military commander in the operation against Dieppe, was responsible for the planning, preparation and execution of the military portion of this hazardous and gallantly-conducted operation.

During the entire action on Aug. 19, Maj.-Gen. Roberts remained on the bridge of the destroyer in order that he might better observe the conduct of the operation. During this time the destroyer was frequently under fire from shore batteries and was repeatedly dive bombed and machine gunned from the air. Numerous casualties were caused to those on board including several on the bridge itself ...

When the withdrawal commenced Maj.-Gen. Roberts requested the naval force commander that the destroyer close the beaches in order to provide additional covering fire to assist in evacuation of all possible military personnel. This manoeuvre was carried out twice, under heavy fire and until Maj-Gen. Roberts was personally convinced that no further personnel could be taken out.

WHITAKER, WILLIAM DENIS, Maj., Toronto:

Capt. (now Maj.) Whitaker commanded the protective platoon of battalion headquarters, Royal Hamilton Light Infantry ... the task of this party was to clear the building around St. Remy Church and there establish battalion headquarters.

Capt. Whitaker landed with the first wave, directed the cutting of both rows of wire on the beach and organized the necessary covering fire for B Company's advance on the casino. He himself then proceeded to the casino with his party where, after clearing the building and organizing a defence against counter attack, he led a large party of all elements of the battalion towards the town. Later he directed the withdrawal of a great portion of the battalion from the town and casino to the beach and supervised their re-embarkation.

Woman Acquitted On Murder Charge

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 2 —(CP)— Nineteen-year-old Mrs. Julia Castellani, charged with murdering her infant daughter here the night of June 16, was freed last night after her acquittal by a supreme court jury at the end of a four-day trial.

When the jury brought in its verdict after deliberating three hours, Mr. Justice A. W. Greene discharged the young woman from the prisoner's dock. Her husband, 20-year-old Angelo Castellani, shook hands with each of the jurors.

"This is a most distressing case to try," said Mr. Justice Greene in his charge to the jury, "and no doubt you gentlemen have felt that as well as the rest of us."

The young woman took the witness stand late yesterday when the Crown had closed its case and tearfully denied strangling her baby.

Questioned by Mr. Walsh regarding a statement taken by police in which she is alleged to have said she strangled the infant, Mrs. Castellani cried: "I didn't kill that baby. I loved that baby."

Before she was called to the stand, Defence Counsel questioned Dr. Roderick Finlayson, a psychiatrist. He testified the shock of finding her baby dead could cause severe emotional stress, which might result in amnesia.

Dr. Finlayson said it would be possible for the woman to be in such a condition as to sucuse herself. In this case he did not think she would ever be able to recall the facts entirely. She had not been able to tell him clearly what had happened in several interviews.

FDR FINDS WAR

He saw production lines turning out endless streams of tanks, bombers, ships and ammunition.

The president got the idea, he said, that these arsenals were operating at 94 or 95 per cent of efficiency, that they were approaching the production goals set for them, and that employers and employees were doing their utmost to obtain maximum output.

Considered Pretty Good

He said he considered 94 or 95 per cent pretty good and added it would be impossible to reach 100 per cent before the end of the year —because of all kinds of causes, little and big, the majority unpreventable.

He said he was going to ask for a great deal more in the next few months, indicating the goals would be set higher than they were last January.

At that time he called for 60,000 planes in 1942 and 125,000 in 1943, 45,000 tanks this year and 85,000 next, 20,000 anti-aircraft guns in 1942 and 35,000 next year, 8,000,000 tons of shipping this year and 10,000,000 in 1943. The shipping totals later were boosted.

Mr. Roosevelt described the war spirit of the country as a whole as much alive — except in Washington.

Spirit Down in Capital

Contending the war spirit here was far less than in the rest of the country, he spread the blame for this condition among portions of Congress, the press and radio, and administration officials.

Seeking to justify their service to the war effort, he said, numerous legislators pry into matters better left to military experts who know more about them.

He accused a minority of the press and radio, chiefly commentators and columnists, of disseminating reports not based on fact and telling the people things that don't exist. This minority, he said, seems to be unfamiliar with the country, just as are some congressmen, and it thinks in local terms and distributes sententious news.

He declined to mention any names.

As for government officials, he said some fifth-rate executives or publicity seekers, whose points of view are not rounded out, make picturesque speeches or act out of a belief their specialties are not receiving due emphasis. He recommended they button their lips.

The kind of spirit needed in Washington, he said, is that which he learned about in some of the agricultural areas. As he travelled he said, he had heard how the local bankers, druggists, newspaper editors and children were going out into the fields and getting in the crops to help farmers unable to obtain labor.

Women Given Praise

In the war factories themselves he noted what he termed amazing numbers of women workers plying skilled trades. Plant managers informed him, he said, that in another year probably half the workers would be women.

At some spots along the way, the President saw evidence of a deadly seriousness about the war. He observed row after row of air-raid shelters, camouflaged fields and buildings, smudge pots ready to erupt smoke screens, canopies of barrage balloons, some of them obtained from Britain under lend-lease arrangements, and nests of machine-guns and anti-aircraft weapons.

At naval hospitals Mr. Roosevelt met men wounded in all the major battles of the Pacific. At Bremerton Navy Yard he saw wounds being healed on vessels damaged at Pearl Harbor. At Mare Island Navy Yard he saw an American submarine with nine significant Japanese naval flags painted on her conning tower, symbols of that many victims, as well as a two-man Jap sub which failed in its mission at Pearl Harbor.

Poultry Market Remains Firm

Toronto, Oct. 2 — (CP) — The dressed poultry market has maintained its firmness, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reports. Receipts of chicken and fowl, which are showing an improved quality, are heavy but supplies are still insufficient to meet all enquiries. Although arrivals have been heavier than the past two weeks, they are kept well cleared mostly by local consumer demand and out-of-town enquiry which is good and cannot be entirely taken care of. This week's shipments consisted of small lots to Newfoundland. Broiler receipts are light.

There has been some enquiry into the price of fresh turkeys for the Thanksgiving trade from producers and country shippers. Some have been bought to arrive next week at 35 cents lb., A grade. The enquiries for frozen turkeys has not been so brisk this week but storage stocks here are reported almost depleted.

One car of western turkeys has been bought to arrive next week costing grade A 32 cents lb., grade B 30 cents lb., grade C 27 cents lb.

Dealers are quoting producers and country shippers:

Chicken: grade A milk-fed, 5 lbs. and over 28 1-2—29, 4 1-2 to 5 lbs. 27-28, 4 to 4 1-2 lbs. 27, under 4 lbs. 25; grade B milk-fed, 5 lbs. and over 27 1-2—28, 4 1-2 to 5 lbs. 26-27, 4 to 4 1-2 lbs. 25-26, under 4 lbs. 25; grade A, 5 lbs. and over 27 1-2-28, 4 1-2 to 5 lbs. 26.

GERMANS

Cost Heavy Casualties

The newspaper estimated the Nazi offensive in the northwestern suburbs gained only 200 or 300 yards, and said these cost the invaders heavy casualties. The fighting in that area was reported centred about a settlement where the Russians had killed 900 of the enemy in two days.

Inside the city, penetrated previously from the south and west, the Germans were said to be fortifying every house left standing. Dispatches said the invaders were felling the trees which made Stalingrad one of the garden cities of the Soviet Union to clear fields of fire for their guns.

Despite this work, however, the army newspaper Red Star said Russian troops ejected the Germans progressively from their footholds with the guard division, commanded by a Gen. Rodintsev, taking the lead in sweeping through the Nazi lines.

Block Enemy Tanks

Soviet troops both north and south of Stalingrad were converting farm houses and cabins into defensive works, fighting off the enemy from rooftops and chimneys.

The Russians struck at the Germans again in several areas northwest of Stalingrad and Isvestia said they destroyed 42 pillboxes, 39 firing points and several artillery batteries and killed 2,000 Germans at one point.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda reported the Germans were forced to abandon several hills and ravines under Russian attacks in that region.

Start Campaign To Curtail Less Essential Labor

Seigniory Club, Que., Oct. 1—(CP)—Finance Minister Ilsley told the Canadian Chamber of Commerce convention here today the Federal government has determined on a vigorous program to curtail the less essential use of labor, and will carry it through "even if it means business casualties".

"Naturally we will be as fair as we can and as reasonable as possible, but we must take drastic steps quickly, and I would be misleading you if I suggested that this program is going to involve as little pain as, say, the price-ceiling policy", the Minister said.

Mr. Ilsley said he wished to emphasize the "unpleasant" necessity of cutting down the use of labor outside war industry, and to assure his hearers that there was no alternative. He invited the co-operation of businessmen in working out with the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, National Selective Service and other agencies the most effective means of bringing about the reduction in the use of labor with the least possible injury to the consumer, to the workman, and to business.

The new program of labor curtailment was even more serious and more difficult than the anti-inflation campaign.

"There are no unemployed left that are able to work in Canada today, as far as I am able to find out, except a number of women whom we may be able to persuade into work from their homes.

Must Face Labor Shortage.

"Despite this acute labor shortage and the absence of unemployment we must find substantially more manpower for the armed services, as well as additional labor for war production. Under the circumstances, there is no alternative but to take labor from non-essential uses in order to put it into war industries and to replace men going into the forces.

"It is no secret, I believe, that several lines of war production now are being held up by labor shortages, and that in such critical lines as base metal production we have actually had to reduce output because of the shortage of men.

"We cannot tolerate this situation as long as any labor is being used for other than really essential purposes."

Mr. Ilsley praised the work of Donald Gordon, chairman of the Prices Board, Hector McKinnon, chairman of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation, G. W. Spinney, chairman of the National War Finance Committee, and Dr. W. C. Clark, deputy finance minister, who had spoken previously at the Chamber of Commerce gathering.

Of Dr. Clark he said: "I owe a debt—and this nation owes a debt—so great and so varied that we must wait for history to recognize it when confidences can be revealed."

The minister reviewed price control and said its application "has been one continual headache for all those charged with responsibility or it sounds very simple to say we will just pass a law saying prices shall not rise above the levels they have reached — but we find that the country is full of special situations that seem to require adjustment," he said. "Everyone — or nearly everyone — supports the principle of the price ceiling — but many feel their own positions are exceptional and should receive exceptional treatment.

Cardinals Have Yanks Worried As They Take Second Game Of Series by Count of 4 to 3

WIN IN EIGHTH

By GAYLE TALBOT

Associated Press Sport Writer

En route with world series teams, Oct. 2 —(AP) — St. Louis Cardinals in particular and National Leaguers in general felt that they at least had those "unbeatable" New York Yankees badly worried today as the two world series rivals rolled toward Yankee Stadium and a resumption of hostilities tomorrow in the house that Babe Ruth built.

From the way the happy Cards were taking on over their 4-3 victory in yesterday's second game at St. Louis and the big plans they were making for taking the Yanks over the hurdles the next three days on their home grounds, anyone would have thought Billy Southworth's scrappy youngsters were at least a couple of games in front instead of merely having deadlocked the play-off at a victory apiece.

"We've got 'em plenty worried," one after another of the Red Birds chortled in the diner. "And they're going to get worse worried every game we give it to 'em from here on out," added Mort Cooper, ace of the Cards' mound staff, who was knocked loose by the Yanks in the series opener Wednesday. Mort apparently had forgotten all about his own misfortune in his glee at rookie Johnny Beazley's triumph over Joe McCarthy's sluggers yesterday.

McCarthy Complains of Hit

Ford Frick, National League president, attached great significance to the fact that McCarthy stalked out frequently to complain of decisions in yesterday's defeat, and that he was sore as a wet hen because George Kirowski's timely triple that scored the Cardinals' third run was ruled a fair ball.

"Ordinarily, Joe doesn't leave that dugout three times a season," Frick said. "When he starts arguing the way he did yesterday you can bet he has something on his mind besides a baseball cap."

The Cards were inclined to think they had got in a jab on the Yanks that would rankle and fester and bring important results in the remaining games when Enos (Country) Slaughter dashed on to third after slugging his double off Ernie Bonham in the eighth inning. The Yanks for the moment looked slightly bewildered, the Cards declared, recalling that shortstop Phil Rizzuto let a simple throw-in go through him on the play.

For all of the 3-year-old Beazley's stout hearted pitching in the pinches yesterday (the Yankees had men on base in every inning except two), the consensus in the club car last night was that Slaughter gave the outstanding performance in the Cardinals' triumph. They were glad to see it happen to him, too, because he had committed a two-run muff of a fly ball in the opening game.

A Proper Setting

The stage was set properly for the Cards' top hitter when he went to bat with two out in the eighth. The score was tied at 3-3, Charley Keller just having blasted a home run onto the roof of the right-field pavillion to climax a three-run Yankee rally that had wiped out a game-long Cardinal lead. The 34,000-odd fans in Sportsman's Park were plenty blue, about ready to give up.

Then Country connected solidly, lacing a clean double down the right foul line. Roy Cullenbine fielded it well and made a good throw to Rizzuto at second. But the Little Phil must have been jittery at the sight of Slaughter churning past him, and he let the ball trickle through his legs. That was all Slaughter needed. By the time the Yanks collected the ball, as well as themselves, Slaughter was perched on third with the winning run.

Musial Comes Through

Stan Musial, another Card freshman, then came through with his first safety of the series, a hard single over centre which Joe DiMaggio collared on about the second hop. Slaughter scored easily from third, but it was extremely doubtful he could have made it from second, DiMaggio's throwing wing being what it is.

And that wasn't the last of slaughter's inspiration. In the Yankee's ninth, he made what every baseball man the writer encountered last night declared was as great a throw as he ever hoped to see to prevent a tying Yankee run and perhaps save the day.

Bill Dickey, veteran Yank catcher, singled, and Tuck Stainback went in to run for him. Then Buddy Hassett delivered a deep single in Slaughter's direction and Stainback made the mistake of trying to make it to third. Slaughter whipped a long, beautiful "strike" to George Kurowski who was straddling the bag, and Stainback was well out. A moment later pinch-hitter Red Ruffing slammed a long fly to Slaughter against the wall on which Stainback certainly would have scored had he reached third safely.

Slaughter Gets Nod

So Slaughter got the nod over Beazley, despite the fact that the kid from Nashville, Tenn., turned in a superbly cool world series debut and thoroughly deserved to win. The Yankees menaced him right from the start and if there had been any "blow-up" in his system it had a world of opportunity to come out. But with the assistance of one fine double play in the fifth Johnny survived every menace until Keller caught hold of a low curve in the eighth.

Neither manager has named his starting pitcher for the third game at the Stadium tomorrow, though both promised to do so some time today. McCarthy's almost certain choice for the Yankees is Spud Chandler, while Southworth was torn between his two top left-handers, Max Lanier and Ernie White. The probability was it would be White, because he told Southworth his soupbone felt great last night.

WEST LACROSSE TEAM IS READY

New Westminster Salmonbellies Play Lachine in Semi-Finals

Montreal, Oct. 2 —(CP)— New Westminster Salmonbellies, bringing the Pacific Coast's bid east for the Dominion Lacrosse championship, prepared for their first test here tonight, when they clash with Lachine-ville St. Pierre in the openin game of a best-of-three semi-final affair.

Second game will be played Sunday with a third, if necessary, Monday. The winner then goes to Toronto to meet Mimico-Brampton for the coveted Mann Cup in a two-out-of-three series which begins Oct. 7.

Both teams put finishing touches to preparations last night when they held workouts at the nearby Lachine arena where the series will be played.

Displaying a big, young fast club, the Salmonbellies impressed the Railbirds and feeling was that Lachine was going to have its work cut out if it intended taking another step along the title trail.

Both clubs are allowed replacements under a war emergency rule permitting substitutes for players lost to the armed forces and unable to get leave.

The St. Pierre outfit, which packs some of the best lacrosse talent under one heading here for some time, will lineup with four former Ontario players. They are goaler "Chuck Gamache, Jock Dalbec and Rene Payette, last year with Cornwall and "Red" Storey, Toronto grid star.

New York, Oct. 2 — (AP) — New York doesn't show much outward excitement over a little thing like a world series, but just try to get a hotel room here for the weekend ... and the telephone company reports a jump of 100,000 calls during the time the ball games were on in St. Louis from folks who wanted to know the score ... looks as if it ought to be a great series for guys who never get anywhere on time. Most of the excitement in the opener was in that ninth inning and yesterday the big noise was in the eighth ... and whatever became of that idea that Cullenbine and Hassett were a couple of weak spots in the Yanks' lineup?

Babe Pinelli, the National League umpire, says the test of a great ball club is its behavior on the field ... if that's so, the Yanks and Cards must be a couple of great clubs.

Carrying out Mayor Fiorello (Butch) La Guardia's orders to bear down on horse-race gambling, a few cops took over the office of a local racing wire service yesterday. When the customers began asking why the entries hadn't been sent on the wires, the only answer they got was "Ask Butch" ... Detroit Tigers haven't signed any players to 1943 contracts yet, preferring to wait and see what will happen before spring. And the Athletes were told to take their uniforms and equipment home with them.

Toronto, Oct 2. (CP)—Boxing is receiving increasing attention from sports officers in the Canadian armed forces. . . . Almost every inter-service show held in the last six months has been a thumping success. . . It has the color and bodily contact (that is a mild way, indeed, of describing it) that many other sports lack . . .It will take a long time, for Kingston, Ont., fans to forget the huge barefoot Swede who won the Ontario Military Heavyweight Crown there last Winter. . .The Toronto forces have had a couple of fight cards in the last two weeks, and both were good. . . . Harvey Dubs of Windsor, Ont., is handling the Toronto Navy's fight team.

Bill (Ottawa Journal) Westwick reports from his personal grapevine that Gordon Bruce (Boston Bruins) and Alan Kuntz (New York Rangers) will be with the Montreal Army entry in the Quebec Senior Hockey League this year. . . . Both are army lieutenants, stationed in Ottawa at present. . . . 'Twould be a good idea to get some of the professional stars out of the Ottawa district. . . There are so many there now there won't be enough teams to accommodate them all. . .Would be lowering the morale to have former N.H.L. stars riding the benches in an amateur league. . . CARDINAL RALLY NOT QUITE ENOUGH

This was one of the high spots in the thrilling ninth-inning rally staged by the St. Louis Cardinals in the first World Series game against the Yanks in St. Louis. Down seven to nothing starting the ninth the Red Birds suddenly came to life to hammer in four runs. Martin Marion of St. Louis slides into third to complete his triple which drove in W. Cooper and Saunders with the first Red Bird tallies. The rally fell 3 short of tying up the game.

BRANCH RICKEY SLATED TO SWITCH TO ANOTHER CLUB

Five-Year Contract With Cardinals Concludes This Season

STARTED FARM SYSTEM

(By HENRY B. JAMESON)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

St. Louis, Oct. 2. (AP)—Some time soon after the current World Series, if undenied rumors are true, there will come an announcement of the dissolving of one of the most famous partnerships in ball history—Sam Breadon and Branch Rickey of the Cardinals.

Rickey, the father of baseball's chain-store system, is slated to switch allegiance to another club, probably in the National League despite recurring reports that he may tie up with the St. Louis Browns. His five year contract as general manager of the Cardinals runs out the season.

Rickey and Breadon have been working together for 24 successful years—ever since Breadon, then an automobile dealer, invested $2,000 in the down-at-the-heels club and was promptly elected president.

From then on Breadon wrote the checks and Rickey did the miracle work. Just a farmer boy at heart, he soon inaugurated the famed baseball farm system, a scheme of developing his own players in the minor leagues and shuffling them along to the big time as they were needed.

The idea was poo-pooed at first. Yet other clubs looked twice and began doing it. None ever equalled the Cards, however. Their policy remained one of making ball players; not buying 'em.

And now that Sam and Branch have decided to come to the friendly parting of ways they could have found no more fitting time to close the books.

Their sixth pennant-winning team made up almost entirely of youngsters off the "farms", is in the midst of a ding-dong World Series and given an outside chance of ending the New York Yankees' long reign as unbeatable world champions.

Washington Senators Purchase Paul Dean

Washington Oct. 2 (AP)—The Washington Post said today it had been informed by Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington Senators Baseball Club, that he had bought Paul (Daffy) Dean, big right handed hurler, from Houston of the Texas League.

Griffith, the Post said, did not disclose the amount he paid for Dean.

The newspaper quoted Griffith as saying Dean won 19 out of 27 games last season. In his last major league appearance, the brother of Dizzy Dean performed with New York Giants in 1940, winning four and losing the same number.

World Series Notes

By FRANK HOOD

Associated Press Staff Writer

St. Louis, Oct. 2 — (AP)—Bosses Billy Southworth and Joe McCarthy, a couple of gents who generally play their cards close to the chest, both had aces trumped in the first world's series shuffle.

Mort Cooper, the St. Louis pitching ace, was trimmed in the opener, and big Ernie Bonham, bellcow of the Yanks' mound corps, got his ears pinned back in the second game by rookie Johnny Beazley.

Sudden thought: Everyone is weighing the possibility of the series scene shifting back to St. Louis after the three-day engagement at New York. So great has been the Yankee domination of the diamond sport that the only question heard was, "Can the Cards prolong the series?". Few persons seemed to realize the Red Birds not only could extend the games, but also have an opportunity to cop the classic at New York.

Strikes: Casey Stengel, manager of Boston Braves, called the turn on the Cardinals who run the bases like a dog with a tincan knotted to its tail.

"They might not be so hot at the plate," opined Casey, "but they sure've got a lot of strength in their ankles." ... Players of both teams hustled aboard the same New York bound train last night. It is the first time in the history of the series that the rival squads have travelled together ... Joe DiMaggio covered the whole outfield as he made sensational catches and fell one short of the series record for putouts by an outfielder.

London, Oct. 2—(CP)—Putting it mildly, Cpl. Otto Nordhagen Olsen of the R. C. A. F. is a husky with a checkered career. Right now he's at a physical training instructor's camp in Scotland, but listen:

Born 31 years ago in Norway, he won the National Norwegian junior speed skating championship at 14. He went to Canada two years later, choosing to be a machinist fitter and also a skater, wrestler, rower and paddler. He moved about Eastern Canada in pre-war years learning his trade, accumulating some 15 medals and spoons and 68 cups and trophies—and learning English. He worked at Niagara Falls, Ont., and Montreal, and was a policeman at Copper Cliff, Ont., for a year before enlistment.

He has held Ontario and Quebec provincial wrestling titles and was eliminated in the finals of the Olympic trials. In paddling Olsen placed on several winning teams including a team at the British Empire Games at Hamilton, Ont., in 1930. He rowed for Brockville, Ont., in 11 Eastern championships and in the Canadian Henley at Port Dalhousie, Ont.

Eldest of five brothers and sisters, Olsen's mother died in Oslo in May, 1940, while the German invasion was on. He enlisted as an armament instructor and came overseas last November.

Like father like son, they say, and Little Peter Richards has a boot up on his father's trade. Twelve-year-old offspring of Gordon Richards, Britain's champion jockey and rider for the King, Peter recently rode a racehorse for the first time and said only that "I'm very fond of riding and hope to make a good jockey like Daddy."

But an experienced trainer added to that. The 64-pound youngster, he said, "has wonderfully good hands and his seat is almost perfect. I think he will make a real jockey."

Peter probably will be apprenticed after this school term. His father began life as an office clerk and first rode at the age of 16 after answering an advertisement for stable boys.

WON FOR YANKS

Here Charlie Ruffing, the N.Y. Ruffing won the game, though he wasn't around at the finish, and for nearly eight innings he had a no-hit victory in sight. He weakened, but the Yanks won 7-4.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

WHEN THE NEW YORK YANKEES clinched their thirteenth American League championship at Cleveland last month, Joe McCarthy, the Yankees' pilot, broke a tie with Miller Huggins for most Yankee pennants. Miller had won six for the Yankees in 12 seasons, and now, as McCarthy completes his twelfth season, he has seven American League flags to his credit.

With another earlier National League pennant with the Cubs—in 1929—McCarthy now has eight major league pennants, and is right behind Joe's former boyhood idol, Connie Mack, who has nine, and two behind the major league record holder, the late John McGraw, who won ten pennants with the New York Giants.

MCCARTHY BOASTS OF A LONG list of managerial records, this year's flag being the sixth for Joe in seven years, equalling the record set by Harry Wright with Boston from 1872-78. McCarthy also leads all managers, past or present, with six world's championships, having passed Connie Mack when his club defeated Brooklyn last autumn. He is the only major league manager to win four straight world's championships and the only one to win four successive flags in the American League.

McCarthy also is the first manager to lead a team which has won over 100 games six times. It still is a disappointment to Joe that his 1938 team failed to reach 100 games. After that club clinched its pennant in mid-September, it went into a two-week slump, and finished with 99 victories, Joe's only winner out of the century-victory class.

CENTRAL ONTARIO HAS ONLY one team left in the Ontario Amateur Softball Association playdowns, namely the Oshawa Colts, "Soup" Campbell's nine that beat Kingston so badly here some weeks ago. In the first game of the Intermediate "A" finals the Colts beat the Guelph Lelands 6 to 2. The Colts had a rally and scored five runs in the seventh to win the first game at home, the second game scheduled to be played in Guelph Saturday. In the meantime the Oshawa Aces passed from the Junior O.A.S.A. picture losing a third and final game to Hamilton in the provincial finals. Yes, the Motor City Junior club that beat our Esquire kids so badly waltzed right through to the provincial junior mushball finals only to lose out to the Hamilton Concessions in a third and final game at Toronto. Finally, FO. Buff Horton's Trenton R.C.A.F. senior "B" team passed from the provincial picture, losing 7 to 0 to the Toronto St. Agnes in a final game at Oshawa.

REMEMBER WHEN NEW SALARIES governing Canadians playing professional hockey for United States teams, effective for the 1940-41 season, were announced at Ottawa two years ago today. The plan brought an estimated $500,000.00 in American funds into Canada.

IT SEEMS REFEREE PHIL Lawson got himself into some difficulties down in Ottawa earlier in the week and became so unpopular that Jan Gotch took a full swing at the lightweight Lawson and connected even more firmly than Earl McCready socked Al Dunlop here. Incidentally Gotch was matched with Johnny Gyroffy, the Winnipeg heavyweight who wrestled here several seasons ago. Johnny is at present stationed at Uplands, having enlisted in the R.C.A.F. this summer. Judging from the manner in which wrestling referees are being attacked of late, Promoter Frank Tunney might do worse than to experiment with two ring arbiters during his next show here Wednesday night. Local wrestling fans would welcome back Ali Adali, the Terrible Turk next week.

THIS AND THAT: THEY MIGHT sing praises of Johnny Beazley, the St. Louis Cardinals' wonder boy hurler for winning yesterday's world series on ten hits, but the real hero was Enos Slaughter, the Red Birds' sterling right fielder....It was Slaughter's superb fielding and base running that finally evened the count in baseball's annual clasic and evened the series at one all.... Speed around the base lines and Slaughter's deadly throwing of strikes from deep right field made it all even....There's no series today, but the squads resume battle in New York Saturday, Sunday and Monday....Johnny Beazley is the first world series rookie pitcher to win a game since Paul Dean turned the trick 'way back in 1934..It was the younger Dean's first year with the Cardinals also....If the 1942 series goes sufficiently long the take may yet reach the million dollar mark.

Wendell Willkie Now in Chungking

Chungking, China, Oct. 2—AP)—Wendell Willkie arrived in mid-afternoon in Chungking by air from Kuibyshev, Russia.

He left Kuibyshev last Monday and came to Chungking by way of Urumchi (Tihwa) in Sinkiang Province, Lanchow and Chengtu.

Welcoming him at the airfield were members of Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek's cabinet; Lt.-Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, chief of staff of Allied forces in China; and United States Ambassador Clarence E. Gauss; and other dignitaries.

"How do you do everybody. Glad to see you!" President Roosevelt's special representative called out as he stepped out of his plane.

Thousands Line Thoroughfares

Approximately 10,000 representatives of various organizations were on hand to greet him.

Thousands more lined the main thoroughfares to catch a glimpse of Willkie as he was driven to the residence prepared for him, behind gala aspect.

Willkie's arrival ended a period of strict secrecy concerning his whereabouts decreed by Chinese authorities for security reasons at the time he crossed the border.

He appeared tired from his long trip but was in good spirits. While Willkie's program was not definitely fixed, it was believed he would remain in China about two weeks. A government spokesman said he would be given full opportunity to acquaint himself with all aspects of China's war effort and would be given a chance to visit the various war fronts if he desired.

You can't go "ALL-OUT" If you feel "ALL-IN"

These days most people are working harder, worrying more, sleeping less. This strain on body and brain makes physical fitness easier to lose—harder to regain. Today's tense living lowers resistance—increases body and mental fatigue. Overwork; hasty meals; irregular hours; worry—any of these may upset proper kidney action.

When kidneys get out of order, excess acids and poisons remain in the system. Then backache, headache, rheumatic pain, disturbed rest or that "tired-all-the-time" feeling may soon follow. To help keep your kidneys in good order—to help guard against physical let-down—use Dodd's Kidney Pills, for over half a century a favourite remedy for faulty kidneys. Ask for Dodd's Kidney Pills at any drug counter. Look for the blue box with the red band. 126

George Formby

So packed is the story with mirth-evoking action that at times the laughter makes the ensuing dialogue almost inaudible. George has the role of a young assistant in the barber's shop of a department store. He also has a sheepish fondness for the shop's pretty young manicurist. In the hope of finding favour in her eyes and justify a supposed reputation for athletic prowess George enters the Keep Fit Competition conducted by a local newspaper. When it comes to rowing, if any, George picks on a punt as the safest medium, but Miss Manicure chooses a skiff, so George has to skiff for the lady's favour. In more than one sense George is much upset and when it comes to swimming, who is he, a beginner at the art, that he should be called upon to rescue a fat man from drowning! In the gymnasium further feats await him, inexpert though he is at parallel bars and the flying trapeze. Worse still George must ride a bull and as though that were not enough, finally is called on to fight a four rounds contest for the boxing championship of the county. Thanks to goodness and the now relenting manicure lady George is provided with a mascot and emerges the winner. Needless to say situation after situation evokes peals of laughter as the action grows faster and faster. A delightful uke song "Keep Fit" is specially notable among the musical numbers that adds to the entertainment this hit provides. "Keep Fit" is now in it's second week at the Uptown Theatre, Toronto. Making the entire program one long laugh show the second feature co-stars Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville in Hal Roach's new streamlined gag-packed comedy "Miss Polly". A Walt Disney Mickey Mouse cartoon is also presented. Saturday the performance is continuous and the serial "Adventures of Red Ryder" will be shown during the afternoon matinee.

AT THE BELLE

"The Magnificent Ambersons"

Romance, mystery, drama, comedy and adventure blend in the excellent two feature program now on the Belle Theatre screen, Booth Tarkington's Prize-winning novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons" was produced by Orson Welles, the man who made the best picture of 1941.

George Sanders, Lynn Bari and Jimmy Gleason are featured in "The Falcon Takes Over," the second feature attraction.

Irving Berlin's "Holiday Inn"

A musical show idea teeming with originality and packing more solid entertainment per foot than the movie public has been offered in a long time, is due at the Belle Theatre this week and when the long-awaited Irving Berlin's "Holiday Inn," bows into town with Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire, Marjorie Reynolds, Virginia Dale and Walter Abel.

The idea, born in the minds of Irving Berlin and Producer-director Mark Sandrich, was to make a picture revolving around our national holidays. This they have done in Paramount's "Holiday Inn," setting these holidays to music and wrapping around them a fascinating love story.

Crosby, as a night club singer, breaks away from his partners, Fred Astaire and Virginia Dale, because he's tired of grinding away at singing and dancing in these clubs. He's just plain lazy. So he retires to a Connecticut farm, but working it single-handed leaves no time at all even to look at a calendar, let alone do any celebrating. He conceives the idea of turning the farm into an inn to be open only on holidays, when guests will be fed and entertained with a floor show. There being only 15 important holidays during a year, Bing figures he can rest the other 350.

"Holiday Inn" sparkes with eleven great new Berlin tunes you've already been hearing, and two favorite old ones. The picture is said to represent the best efforts of Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire to date, which should make it an entertainment "must" for anybody and everybody.

A funny Popeye cartoon "Olive Oil and Water Don't Mix," and the Belle News of the world precede the feature attraction.

On Saturday afternoon Robert Stevens and Nell O'Day head a cast of favorites in the opening chapter of "Perils of the Royal Mounted" the year's best chapter play.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Romance On the Range"

The accent is on action in "Romance On the Range", the Republic western starring Roy Rogers which is now showing at the Capitol theatre. But plenty of comedy is also assured by the presence of such capable laugh-getters in the cast as George "Gabby" Hayes, Sally Payne, and Pat Brady.

Already well-known to the nation's millions of western fans is the bearded "Gabby," who furnishes comedy relief for all the Rogers pictures. In "Romance On the Range," he once more enacts his hilarious characterization of the cantankerous, woman-hating old cow-poke who thinks that women in general are much more dangerous than mere wolves, coyotes, or rattlesnakes.

Sally Payne has also appeared in many Rogers westerns. In "Romance On the Range" she carries on a comic romance with Pat Brady, a member of the famous musical organization the Sons of the Pioneers. The other members of the Sons of the Pioneers—Bob Nolan, Tim Spencer, Hugh Farr, Karl Farr, and Lloyd Perryman—enact "straight" characterizations.

"Fast and Furious"

A sparkling comedy-mystery laid amidst a glittering beauty pageant is to be seen at the Capitol theatre, where "Fast and Furious" opened yesterday. Ann Sothern, following her hit performance in "Maisie," makes a delightful screen wife for Franchot Tone, who returns to the screen in this film after a season on the Broadway stage.

Busby Berkeley, known for his direction of musical numbers, does an excellent job of sustaining the smart pace of the early scenes, and an all-star supporting cast is seen in Ruth Hussey, Lee Bowman, Allyn Joslyn, John Miljan, Bernard Nedell and Mary Beth Hughes. Credit also must go to the fine camera work of Ray June, and to the able producership of Frederick Stephani for making "Fast and Furious" one of the gayest and, withal, most thrilling pictures to have been seen in a long time.

REMEMBER WITHOUT WANTING

by MARGARET GORMAN NICHOLS

CHAPTER NINE

On a night in December Judith left the store and, finding the cold invigorating, decided to walk home. Delicate snowflakes which heightened her growing interest in Christmas, two weeks away, lay lightly on her tailored black coat and boyish, felt hat.

Nothing had altered between Max and her. The heights were still the topmost heights and time had escaped with unaccountable swiftness. Two and one half months since Phyllis and Ames had been married and since she and Max had begun to weave the pattern of all those vivid memories that warmed her now. Those long Sunday drives through the burst of color that had been Autumn; dinners at small quaint places; wine and music and Max's voice and Max's laughter and Max's nearness. A polo game. . .a football game. . .A Sunday in Atlantic City when they had walked beside the sea until the wind had driven them to an intimate and beautiful place for something warm to drink.

How little it mattered what they had said! How much it mattered what they had felt! The knowing that she had been richly and exquisitely happy and that his need of her was as acute as hers for him.

Still when they were not together, their lives diverged, for he was reticent to speak of what he did apart from her and the people he saw. And though that reticence puzzled her, she respected it, she told herself, and bit back questions. She was not to realise until later that rather than respect for his reticence it was fear that his answer would lessen her happiness, tangle her thoughts and dim their future away. And so she lived only for the "next time" she was to see him.

He had not spoken of marriage, and she wondered often if it had ever occurred to him to marry her. And while she told herself, still with firmness, that she did not want to marry him and that theirs was the better way, her need of him so grew that living became a mere existence when she wasn't with him. On one or two occasions when he had forgotten his wallet and she had waited in the car for him to go up to his hotel room to get it, she had wondered about the room in which he lived and, remembering her father's dependence upon her mother, had wondered how Max, a man alone, managed to be so completely self-sufficient.

All the men she had known, the men in her family, depended upon women to make them comfortable and to remind them of things they forgot. Not so Max. More than once she was tempted to ask him who darned his socks.

Also she did not know whether she was flattered or whether she resented that in his attitude toward her he was markedly patronizing. He was protective toward her who had never asked for protection, adoring, tender and ardent. Always Max remembered the so-important "little things." But away from him when she was thinking of him, she wondered whether he realized how young, how unlived, he made her feel.

It was not that he did not regard her as an intellectual or emotional equal. He did, she knew. It was just that he regarded her quite obviously as someone who had not quite grown up and whose naivete and freshness amused him and stimulated him and increased his devotion. It was always Max who reminded her gently to dress warmly, to bring an umbrella, to get enough sleep.

Phyllis marriage had not alienated her from her friends. Regularly she telephoned and met Judith and Emily for luncheon. The one dinner to which she had invited them—the steak was leathery, the potatoes burned—had been such a failure that she had not asked them again. Judith sensed in the recently—married Phyllis who slept until ten a smug pity for her two friends who had to terminate luncheon within an hour to hurry back to their offices while she had a long free afternoon before her.

Ames' name punctuated her conversation like too many commas, and Judith had come to think that Ames was a more prosperous young man than she believed, so beautifully was Phyllis dressed at all times and so carelessly did she spend his money.

Although Judith did not envy Phyllis' security, her leisure or her allowance, she suspected that Emily did, though there was nothing malicious in it. For apparently nothing had altered between Emily and Tim. Only Judith saw Emily pale in the morning after three hours' sleep, saw her worried look when the first of the month brought bills for dresses and hats and cosmetics, saw a look of desperation in her eyes replaced by a false radiance when Tim was present. But lovers they continued to be, joking, leaving a trail of laughter after them, talking long to each other over the telephone, their conversation candid and romantic and often absurd.

But Emily had never told him that she was spending more than she could afford for clothes and that the week she told him she must work at night she was actually sumering from a severe cold. She said to Judith, "Tim told me he'd never been ill a day in his life. I couldn't bear for him to see me like this. No, I don't want a doctor. I know what to do for myself. . . ." And when Tim had come again, he had no doubt attributed the feverish color in Emily's cheeks either to rouge or to her excitement in seeing him.

In the two and one half months Judith had been to her parents' home only once, and then had arrived late Saturday evening and had left early the next afternoon. She had seen only her family, explaining rather lamely, she knew, that lack of time would not permit her to be with them on Thanksgiving, a holiday over which they always made much ado and one which heretofore she had always shared with them.

She had spent Thanksgiving with Max. That was the day Emily had met him for the first time and Max had been charming though a little aloof and impatient to be going. But Max had said of Emily, "I like her, darling. You show your usual good sense in selecting a girl to live with you." And Emily had said of him, "He's fascinating, Judith.

She has made no plans for Christmas other than to buy gifts. No plans because Max seemed not to look beyond today and she was loath to question him. Of the approaching holiday he had said merely, "Nothing expensive for me, darling. I'll be furious if it is," and that had been all.

It was one of the many things she had come to know about him—that she must not interrogate him and that she must be ready on short notice to accept his decisions. Often she thought, not with resentment but with tenderness and amusement, "I always do what he wants me to do. I always fall in line with his wishes." Gently, she knew, but with undeniable firmness Max managed her.

Emily was preparing dinner in the kitchen.

"Max called," she said, turning away from the stove. "He said for you to call him as soon as you came in."

"I'll do it at once. I may not be in for dinner."

She went into the bedroom, hurriedly pulling off her hat and gloves and dialed his hotel.

"Max?"

"Yes, dear. I'm coming up for you in half an hour."

"I'm happily surprised. I didn't expect to see you tonight."

"I didn't expect you would either."

Max laughed then. "Which never makes up a dull pair."

"It's snowing."

"In half an hour."

When Emily came in the bedroom, Judith said, "I'm having dinner with Max. If I'd known earlier, it would have saved you the trouble."

"It doesn't matter. I'll run your bath and help you dress while we get a few dates straightened out. About Christmas. . .I'm not going home. I can't afford it."

"But your family. . .You've always gone home, Emily. I'll-"

"You'll loan me the money. I knew you'd say that. But thanks, no. Will you wear your new black dress? Max likes you in black, doesn't he? Your wardrobe has gone into mourning since you've known him. Here's your robe."

"You'll be with Tim on Christmas then?"

Emily stood very still. "No. Tim will be with his family and Jim and Lois Alexander are going to Jim's home in Kentucky. Christmas is only one day. Don't worry about me. I'm not going to make a fuss about it or feel sorry for myself."

"If I go home, you're going with me. You see, I don't know what Max is going to do."

Little Benny's Note Book

I was walking to the bus with pop on my way to school, and pop said, If he wasn't wearing a uniform I'd swear on a small stack of bibles that the man in front of us was Mr. Slocker. I never would of believed that 2 men could of had that same weak-kneed walk, he said.

Well G, pop, they haven't I mean it is Mr. Slocker, he's an officer now, he's a major I said, and pop said, Well that's a public disgrace and I'll say so privately. Well, if a chiseling old fraud like Slocker can wangle himself into a commision and we can still win the war, we're really a great country, he said.

Mr. Slocker being pop's least favorite person in the block and I said, G, pop, I bet he'll be so stuck now nobody'll even be able to talk to him.

Who the dooce would want to talk to that dessicated pain in the neck even if he was dolled up like a general with a sword in one hand and a flag in the other? pop said.

And we started to walk passed him pretending we didn't recognize him, and Mr. Slocker said, Good morning, Potts good morning.

Proving he wanted to be noticed in his uniform and pop said, Good morning, major, I'll excuse you for not saluting your superior officer, but after all I don't happen to be in uniform at the moment, and besides, perhaps you haven't even heard.

Heard what? What's this, what's that? Mr. Slocker said, and pop said, I dont think I'd better go into details. You know how it is with military secrets these days But it's quite okay, I'll excuse you, he said.

And he quick kept on going and got on his bus looking like somebody feeling better instead of worse, and I hurry up kept on going to school so Mr. Slocker couldn't ask me questions.

IN MEMORIAM

GIBSON — In loving memory of Sarah Emma Gibson, who died October 2nd., 1939.

Three years since that sad day
The Lord took our wonderful mother away.
The short time since seems an eternity,
However all is well, that is best for thee.

HANNA—In loving memory of a dear husband and father, John Herbert Hanna, who passed away October 2, 1941.

Peacefully sleeping, resting at last,

Canadian Fliers, Naval Personnel May Be Honored

Ottawa, Oct. 2 —(CP)— While Canadian army men were in action in the battle of Dieppe last August, Canadian fliers and Canadian naval personnel also played a part in the big combined-operations attack.

National defence headquarters today announced 178 decorations to army men who were in the hard-fought battle.

So far nine Canadian airmen have been decorated, though their awards were not directly related to the battle of Dieppe and some of the citations referred to service in other operations as well.

Some 100 officers and men of the Canadian navy, serving with the Royal Navy, were aboard ships engaged in the operation and although no naval decorations for Canadians have yet been announced there is a possibility there will be some.

Airmen whose citations mentioned service at Dieppe were Acting Sqdn. Ldr. B. Chadburn of Aurora and Oshawa, Ont.; Acting Sqdn. Ldr. Norman H. Bretz of Toronto; FO. T. A. Casey of Listowel, Ont.; FO. Don T. Casey of Listowel, Ont. Ont.; Acting Sqdn. Ldr. Leslie S. Ford of Liverpool, N. S.; PO. J. W. Reynolds of Pembroke, Ont.; Acting Sqdn Ldr. John C. Fee of Calgary, and Acting Flt. Lt. Frederick E. Green of Toronto, all of whom received the Distinguished Flying Cross; and Sgt. Clarence G. Scott of Tisdale, Sask., who received the Distinguished Flying Medal.

Other decorations for Canadian airmen as a result of their Dieppe services may yet be announced.

Both the Canadian airmen and naval personnel who were at Dieppe were under British command although several all-Canadian Air Force squadrons took part.

TEN APPLICATIONS FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS

Ten applications for old age pensions were studied by the Hastings County Old Age Pension and Mothers' Allowance Board at the regular meeting at Shire Hall yesterday. Consideration was also given five applications for mothers' allowance. Mr. Roy Sills presided.

RECTAL SORENESS AND PILE TORTURE
QUICKLY RELIEVED.

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once.

For this purpose get a package of Hem-Roid from J. S. McKeown or any I.D.A. or other drug store, and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small, easy to take tablet, will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use, is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 2.— (CP)— Industrials and golds continued their firming tendencies on Toronto Exchange today.

Malartic Goldfields added to a small morning advance and sold five cents higher. Aunor was a late comer with a three-cent advance. Among Industrials, late morning or early afternoon fractional gains came out for Dominion Steel B, Steel of Canada, Walkers, Ford A and Cockshutt.

WALL STREET

New York, Oct. 2 —(AP)— Buyers turned to the Steels in today's stock market while the recently speeding Rails had to absorb profit-taking before getting back on the upward track.

Prices improved when the Metal issues began to come out in sizeable volume with gains running to a point or so. Most carriers, near the fourth hour, were ahead minor fractions at new highs for 1 to 5 years.

Favored stocks included U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Crucible Steel, Youngstown Sheet, Chrysler, Douglas Aircraft, Du Pont and Johns-Manville; Edging to peak levels for 1942 or longer were Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Atlantic Coast Line, Union Pacific, Panhandle Producing, Paramount Pictures and Goodrich.

Canadian stocks were fractionally higher. Up 1-8 were Canadian Pacific, Dome and Lake Shore Mines while Hiram Walkers and Distillers Seagram each gained 1-4.

M.C. Citations

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Following are the citations for the Ontario officers who won the Military Cross for gallantry at the battle of Dieppe August 19th.:

CARSWELL, HARVEY BARNET, CAPT., OTTAWA:—Capt. Carswell was F.O.O. (forward observation officer), with the South Saskatchewan Regiment on Green Beach. He landed with the first wave and remained on the beach for eight hours although twice wounded.

During this period he continually exposed himself in order to observe fire from the destroyers and from such mortars as he could organise.

EWENER, WILLIAM ALEXANDER, LIEUT., SARNIA, ONT.:—Landing with the first wave of attackers from the Royal Hamilton Light Infantry, Lieut. Ewener suffered chest wounds almost immediately on reaching White Beach. In spite of his wounds he organized his demolition party and attempted to cross the beach and esplanade, although exposed to extremely heavy machine gun fire, in order to reach a road block objective.

When more of his men were wounded he carried a 75-pound charge of explosives as far as the Casino. Lieut. Ewener continued to show great determination thru'out the entire operation and refused to leave until the last groups were taken from the beach.

CARTSHORE, JOHN BLAKE, LIEUT., DUNDAS, ONT. — Lieut. Cartshore commanded No. 13 Platoon "C" Company, Royal Hamilton Light Infantry. He not only directed the blowing of the first line of wire, but also blew the second line of wire after personally carrying up the Bangalore Torpedo.

During the laying of the torpedo he was severely wounded in the right arm but nevertheless carried on and led his platoon to the casino. He brought to the boats at least three casualties who would otherwise have been left on the beaches.

KENNEDY, HUGH JOHN, CAPT., WINDSOR, ONT. — Capt. Kennedy was on board a L.C.T. (landing craft, tank), in charge of wireless communication with the forward troops. His set was situated in a very exposed position on the ship but with a total disregard for his own safety, he maintained contact with the troops on shore throughout the operation.

Early in the morning Capt. Kennedy was wounded in the leg, but remained at his set under very heavy artillery fire and machine gun fire, although frequently requested to leave. Capt. Kennedy set a fine example of courage and devotion to duty.

MacRAE, DONALD FRASER, CAPT., CORNWALL, ONT.:—Capt. MacRae was attached to the Essex Scottish and was the only officer of this unit who returned from the shore landing. He displayed great coolness and courage throughout the engagement and at great risk to himself moved from place to place leading and encouraging groups of men who were being held up by the extremely heavy enemy fire.

Subsequently, although himself wounded early in the raid, Capt. MacRae dragged several wounded men through fire-swept beach areas to water's edge. Finding a small abandoned craft, he lifted the wounded into the boat and himself swimming pushed it two miles through the water, at which point he was rescued with his party.

His leadership, coolness and resolution set a fine example to the men during the operation and in the withdrawal saved several valuable lives.

D.C.M. Citations

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP).—Following are the citations for the Ontario men who won the Distinguished Conduct Medal for bravery in the Dieppe battle last month:

GRAHAM, THOMAS WILLIAM, GUELPH, ONT.—A Bren gunner with the Protective Platoon of his unit during the action at Dieppe August 19, 1942, Pte. Graham landed on the beaches with the first wave. When during the cutting of the second row of protective wire two of his comrades were wounded, Pte. Graham went forward in the face of very heavy fire and succeeded in dragging them both back to safety. At a later stage standing up under heavy fire threw two smoke canisters to cover the approach of his party to the casino.

In the casino itself, when it was discovered that snipers were located down a passageway, Graham rushed in, threw two grenades and knocked out the snipers. Then, advancing to the town side of the casino with his anti-tank rifle, he knocked out four machine gun posts on the building on the esplanade.

When tanks later appeared on the esplanade, Graham, although unable to communicate with them, displayed great initiative in directing their fire by firing his own Bren gun at the walls around enemy positions. The tanks, observing his fall of shot, then took over and knocked out the enemy posts.

HICKSON, GEORGE ALFRED, L. SGT., KITCHENER, ONT.—L. Sgt. Hickson was in charge of a group charged with destroying the main telephone exchange in the post office. Finding the fire on the beach too heavy to move directly to his target he assisted an infantry platoon in mopping up enemy machine gun positions and destroyed a three-inch gun by detonating a three-pound charge on the breech.

When the platoon commander and most of the senior N.C.O.'s were put out of action, Hickson assumed command and led the platoon to the casino where strong enemy opposition was nullified. Using explosives, he blew his way through the walls to reach a large concrete gun emplacement; then another charge blew in the steel door killing a gun crew of five. He then destroyed the six-inch naval gun and two machine guns after infantry had cleared the post.

L. Sgt. Hickson then reorganized his platoon and despite heavy enemy opposition led them into the town as far as the St. Remy Church. Unable to find brigade headquarters and being without support, he withdrew his party to the casino. L. Sgt. Hickson throughout the day showed determined leadership and high qualities of initiative and was among the last group to evacuate.

(Sgt. Hickson, 28, was a corporal in the Scots Fusiliers of Canada, non-permanent active militia when the war started. He was then working as a hydro lineman at Kitchener and enlisted at London, Ont., in a field company of the R.C.E. in January, 1940. He went overseas in 1940 and won his sergeant's stripes by his gallant action at Dieppe. His wife lives in Kitchener.)

MAIER, JAMES, PTE., WINDSOR, ONT.—In a day filled with incidents of heroism Pte. Maier set a fine example of courage and initiative and soldierly leadership. Under heavy fire he engaged enemy positions with an L.M.G. (light machine gun.) Although wounded he persisted in his attack. Wounded a second time more seriously, he nevertheless used an anti-tank rifle with telling effect against two posts which had defied small arms fire. Both of these he silenced.

He continued to snipe successfully with this weapon until the time of withdrawal, when he collapsed from wounds and loss of blood. Believed to be dead he was thrown overboard, but recovered and was picked up from the water by another craft.

His actions throughout showed the highest devotion to duty and were an inspiration to his comrades.

SINASAC, MILTON DOUGLAS, L. CPL., WINDSOR, ONT:—A member of Lieut. Ewener's (Lieut. W. A. Ewener of Sarnia, Ont., a Military Cross winner) party, L. Cpl. Sinasac proceeded with his commanding officer as far as the Casino during the action at Dieppe, August 19, 1942. When Lieut. Ewener, due to wounds, was unable to carry on, he led the demolition party of six men from the south door of the Casino across the machine gun-swept esplanade towards the Rue Duquesne Road block.

Fire was so heavy he could not reach this objective but managed with two other men to attain the Rue Syngoyne Road block, where he left the men while he dashed back to the Casino to bring up more wall charges. In returning he was wounded, but with the assistance of Spr. Laur carried back two more charges through the enemy fire.

At the road block he fired the charges but due to the heavy machine gun fire had to withdraw his party and was not able to observe the extent of the damage. He was again wounded but managed to return with his group to the casino. While being evacuated his L.C.A. was sunk but L. Cpl. Sinasac was able to swim to a nearby craft.

Throughout the operation this N.C.O. showed exceptional personal bravery and determination.

(L. Cpl. Sinasac, 30, native of Amherstburg, Ont., was a structural steel worker in Windsor where he served with the Essex Scottish Regiment for four years in the non-permanent force prior to his enlistment at Sarnia, Ont., Sept. 15, 1939, with a field company, R.C.E.)

STEWART, JACK, CSM., HAMILTON—CSM. Stewart, "B" Company, Royal Hamilton Light Infantry, displayed great courage and power of leadership during the operation at Dieppe August 19, 1942. In company with Capt. E. C. Hill, second-in-charge, "B" Company, R. H. L. I., he cleared not only the casino and cinema but penetrated into the town to a greater extent than any of the other elements of the 4th. Canadian Infantry Brigade.

Throughout he led his men with great skill and initiative. CSM. Stewart set an excellent example of courage and leadership. After assisting in the withdrawal from the beaches he himself swam for two miles before being picked up.

(A salesman in civilian life, Stewart enlisted at Hamilton, Ont., Sept. 17, 1939. He was wounded in the Dieppe action. He was born in Scotland and is 31.)

M.M. Citations

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP).—Following are the citations for the Ontario non-commissioned officers and men awarded the Military Medal for their part in the August 19 Dieppe attacks:

FISHER, JOHN, L.CPL., SARNIA, ONT. — Immediately upon landing with L.Sgt. Hickson's (L.Sgt. Geo. Hickson of Kitchener, Ont., a Distinguished Conduct Medal winner), O-456, Fisher was wounded in the foot and ordered out of action but later took a sapper and tried to get into Dieppe. With H. E. (high explosive) charges he destroyed a machine gun position, killing the personnel.

Unable to proceed because of heavy enemy fire he was returning to the machine gun position when he met an infantry officer with a large number of sticky bombs. These were carried forward and placed against the wall of a building in the esplanade. Fisher detonated them all setting the partly-ruined building on fire.

Returning to the casino he organized returning Royal Canadian Engineers personnel for evacuation, and destroyed the remaining demolition packs in the building. During the whole operation, L.CPL. Fisher was an inspiration to all by his display of personal bravery and initiative, although wounded.

(L. Cpl. Fisher was a tinsmith before he joined the army. Born Mar. 22, 1913, at Sarnia, he enlisted in a field company, R.C.E., in September, 1939 ,and proceeded overseas in November, 1940. He has a brother serving in the same unit.)

RAY, WILLIAM JOHN, SIGMN., KITCHENER, ONT.: Sigmn. Ray during the operations at Dieppe on August 19, 1942, was attached to the (Queen's Own) Camerons of Canada and was responsible for the maintenance of the rear link to headquarters of a Canadian infantry brigade.

With his wireless set he accompanied battalion headquarters ashore and, in spite of heavy shell fire and sniping, succeeded in maintaining communications with his brigade headquarters, it was thru' this wireless set that the order to evacuate was received.

This order having come through, Sigmn. Ray took his set to the craft upon which he was to embark, and abandoned it only when ordered to do so on account of the craft's crowded condition.

Throughout the operation Sigmn. Ray did excellent work and was a fine example of the conscientious operator and courageous soldier.

(Sgt. Ray, 22, native of Kitchener, Ont., was an electrician in civilian life. He served with the Scottish Fusiliers in the non-permanent force from 1937 to 1940, then enlisted at London, Ont., and went overseas in July 1940 with the R.C.C.S.)

BAKER, ROBERT ARTHUR MONTAGUE, PTE., WINDSOR, ONT.—Pte. Baker, who was "B" Company (Essex Scottish) runner in the operation, faced many dangers courageously in the course of this duty. In addition he fought gallantly on many occasions. He assisted in cutting a path through a wire barrier and later put a bangalore torpedo in place and fired it.

Enemy fire was concentrated on the gap in the wire and wall. In spite of this he extricated a comrade who had been pinned down by falling debris. At various times during the day he acted as a Bren gunner and in evacuation assisted the wounded.

His bravery and coolness were indicative of a high sense of soldierly discipline and values.

(Pte. Baker, 21, served with the Essex Scottish when it was a non-permanent militia unit. He is a native of Montreal. He went overseas in July 1940.)

DELAURIER, LEO DAVID, PTE., LEAMINGTON, ONT.—Pte. Delaurier, stretcher bearer for his (Essex Scottish)) unit on an L.C.T., provided an exceptionally outstanding example of devotion to duty and coolness under fire. When his craft was badly hit by fire he helped organize a dressing station for the wounded and for the rest of the day, under heavy fire and dive-bombing, continued without regard for his own safety to work among the wounded.

He superintended the transfer of the wounded to other craft and only after fully satisfying himself that none was left behind did he go on board a destroyer.

(Pte. Delaurier, 31, was a painter and decorator at Leamington, Ont., before enlisting. He enlisted in September, 1940.)

DIXON, FRANK LESLIE, L.SGT., WINDSOR, ONT., and SACKVILLE, N.B.—Sgt. Dixon manifested qualities of leadership and personal courage to a very high degree in the action. He was foremost in taking his platoon through the first line of wire, despite enemy fire that caused many casualties.

Reorganizing his group he led them up to the sea wall and established light machine gun positions to engage the enemy. Although wounded, Sgt. Dixon continued to lead his men, risking his life many times in directing their attack under fire.

He was at all times cheerful and able to instil a sense of duty, perseverance and initiative in all with whom he came in contact. In the retirement he disregarded his own severe injuries to assist others to safety.

(Native of Sackville, N.B., L. Sgt. Dixon is 24 and was working in Windsor when he enlisted in September, 1939. He went overseas in July, 1940.)

HUSSEY, WALDRON, EDWARD, SGT., RIVERSIDE, ONT.:—Sgt. Hussey was in charge of a motor detachment of the regiment. Losing all his crews under intense enemy fire, he attached himself to another platoon and rendered valuable service to the officer in charge.

With great courage he organized light machine gun posts under fire and by his fearless demeanor did much to hearten the men, to cover the retirement, he led a smoke-throwing detachment, and before himself embarking aided in the removal of many wounded to waiting craft.

(Sgt. Hussey enlisted in September, 1939. A native of Oakfield, Man., 25 years old, he was a butcher in civilian life.)

MARCHANT, GEORGE EDMOND, PTE., WINDSOR, ONT.:—Pte. Marchant, stretcher bearer on an L.C.T. was called upon to serve under constant fire throughout the day. Casualties were heavy when the craft was hit by machine gun, mortar and artillery fire but Pte. Marchant immediately organized a dressing station to look after the wounded. Later he had them transferred to two launches and a destroyer.

All this time under fire and dive-bombing, he cheerfully worked at his task, rendering outstanding service and saving many lives.

(Pte. Marchant left his studies in Windsor to enlist with the Essex Scottish. He was born in England, 21 years ago, and enlisted in Windsor in September 1939).

MIZON, JOHN HENRY, PTE., WINDSOR, ONT.:—During the attack on Dieppe August 19, 1942, in the course of which his unit came under extremely heavy and sustained enemy fire, Pte. Mizon was in charge of a mortar. After penetrating the enemy's wire obstacle, he brought this weapon into action effectively.

The enemy replied with a four-inch mortar and machine gun fire but failed to silence Pte. Mizon's mortar. During the evacuation Pte. Mizon personally picked up and carried two badly-wounded men aboard the L. C. T. through very heavy fire. He at all times acted with uncommon bravery and resourcefulness and his conduct was an inspiration to all ranks.

(A baker before the war, Pte. Mizon enlisted in the Essex Scottish in July, 1940. He is a native of England and is 29.)

McDERMOTT, GEORGE ALFRED, L.CPL., HAMILTON, ONT.—During the operation at Dieppe Aug. 19, 1942, L.CPL. McDermott, regimental policeman, was attached to battalion headquarters. He was one of the first to enter the casino where single-handed, he attacked and destroyed a German stronghold in the building at considerable personal risk.

Subsequently, when it became necessary to withdraw from the casino to the beaches, he displayed high qualities of leadership and skill in organization.

Throughout the action Cpl. McDermott displayed not only great courage and initiative but also an excellent appreciation of the importance of military intelligence. He was most diligent in his efforts to obtain information about the enemy and at the conclusion of the operation turned over to the intelligence officer of a Canadian infantry brigade a diary and letters which he obtained during the raid.

He also obtained German training manuals, but lost them when he was blown out of one of the craft during the return journey. Further, during the operation he succeeded in taking several photographs.

(L. Cpl. McDermott, 28, is a native of Hudson Bay Junction, Sask., and was employed as an automobile mechanic at Hamilton when war broke out. He enlisted in the R. H. L. I. in February, 1940.)

DEAN, WILLIAM JOSEPH, CSM., HAMILTON—CSM. Dean was attached to battalion headquarters, Royal Hamilton Light Infantry, as liaison between command group protective platoon mortars and the forward observation officer. In carrying out this duty he continued to move to and fro between the parties with which he was to maintain liaison with great courage and determination under heavy enemy fire, and in addition displayed great initiative in directing and controlling the fire of these parties—a fire which proved most effective.

Subsequently he assisted materially in directing the withdrawal to the beaches and in the picking up of wounded. C. S. M. Dean's actions throughout the operation displayed great courage and devotion to duty. His excellent personal example inspired his men exceedingly.

(C. S. M. Dean is 43 and was a construction worker in civil life. He served with the Scots Guards and the R.H.L.I. non-permanent force before the war.)

DYKE, CECIL HAROLD, PTE., PORT COLBORNE, ONT.: During the operation at Dieppe Aug. 19, 1942, Pte. Dyke was attached to the regimental aid post of the R. H. L. I., at rear battalion headquarters, where he displayed great courage and total disregard for personal safety while attending the wounded and getting them under cover.

Although himself wounded early in the raid, he continued to carry out his duties in a most efficient manner. His conduct was of the highest order and drew praise of many of his comrades.

Pte. Dyke throughout the whole operation displayed great fortitude and devotion to duty.

McQUADE, THOMAS, PTE., HAMILTON: Pte. McQuade showed great gallantry and courage during the operations on the beach. He volunteered to lay palings for the tank roadway and helped carry out this work under heavy fire. He also was conspicuous in assisting in bringing in the wounded and in attending them on the L.C.T. (tank landing craft). This soldier displayed a high standard of courage and devotion to duty throughout the entire operation.

GERGETTE, WILLIAM, PTE., HAMILTON: Pte. Gergette was a rifleman in No. 12 platoon, "B" Company, R.H.L.I. during the assault on the casino in the Dieppe operation Aug. 19, 1942, and the further advance towards the town. Pte. Vergette displayed great initiative and leadership in that, after the N.C.O.'s of his platoon were killed or wounded, he assumed command and led his men in a very gallant fashion throughout the remainder of his operation, despite the fact that he himself was wounded.

Through his efforts and leadership about 25 of the R.H.L.I. succeeded in penetrating to the park on the south side of the casino.

His coolness and disregard for his own safety in the performance of his duties as a medical orderly were instrumental in maintaining the morale of all on board and added greatly to the comfort of the wounded.

He distinguished himself not only by his knowledge of his work but also by the speed with which he carried it out under heavy enemy fire.

(Pte. Bibby was reported missing after the Dieppe action but was later found safe. He was born in England on March 17, 1900. In civilian life he was a hospital attendant, and he served for two years in the British Imperial Army. Pte. Bibby enlisted in Guelph in September, 1939.)

UNITED NATIONS MAKE NEW DRIVE ON ENEMY IN EGYPT

Jeeps and men in the battle of Egypt are faced by such terrain as this pictured ABOVE. It is because of the manoeuvrability of the jeep and because of its lack of weight combined with its high power, that it can travel in such difficult places, where heavier transport would be out of the question.

GERMANY'S WAR MACHINE SMASHED BY R. A. F.

Start Many Fires In Night And Daylight Sweeps

7 BOMBERS MISSING

London, Oct. 3 — (CP) — R. A. F. bombers kept a round-the-clock assault on Germany's war machine rolling last night with a strong smash at the Rhineland which started many fires only a few hours after United States Flying Fortresses, supported by fighter planes of the R. A. F., R. C. A. F. and U. S. A. A. F., shot down 18 Nazi Focke-Wulf 190's in a raid on northern France.

The British communique did not identify the exact targets of last night's raid, but it said "A strong force" took part.

Seven bombers did not return, indicating an attacking force of perhaps 130 planes on the basis of previous averages. In the daylight attack on northern France, the Fortresses returned to Britain without loss.

The attack on Germany was the second in as many nights, following up an assault on the big German submarine building yards at Flensburg. The raiders, including at least one R. C. A. F. squadron, lost 17 bombers.

Swarms of Flying Fortresses, accompanied by Canadian Spitfire pilots shot down five of the Nazis' prized Focke-Wulf 190 fighter planes — thus bringing yesterday's bag to 18 enemy aircraft.

Aircraft Factory Hit

The main objectives of the Fortresses were the Nazi aircraft factory at Meaulte and an airfield at St. Omer in northern France. Returning bombardiers said they could see their bombs "bursting all over the targets."

But the most spectacular part of the show was the air battle which broke out all over the sky before the planes reached their goal and continued until they were back over the English Channel.

Flt. Lt. Don Morrison of Toronto got credit for a "probable" and P.O. Stan Osborn of West Calgary shot down a Focke-Wulf 190. Morrison closed to within 100 yards of the Messerschmitt and let go with his cannon. The German went down in a vertical dive, but Morrison was not able to see him crash.

Six Allied fighters were lost, but the pilot of one is safe, a communique said.

Docks At Le Havre Bombed.

While the Flying Fortresses were at work United States Boston Bombers raided the docks at the big French port of Le Havre and likewise returned without loss. The fighter escort for the various operations was estimated to total 400 planes.

It was the thirteenth time Flying Fortresses have raided German-occupied Europe and only two Fortresses have been lost. Fortress gunners are credited with shooting down more than 50 German planes in the thirteen trips.

American airmen say the Germans haven't yet figured out how to deal with the Fortresses. They have learned, however, not to try to attack the squadrons as a unit and usually concentrate all their fire on the last planes in the formation to avoid fire from the lead and middle formations.

Some of the rear flight Fortresses were damaged yesterday, but returned safely.

CONTRARY SICK MAN

Topeka, Kas., Oct. 3 —(AP)— Patrolman Eugene Martin and Frank Kinney filed their report on a disturbance call: "There was a man sick. His wife wanted us to make him take his medicine, but he would not bother with it, so we left."

DONATES CUP FOR SCRAP

Bemidji, Minn., Oct. 3 —(AP)— Suggesting that golf champions and others who have received awards might like to follow its example, the Bemidji Publishing Co. tossed onto the local scrap heap a massive cup presented in 1928 to the Bemidji Sentinel by the National Editorial Association for being "the most outstanding weekly in the United States." The company also publishes the "Daily Pioneer."

Predict Democrats Will Hold Control

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 3 (CP).—With the congressional elections only five weeks away, political observers in Washington are predicting the Republicans will pick up a few House and Senate seats but not enough to wrest control from the Democrats.

Only one-third of the Senate seats are in dispute this year and it is mathematically impossible, for the Democrats to lose control. To gain control of the House of Representatives, the Republicans must hold all their seats and gain 52 others which most observers believe is a hopeless task.

Many Things Can Happen.

Many things can happen between now and Nov. 3, election day, which would alter the present political trends fundamentally but there are no indications that President Roosevelt will lose effective control of Congress as President Wilson did in his second term, leading to American repudiation of the Treaty of Versailles and to the United States remaining outside the League of Nations.

Only one state, Maine, has voted so far and the Republicans swept everything before them. It used to be that "as Main goes, so goes the nation," but the Roosevelt landslides of 1936 and 1940 demonstrated the fallacy of that saying.

Republican leaders insist they are sure of picking up 20 to 30 House seats and if the trend grows stronger in their direction they would not be surprised if they gained control. They base this prediction on the apathy demonstrated in the primaries and in popular resentment to several policies of the administration such as its failure to build up an adequate rubber supply.

War Is No Issue.

The primaries demonstrated the war is no issue. Democratic attempts to defeat pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists failed in most cases and this was explained generally by the observation the people were not so interested in finding out what led to American intervention in the war as they were in fighting it.

Chungking, Oct. 3 —(AP)— The Chinese High Command reported tonight that continued fighting without change near the Chekiang Province towns of Kinhwa, Lanchi and Tungyang.

Germans Forced Back Thru Stalingrad Streets

CANADIAN LIQUOR PRODUCTIONSTOPS AFTER NOV. 1ST

Entire Output of All Distilleries Will Be Diverted to War Purposes

BEER, WINE UNAFFECTED

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP)—Canadian distilleries were directly harnessed to meet wartime needs under a Munitions and Supply Department order announced late Friday banning production of liquor from November 1st next and diverting the entire output of the distilleries to war purposes.

Chemicals Controller E. C. Sterne who issued the order said the entire output was needed for manufacture of synthetic rubber and chemical and explosive requirements of the United Nations.

The order does not affect sales of beverages already manufactured, nor does it apply to manufacture of beer and wine.

Simultaneously, the War Production Board in Washington ordered all United States distilleries still making liquor to halt their manufacture by next Thursday and convert to industrial alcohol.

No Immediate Shortage

Canadian distillery officials estimated that existing stocks were large enough to ensure there would be no immediate shortage and probably none for some time to come.

H. E. Hatch, executive of Gooderham and Worts, Ltd., said at Toronto that liquor stocks now ageing were sufficient to meet all consumer demands for some years. He said the company had been doing "nothing else but produce alcohol for war purposes for some time."

CONVOY HEADS FOR ATLANTIC

London, Oct. 3 —(CP)— The Swiss radio broadcast a dispatch from Algeciras, Spain, today saying a convoy of 14 cargo ships escorted by a battleship, two cruisers, six destroyers and three submarines left Gibraltar last night headed for the Atlantic.

Blind Since Birth, Man Invents Machine Which Identifies Money

New York, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Brain child of a 29-year-old inventor, blind since birth, a machine which identifies the denomination of United States paper currency has been perfected by George A. Lafleur of Overbrook, Ont. The device, which can be manufactured for $25, was demonstrated in the Helen Keller room of the American Foundation for the Blind here Friday.

With the aid of two colleagues, Jack Hewson and H. T. Osborn, fellow Canadians, Lafleur said he worked on his device since March, 1941, and brought it to its present stage of perfection in July, 1942. Previously he had created a similar device for use with Canadian money but it was not produced on a large scale, he said, "because of lack of financial backing." Both Hewson and Osborn can see.

The bill detector is based on the principle of the electric eye and light beam. He would not divulge certain details of the machine because it has not been patented, but this much could be divulged: a beam of light in the machine scans the numerals of the bills and the number of times the light is reflected from the bill is indicated by a buzzing signal.

The number of audible sounds then indicates the denomination of the bill. For instance, four buzzing sounds denote a $20 bill, three a $10 note, two a five and one buzzing sound indicates a dollar bill.

At its present stage of development the device can, it is said, detect bills up to $20.

Adaptation Not Easy

Lafleur, demonstrating his machine, would place a bill in a metal frame called the "wallet," which, in turn, is placed in the carriage of the detector. Operating a dial, Lafleur received the audible signals that informed him of the denomination of the bill.

Adapting his idea to American money was not easy. Hewson handled the electrical aspect and Osborn the mechanical side of the device.

London Morning Papers Filled With Stories Of Heroism of Canadians

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in England, Oct. 3 —(CP Cable) — Morning papers filled with stories of the heroism of Canadians at Dieppe brought the first news to many of them today that they had won awards for gallantry and valor in the epic attack on the French coast in August.

One of the most surprised was Capt. D. F. Fraser, who was with the Essex Scottish during the raid. He sat down at the breakfast table in the officers' mess in army headquarters this morning, picked up the paper and found he had won the Military Cross. He is a staff officer at headquarters.

L.Cpl. Guy Berthelot of Fife Lake, Sask., was scrubbing the canvas cover of an anti-tank gun when his sergeant walked by and said he had seen in the papers that some fellow in the South Saskatoon Regiment by the name of Berthelot had won an award.

The sergeant did not recognize Berthelot until the corporal got up and said, "What were you saying about me."

The sergeant told the blond N. C. O. he had won the Distinguished Conduct Medal and Berthelot, a former lumberman, said: "It could just as well have been somebody else as me. Lots of guys did just as much. Many of them didn't come back and no one saw them to tell about what they did."

Berthelot preferred to discuss the awards others won. Of Lt.-Col. Cecil Merritt, who won the Victoria Cross, he said: "There's a good man. I figure he had it coming."

He said Pte. Bill Haggard of Tisdale, Sask., also a winner of the D. C. M., still is in a hospital. He described him as "a very good soldier, just a young fellow about 21 who joined the army after leaving school."

Feel Pretty Good

L.-Cpl. Alex Huppe of Woodbridge, Man., described in the Cameron Highlanders as "the best sniper in the Canadian Army", felt "pretty good" about winning the Military Medal but he modestly declined to talk about himself and spoke rather of officers and men who were at Dieppe with him and said Maj. Andrew Law, "a very brave man", did wonders at Dieppe where he was "as cool as can be".

Everybody the stocky, 33-year-old blonde soldier mentioned was "wonderful". He praised Maj. Bob Thompson of Winnipeg and R.S.M. Jack Dumas, also of Winnipeg. He said he was with Dumas all day during the Dieppe attack "and he did a wonderful job".

He also waxed enthusiastic about C.S.M. George Gouk, who is away from the unit, and Sgt. Ernest Gordon, who still is in the hospital. They both won the D.C.M.

Sgt. Adam Brygider of Winnipeg, 27-year-old dark-haired winner of the D.C.M., who had just put up his third stripe, said "I do not know about my award but I know that a lot of boys who earned medals didn't come back".

Yesterday when Col. J. L. Ralston, minister of National Defence, was inspecting the Camerons, he chatted with Brygider and asked him what he did in peacetime. Brygider told the minister he worked in a cold storage plant and added it was "not nearly as hot as Dieppe".

BACON TO BRITAIN TO BRING 10 P.C. PRICE INCREASE

675,000,000 Pounds of Bacon, Pork Products for Export to Britain in Year

LARGEST PRODUCTION

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP)—Agriculture Minister Gardiner yesterday announced a new agreement with Britain's Food Ministry, under which Canada will send 675,000,000 pounds of bacon and pork products to the United Kingdom during the coming year, at a price 10 per cent higher than that paid during the current year.

He said it would require the largest production of hogs in Canada's history — approximately 7,500,000 head—to meet the shipments requested by Britain and to fulfil domestic requirements as well.

The Dominion undertook to send 600,000,000 pounds to the United Kingdom in the 1941-42 year, which expires in about five weeks. Officials expect the stipulated amount will be delivered, provided the Canadian public co-operate by putting off pork purchases until next month.

In announcing the new agreement, Mr. Gardiner forecast a 10 per cent advance in hog prices in Canada.

Hog Price Advance on Monday

Hog prices will be increased on Monday with the Canadian Bacon Board making up the difference until the old agreement expires from cash reserves which it has built up in handling the bacon export trade during the past year.

A department statement said that when the 1941-42 agreement was signed, it was estimated "that the export price of $19.77 would support hog prices at a minimum level of about $10 per 100 pounds liveweight at Winnipeg. This 10 per cent increase in the export price for bacon will provide an equivalent increase in hog prices, or a minimum price of about $11 per 100 pounds, liveweight at Winnipeg, during the coming year.

The statement added that hog prices rose considerably above the export level during the past year, due to the extra benefit to be found in the domestic market. But in the last three weeks hog prices weakened following a reduction in the domestic quotas. (The amount packers now are allowed to move to the domestic trade is limited to 50 per cent of 1940 sales).

ANTI-INFLATION BILL IS SIGNED BY ROOSEVELT

Salaries, Prices and Wages Will be Set as From September 15th

A LONG DEBATE

Washington, Oct. 3 (AP)—Franklin D. Roosevelt, vested with greater powers to curb inflation than ever were bestowed upon a President in the history of the United States, moved today to stabilize salaries, prices and wages.

Three hours after Congress approved the compromise anti-inflation bill last night, the President signed the mesaure into law and prepared to issue an executive order applying to brakes to wartime living costs.

Prodded into action by the President on his return from a two-weeks' inspection of war establishments, Congress completed passage of the controversial bill only one day later than he had demanded.

In a Labor Day speech, Mr. Roosevelt declared that if Congress failed to act by Oct. 1, he would take matters into his own hands "to see to it that the war effort is no longer imperilled by threat of economic chaos."

A cause of many ruffled tempers and frayed nerves in its three-weeks' stay in Congress, the measure generally directs the President to stabilize wages, prices and salaries by Nov. 1 and, as far as is practicable, at the levels of Sept. 15, 1942.

Swift action is regarded as certain, however, because the President has said that unless new controls are exercised the inflationary trend could not be held in check longer than Oct. 1.

The act calls for the adjustment of farm prices if those established under the stabilization provisions do not meet the increase in the cost of farm labor and other agricultural expenses since Jan. 1, 1941.

Establishing a minimum for farm prices, the new law also allows government crop loans and purchases at 90 per cent of parity instead of the present 85 per cent. To prevent an exorbitant rise in the cost of meat, however, the President may set the loan rate between 85 and 90 per cent in the case of grains used as feed for live stock and poultry. (Parity is the determination of the fair price relationship between what the farmer sells and what he buys, usually based on the 1909-14 period.)

In general, wages and salaries cannot be lowered below their highest figures reached between Jan. 1 and Sept. 15, 1942.

AUSSIES REACH SUMMIT OF RANGE IN NEW GUINEA

Push Beyond Menari Without Opposition From Retreating Japanese Troops

CUT SUPPLY LINES

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 3—(CP)—Steadily-advancing Australian ground forces neared the summit of New Guinea's rugged Owen Stanley mountains today after pushing beyond the tiny hamlet of Menari without fresh opposition from retreating Japanese troops.

Advices from the front indicated the Australians were within five or six miles of the gap in the crest of the towering ridge through which they fell back barely three weeks ago under the pressure of a strong enemy column driving toward Port Moresby.

A communique announcing the reoccupation of Menari, which is about 64 miles northeast of Port Moresby by trail, said there had been no further contact between the opposing forces, though the ground over which the Japanese have been retreating is admirably suited to defence.

Failure of the Japanese to attempt a stand was attributed largely to unending Allied aerial attacks which have virtually paralyzed their supply lines.

May Retreat Further

There was no telling how much further the Japanese might withdraw without a show of resistance, but an Allied spokesman said they probably would show fight when the supply difficulties become more nearly equalized—that is, when the Australians reach a point in their advance where they can supply only about the same number of men as the Japanese.

Because of the nature of the terrain and the constant danger of running into a jungle ambush, the Australians have been moving with great caution. Although it is only four miles from Nauro—which they occupied Wednesday—to Menari, the advance represented the utmost difficulties, for the troops had to cross a 3,500-foot ridge along narrow, winding trails.

Bridge Almost Destroyed

Allied air units gave the advance strong support, continuing their stafing attacks on the Japanese communication line with special attention to the oft-bombed Wairopi bridge over the Kumasi river, which a communique said now is "almost completely destroyed."

Flying fortresses also ranged across the Coral sea to New Britain and the Solomon Islands, carrying out the most damaging attacks to which enemy shipping has been subjected in recent weeks.

Direct hits were reported on a 15,000-ton transport and another of 7,000-tons at Rabaul, New Britain, setting both vessels afire.

A enemy cruiser and an unidentified vessel also were believed hit, while bombs were dropped on the airdrome and other shore installations.

Another enemy cruiser was attacked off Buin, on Bougainville Island in the Northern Solomons, with unobserved results. Two night raids were made on the airdrome at nearby Buka.

All planes returned from these assaults.

Nazis Losing 2,000 To 3,000 Daily In Bitter Fighting

MORE OPTIMISM

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Oct. 3 (AP).—The Red army gave a new, brighter turn to the great battle for the Volga basin today by snatching the initiative from the Germans and bearing down on the Nazi flank in an advance northwest of Stalingrad while defenders within the city also were breaking down the enemy's offensives.

Russian tank and troop attacks carried the defenders of battered Stalingrad into the Germans' front line on the north and strong counter attacks within the city also threatened the besiegers' positions there.

The battlefield appeared now to be divided roughly into three zones with the Russians driving across the steppes outside the city and along the streets inside it while the Germans persisted in assaults in the suburbs between these two areas.

Losing 2,000 to 3,000 dead daily, the Germans were forced back through the ruined streets of Stalingrad yesterday while the relief offensive northwest of the city gained a hill-top where the Germans had buried 130 damaged tanks as gun emplacements, the Russians said.

Can't Roll Up Defence Line

Tank-supported Nazi infantrymen, trying to roll the defence lines eastward toward the Volga, were reported by Red Star to have been the victims of a Red Army guard division.

While entrenched Soviet troops held firmly, the guard division struck swiftly against a side of the invasion wedge and compelled the enemy to retreat, leaving war equipment, several hundred dead and some prisoners.

Squad by squad and house by ruined house, the siege-worn garrison was reported ousting the invaders from the footholds gained in a battle launched 40 days ago.

All the news was not good—retirement of a Red Army detachment south of the city was officially noted — but restrained optimism was evident in field dispatches.

The Soviet Information Bureau's accounts remained restrained. Overnight developments were summed up in these words:—

'KIBITIZER' FATALLY INJURED

Calgary, Oct. 3. (CP) — Laurie Tokie, 60, a "Kibitzer" in a card game here last night was fatally injured during a scuffle after he had pointed out "a misdeal", police reported early today.

John Benner, 52, alleged to have been involved in the argument over the game, was arrested shortly after Tokie died in the hospital. He is held on a charge of murder.

Reds Fool Nazis by Removing Guns After Giving Enemy Severe Pasting

Moscow, Oct. 3 (AP)—A Soviet war correspondent sent the following story about what happened to a hillock in the battle on the dusty steppe north of Stalingrad:

A German bomber circled the hillock for a long time, studying the "guns." Then, apparently noting they were false, the German pilot flew away to report without dropping a bomb.

Quickly the Russians swapped the guns again for the dummies, concealing their action behind a dust screen stirred up a tractor detailed for that purpose.

"The German bombers were not slow in coming," wrote the correspondent. "They made a great effort to destroy the plywood guns.

"The whole steppe around the hillock was honeycombed with craters and, where the hillock used to be, there now is a pit big enough to hold a two-storey-building.

Japanese Bases In Burma Bombed

New Delhi, India, Oct. 3 (CP).—Bombers and fighters were reported by United States Army Air Force headquarters here today to have left areas of destruction at Japanese bases in upper Burma and the adjoining Chinese province of Yunnan during sorties Sunday and Monday.

All the missions were declared executed without a loss.

A medium bomber, attacking from a 30-foot altitude, demolished a building on the Tinkga, Yunnan, airfield and battered others at Lowing field, where soldiers and laborers working on runways were dispersed, the communique said.

En route back to its Indian base on this solo trip, the bomber crew loosed explosives upon Japanese tractors parked along the railroad tracks near Katha.

The barracks area of Myitkyina, Burma, was the target of another bomber.

"On Sept. 28 Washawng and two adjoining villages in the Myitkyina area were strafed by fighters," the communique said. "Incendiary and fragmentation bombs were dropped and the villages were left in flames."

Edouard Herriot Placed in Prison

LONDON, Oct. 3 — (CP) — The Berlin radio broadcast a report from Vichy today that Edouard Herriot, 70-year-old former premier of France, has been placed in a concentration camp at Vals Les Bains in unoccupied France.

Both the German and Italian radios previously had reported Herriot under arrest at his chateau near Lyon — presumably for opposing the Vichy regime's program of collaboration with the Axis, although the Axis reports gave no reason for his detention.

A Swiss telegraph agency dispatch from Vichy last night said Herriot had been under surveillance for several days after writing a letter to Marshal Petain objecting to suppression of the French Parliament and declaring that Frenchmen would not stand for being dragged into a war against their former Allies.

GERMANY'S WAR MACHINE SMASHED BY R.A.F.

Start Many Fires In Night And Daylight Sweeps

7 BOMBERS MISSING

London, Oct. 3 — (CP) — R. A. F. bombers kept a round-the-clock assault on Germany's war machine rolling last night with a strong smash at the Rhineland which started many fires only a few hours after United States Flying Fortresses, supported by fighter planes of the R. A. F., R. C. A. F. and U. S. A. A. F., shot down 18 Nazi Focke-Wulf 190's in a raid on northern France.

The British communique did not identify the exact targets of last night's raid, but it said "A strong force" took part.

Seven bombers did not return, indicating an attacking force of perhaps 150 planes on the basis of previous averages. In the daylight attack on northern France, the Fortresses returned to Britain without loss.

The attack on Germany was the second in as many nights, following up an assault on the big German submarine building yards at Flensburg. The raiders, including at least one R. C. A. F. squadron, lost 17 bombers.

Swarms of Flying Fortresses, accompanied by Canadian Spitfire pilots shot down five of the Nazis' prized Focke-Wulf 190 fighter planes — thus bringing yesterday's bag to 18 enemy aircraft.

Aircraft Factory Hit

The main objectives of the Fortresses were the Nazi aircraft factory at Meaulte and an airfield at St. Omer in northern France. Returning bombardiers said they could see their bombs "bursting all over the targets."

But the most spectacular part of the show was the air battle which broke out all over the sky before the planes reached their goal and continued until they were back over the English Channel.

Flt. Lt. Don Morrison of Toronto got credit for a "probable" and PO. Stan Osborn of West Calgary shot down a Focke-Wulf 190. Morrison closed to within 100 yards of the Messerschmitt and let go with his cannon. The German went down in a vertical dive, but Morrison was not able to see him crash.

Six Allied fighters were lost, but the pilot of one is safe, a communique said.

Docks At Le Havre Bombed.

While the Flying Fortresses were at work United States Boston Bombers raided the docks at the big French port of Le Havre and likewise returned without loss. The fighter escort for the various operations was estimated to total 400 planes.

It was the thirteenth time Flying Fortresses have raided German-occupied Europe and only two Fortresses have been lost. Fortress gunners are credited with shooting down more than 50 German planes in the thirteen trips.

American airmen say the Germans haven't yet figured out how to deal with the Fortresses. They have learned, however, not to try to attack the squadrons as a unit and usually concentrate all their fire on the last planes in the formation to avoid fire from the lead and middle formations.

Some of the rear flight Fortresses were damaged yesterday, but returned safely.

Predict Democrats Will Hold Control

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 3 (CP).—With the congressional elections only five weeks away, political observers in Washington are predicting the Republicans will pick up a few House and Senate seats but not enough to wrest control from the Democrats.

Only one-third of the Senate seats are in dispute this year and it is mathematically impossible, for the Democrats to lose control. To gain control of the House of Representatives, the Republicans must hold all their seats and gain 52 others which most observers believe is a hopeless task.

Many Things Can Happen.

Many things can happen between now and Nov. 3, election day, which would alter the present political trends fundamentally but there are no indications that President Roosevelt will lose effective control of Congress as President Wilson did in his second term, leading to American repudiation of the Treaty of Versailles and to the United States remaining outside the League of Nations.

Only one state, Maine, has voted so far and the Republicans swept everything before them. It used to be that "as Main goes, so goes the nation" but the Roosevelt landslides of 1936 and 1940 demonstrated the fallacy of that saying.

Republican leaders insist they are sure of picking up 20 to 30 House seats and if the trend grows stronger in their direction they would not be surprised if they gained control. They base this prediction on the apathy demonstrated in the primaries and in popular resentment to several policies of the administration such as its failure to build up an adequate rubber supply.

War Is No Issue.

The primaries demonstrated the war is no issue. Democratic attempts to defeat pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists failed in most cases and this was explained generally by the observation the people were not so interested in finding out what led to American intervention in the war as they were in fighting it.

Chungking, Oct. 3 —(AP)— The Chinese High Command reported tonight that continued fighting without change near the Chekiang Province towns of Kinhwa, Lanchi and Tungyang.

Blind Since Birth, Man Invents Machine Which Identifies Money

New York, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Brain child of a 29-year-old inventor, blind since birth, a machine which identifies the denomination of United States paper currency has been perfected by George A. Lafleur of Overbrook, Ont. The device, which can be manufactured for $25, was demonstrated in the Helen Keller room of the American Foundation for the Blind here Friday.

With the aid of two colleagues, Jack Hewson and H. T. Osborn, fellow Canadians, Lafleur said he worked on his device since March, 1941, and brought it to its present stage of perfection in July, 1942. Previously he had created a similar device for use with Canadian money but it was not produced on a large scale, he said, "because of lack of financial backing." Both Hewson and Osborn can see.

The bill detector is based on the principle of the electric eye and light beam. He would not divulge certain details of the machine because it has not been patented, but this much could be divulged: a beam of light in the machine scans the numerals of the bills and the number of times the light is reflected from the bill is indicated by a buzzing signal.

The number of audible sounds then indicates the denomination of the bill. For instance, four buzzing sounds denote a $20 bill, three a $10 note, two a five and one buzzing sound indicates a dollar bill.

At its present stage of development the device can, it is said, detect bills up to $20.

Adaptation Not Easy

Lafleur, demonstrating his machine, would place a bill in a metal frame called the "wallet," which, in turn, is placed in the carriage of the detector. Operating a dial, Lafleur received the audible signals that informed him of the denomination of the bill.

Adapting his idea to American money was not easy. Hewson handled the electrical aspect and Osborn the mechanical side of the device.

Turning to the subject of the blind Lafleur observed that "90 per cent of the problems of the blind can be broken down if science can be properly applied by a blind scientist, which could make for practical activity by the blind."

Blind scientists, he held, "must be given an opportunity for scientific research."

A graduate of St. Patrick's College, Ottawa, he briefly spoke of the strong possibility of inventing a guiding machine that would enable the blind to move with the same freedom as those with sight.

Lafleur is married to a girl who can see and who majored in the arts but "displayed more enthusiasm for science." His "great thrill in perfecting the machine" occurred recently in Canada, where he was in the wholesale coffee business. He paid a correct amount, he said, by using his device.

CANADIAN LIQUOR PRODUCTION STOPS AFTER NOV. 1ST

Entire Output of All Distilleries Will Be Diverted to War Purposes

BEER, WINE UNAFFECTED

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP)—Canadian distilleries were directly harnessed to meet wartime needs under a Munitions and Supply Department order announced late Friday banning production of liquor from November 1st next and diverting the entire output of the distilleries to war purposes.

Chemicals Controller E. C. Sterne who issued the order said the entire output was needed for manufacture of synthetic rubber and chemical and explosive requirements of the United Nations.

The order does not affect sales of beverages already manufactured, nor does it apply to manufacture of beer and wine.

Simultaneously, the War Production Board in Washington ordered all United States distilleries still making liquor to halt their manufacture by next Thursday and convert to industrial alcohol.

No Immediate Shortage

Canadian distillery officials estimated that existing stocks were large enough to ensure there would be no immediate shortage and probably none for some time to come.

H. E. Hatch, executive of Gooderham and Worts, Ltd., said at Toronto that liquor stocks now ageing were sufficient to meet all consumer demands for some years. He said the company had been doing "nothing else but produce alcohol for war purposes for some time."

Washington, Oct. 3 (AP)—Franklin D. Roosevelt, vested with greater powers to curb inflation than ever were bestowed upon a President in the history of the United States, moved today to stabilize salaries, prices and wages.

Three hours after Congress approved the compromise anti-inflation bill last night, the President signed the measure into law and prepared to issue an executive order applying to brakes to wartime living costs.

Prodded into action by the President on his return from a two-weeks' inspection of war establishments, Congress completed passage of the controversial bill only one day later than he had demanded.

In a Labor Day speech, Mr. Roosevelt declared that if Congress failed to act by Oct. 1, he would take matters into his own hands "to see to it that the war effort is no longer imperilled by threat of economic chaos."

A cause of many ruffled tempers and frayed nerves in its three-weeks' stay in Congress, the measure generally directs the President to stabilize wages, prices and salaries by Nov. 1 and, as far as is practicable, at the levels of Sept. 15, 1942.

Swift action is regarded as certain, however, because the President has said that unless new controls are exercised the inflationary trend could not be held in check longer than Oct. 1.

The act calls for the adjustment of farm prices if those established under the stabilization provisions do not meet the increase in the cost of farm labor and other agricultural expenses since Jan. 1, 1941.

Establishing a minimum for farm prices, the new law also allows government crop loans and purchases at 90 per cent of parity instead of the present 85 per cent. To prevent an exorbitant rise in the cost of meat, however, the President may set the loan rate between 85 and 90 per cent in the case of grains used as feed for live stock and poultry. (Parity is the determination of the fair price relationship between what the farmer sells and what he buys, usually based on the 1909-14 period.)

In general, wages and salaries cannot be lowered below their highest figures reached between Jan. 1 and Sept. 15, 1942.

AUSSIES REACH SUMMIT OF RANGE IN NEW GUINEA

Push Beyond Menari Without Opposition From Retreating Japanese Troops

CUT SUPPLY LINES

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 3—(CP)—Steadily-advancing Australian ground forces neared the summit of New Guinea's rugged Owen Stanley mountains today after pushing beyond the tiny hamlet of Menari without fresh opposition from retreating Japanese troops.

Advices from the front indicated the Australians were within five or six miles of the gap in the crest of the towering ridge through which they fell back barely three weeks ago under the pressure of a strong enemy column driving toward Port Moresby.

A communique announcing the reoccupation of Menari, which is about 64 miles northeast of Port Moresby by trail, said there had been no further contact between the opposing forces, though the ground over which the Japanese have been retreating is admirably suited to defence.

Failure of the Japanese to attempt a stand was attributed largely to unending Allied aerial attacks which have virtually paralyzed their supply lines.

May Retreat Further

There was no telling how much further the Japanese might withdraw without a show of resistance, but an Allied spokesman said they probably would show fight when the supply difficulties become more nearly equalized—that is, when the Australians reach a point in their advance where they can supply only about the same number of men as the Japanese.

Because of the nature of the terrain and the constant danger of running into a jungle ambush, the Australians have been moving with great caution. Although it is only four miles from Nauro—which they occupied Wednesday—to Menari, the advance represented the utmost difficulties, for the troops had to cross a 3,500-foot ridge along narrow, winding trails.

Bridge Almost Destroyed

Allied air units gave the advance strong support, continuing their stafing attacks on the Japanese communication line with special attention to the oft-bombed Wairopi bridge over the Kumasi river, which a communique said now is "almost completely destroyed."

Flying fortresses also ranged across the Coral sea to New Britain and the Solomon Islands, carrying out the most damaging attacks to which enemy shipping has been subjected in recent weeks.

Direct hits were reported on a 15,000-ton transport and another of 7,000-tons at Rabaul, New Britain, setting both vessels afire.

A enemy cruiser and an unidentified vessel also were believed hit, while bombs were dropped on the airdrome and other shore installations.

Another enemy cruiser was attacked off Buin, on Bougainville Island in the Northern Solomons, with unobserved results. Two night raids were made on the airdrome at nearby Buka.

All planes returned from these assaults.

Nazis Losing 2,000 To 3,000 Daily In Bitter Fighting

MORE OPTIMISM

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Oct. 3 (AP).—The Red army gave a new, brighter turn to the great battle for the Volga basin today by snatching the initiative from the Germans and bearing down on the Nazi flank in an advance northwest of Stalingrad while defenders within the city also were breaking down the enemy's offensives.

Russian tank and troop attacks carried the defenders of battered Stalingrad into the Germans' front line on the north and strong counter attacks within the city also threatened the besiegers' positions there.

The battlefield appeared now to be divided roughly into three zones with the Russians driving across the steppes outside the city and along the streets inside it while the Germans persisted in assaults in the suburbs between these two areas.

Losing 2,000 to 3,000 dead daily, the Germans were forced back through the ruined streets of Stalingrad yesterday while the relief offensive northwest of the city gained a hill-top where the Germans had buried 130 damaged tanks as gun emplacements, the Russians said.

Can't Roll Up Defence Line

Tank-supported Nazi infantrymen, trying to roll the defence lines eastward toward the Volga, were reported by Red Star to have been the victims of a Red Army guard division.

While entrenched Soviet troops held firmly, the guard division struck swiftly against a side of the invasion wedge and compelled the enemy to retreat, leaving war equipment, several hundred dead and some prisoners.

Squad by squad and house by ruined house, the siege-worn garrison was reported ousting the invaders from the footholds gained in a battle launched 40 days ago.

All the news was not good—retirement of a Red Army detachment south of the city was officially noted — but restrained optimism was evident in field dispatches.

The Soviet Information Bureau's accounts remained restrained. Overnight developments were summed up in these words:—

'KIBITZER' FATALLY INJURED

Calgary, Oct. 3. (CP) — Laurie Tokie, 60, a "Kibitzer" in a card game here last night was fatally injured during a scuffle after he had pointed out "a misdeal", police reported early today.

John Benner, 52, alleged to have been involved in the argument over the game, was arrested shortly after Tokie died in the hospital. He is held on a charge of murder.

Reds Fool Nazis by Removing Guns After Giving Enemy Severe Pasting

Moscow, Oct. 3 (AP)—A Soviet war correspondent sent the following story about what happened to a hillock in the battle on the dusty steppe north of Stalingrad:

A German bomber circled the hillock for a long time, studying the "guns." Then, apparently noting they were false, the German pilot flew away to report without dropping a bomb.

Quickly the Russians swapped the guns again for the dummies, concealing their action behind a dust screen stirred up a tractor detailed for that purpose.

"The German bombers were not slow in coming," wrote the correspondent. "They made a great effort to destroy the plywood guns.

"The whole steppe around the hillock was honeycombed with craters and, where the hillock used to be, there now is a pit big enough to hold a two-storey-building.

Japanese Bases In Burma Bombed

New Delhi, India, Oct. 3 (CP).—Bombers and fighters were reported by United States Army Air Force headquarters here today to have left areas of destruction at Japanese bases in upper Burma and the adjoining Chinese province of Yunnan during sorties Sunday and Monday.

All the missions were declared executed without a loss.

A medium bomber, attacking from a 30-foot altitude, demolished a building on the Tinkga, Yunnan, airfield and battered others at Lowing field, where soldiers and laborers working on runways were dispersed, the communique said.

En route back to its Indian base on this solo trip, the bomber crew loosed explosives upon Japanese tractors parked along the railroad tracks near Katha.

The barracks area of Myitkyina, Burma, was the target of another bomber.

"On Sept. 28 Washawng and two adjoining villages in the Myitkyina area were strafed by fighters," the communique said. "Incendiary and fragmentation bombs were dropped and the villages were left in flames."

Edouard Herriot Placed in Prison

LONDON, Oct. 3 — (CP) — The Berlin radio broadcast a report from Vichy today that Edouard Herriot, 70-year-old former premier of France, has been placed in a concentration camp at Vals Les Bains in unoccupied France.

Both the German and Italian radios previously had reported Herriot under arrest at his chateau near Lyon — presumably for opposing the Vichy regime's program of collaboration with the Axis, although the Axis reports gave no reason for his detention.

A Swiss telegraph agency dispatch from Vichy last night said Herriot had been under surveillance for several days after writing a letter to Marshal Petain objecting to suppression of the French Parliament and declaring that Frenchmen would not stand for being dragged into a war against their former Allies.

Boyce of Deseronto was proceeding southerly when it was necessary to stop his vehicle suddenly owing to cars halted in front of him. Following Dr. Boyce was another motor car driven by Wilbert Mackenzie, 329A Front street, who was unable to stop as abruptly as the lead vehicle with the result Mackenzie's car collided with the rear of Dr. Boyce's auto. Chief W. R. Probert was nearby and investigated. The parties concerned agreed upon a mutual settlement and no charges were deemed necessary under the circumstances.

His Worship Mayor G. E. Thompson first notified Acting Sergeant Peter Thomson that a man was lying in his driveway and was unable to get up. Police hastened to the scene and found the 71-year-old man suffering from a black eye, bleeding from the nose and generally suffering from what appeared to have been physical beating. Owing to the advanced age of the victim police took him to the hospital for medical treatment. Dainard told police he had been drinking and was in a fight, but could throw no further light on the matter.

CANADIAN LIQUOR

Large Stocks on Hand

In Vancouver, a United Distillers, Ltd., official said the company had 1,500,000 gallons of liquor in the maturing stage, which would not be affected by the ban. A spokesman for B. C. Distillers, Ltd., said stocks were "quite large."

Rev. J. A. Irwin, secretary of the Canadian Temperance Federation, said at Toronto the news of the order banning liquor production would be welcomed by Temperance people. But he contended it would "scarcely be effective of itself," in promoting temperance.

The Munitions and Supply Department said the order "does not prohibit sales of existing stocks of beverages, but sales and deliveries of future production of alcohol 65 per cent over-proof or higher may be made only under permit of the controller."

Mr. Sterne made it plain that such permits would not be readily forthcoming saying the entire alcohol output of the Canadian distilleries "is essential for the need of synthetic rubber, chemicals and explosive programs which throughout the Allied countries now are co-ordinated and interdependent."

1941 Sales Less

Figures released yesterday by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showed a decrease in production and sale of whiskies and other potable spirits in 1941 compared with 1940 and a sharp increase in production and sale for unmatured alcohol used for industrial purposes.

The report showed 15 companies engaged in the distillation of liquor in Canada during 1941, seven of them in Ontario. There were six in Quebec and two in British Columbia.

These distilleries in 1941 produced and put into bond for maturing 7,674,305 proof gallons, against 7,907,908 gallons in 1940. Spirits bottled or shipped in bulk in 1941 totalled 6,225,365 proof gallons compared with 7,226,704 in 1940.

Increased production of unmatured alcohol stepped up the net value of production for the distilleries from $18,640,545 in 1940 to $22,952,439 in 1941.

Attendance Reduced Somewhat by Travel Restrictions

LIVESTOCK PARADE

After taking a figurative "beating" from the weather man for the past two years, the Tweed Agricultural Society yesterday enjoyed Spring-like weather that attracted 2,500 people to one of the most attractive fairs held in the mid-Hastings village in some time.

The attendance was affected to some extent by the gasoline restrictions and many urban faces usually seen at the Tweed exhibition were missing.

However the rural patrons were out in force and many horses and buggies were noted with other methods of transportation.

The Fair was as colorful as the countryside. The directors provided plenty of entertainment, music, a midway and all the events that characterise county fairs in Hastings.

The exhibits while not perhaps as plentiful as other years clearly demonstrated the progress being made by the agricultural sections of the district as well as business and industry. The entries in the horse classes were exceptionally good and many fine animals were seen on parade. Live stock such as cattle and swine and poultry were slightly lower than preceding years but the quality maintained its high status of former exhibits.

Livestock Parade

One of the features of the exhibition from an agricultural point of view was the parade of livestock which marched past the grandstand late in the afternoon. The cream of equine aristocracy of the district in its various classes of heavy draft, standard and drivers, singly and in pairs drew the applause of the large crowds. Cattle and other animals moved down the track and other features rounded out a colorful demonstration of what livestock breeders of the section are doing.

In the grandstand the Band of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment provided sprightly airs during the afternoon and in no small way contributed to the enjoyment of the crowd.

Splendid Midway.

The midway catered to the wants of a fair-loving crowd bent on an afternoon's enjoyment. The ubiquitous merry-go-round was there and a tented rodeo show added to the general fun. Whirling wheels, weight machines, bingo, "knock down Hitler" and many other games were included in this section of the fair.

The exhibits building contained an outstanding display of milady's handiwork as well as that of school children. A fine grain and seed display was enhanced with floral effects. Of intehest was a display from the Dominion Entomological Laboratory, Belleville. Women's work easily stood out in an exhibit that was as highly interesting.

On a raised dais in front of the grandstand the entertainment dear to the heart of the rural fair-goer was staged. Old time fiddlers and step-dancers vied with log-sawyers and lady nail-drivers in competitions that were closely contested and which held the attention of the crowd.

Good Horse Racing.

Centre of interest of every fair was the trials of speed. Some fine horses were entered in the various classes and the crowd saw some exceptionally fine races which were capably handled by Starter George O. Tice of Belleville. A running race provided a diversion to the harness events. Of more than passing interest to women and proud parents was a baby show.

Weekly War Commentary

By Maj.-Gen. Sir Charles Gwynn

(Written for The Canadian Press by Maj.-Gen. Sir Charles Gwynn)

London, Oct. 3 (CP).—The battle for Stalingrad has gone on without slackening all week. If the Germans have made some progress, they had to admit it was at a very slow rate and their attempts to break the defence into fragments which could be liquidated separately do not appear to have met with much success.

A particularly heavy attack in the northern suburbs of the city looked dangerous but was finally brought to a standstill and the Russians then regained some ground in a strong counter-attack.

Russian reports do not attempt to conceal the fact that their defences are feeling the intense strain and must depend on fresh reinforcements reaching them from across the Volga. The Nazis claim to have reached points on the river bank from which they can restrict the passage of such reinforcements but there is no reason to believe that trans-river traffic has been halted completely.

The mere fact that the defence remains stubborn and active constitutes a real time-gaining success for the Russians. The removal of Field Marshal Fedor von Bock, if true, constitutes an admission of German failure, although it must be conceded that there are equally capable German generals available to replace him.

Von Bock tried several methods of attack. It remains to be seen if his successor has any new ideas.

It must be presumed that von Bock's successor will be given as his principal task the capture of Stalingrad. Hitler's latest speech seems to commit him as deeply to the capture of Stalingrad as von Back was committed.

TIMOSHENKO'S COUNTER-MOVE

Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's counter-attack from the north continues to make some slight progress. He could not be expected to move faster since he has had to encounter a well prepared and defended flank.

So far he at least has added to the rate of expenditure of German troops and material. Thereby he must have increased the strain on communication, which the Nazis admit are bound to represent a bigger problem when Autumn rains begin.

Rain was reported some time ago but it appears to have been followed by a particularly dry spell, more favorable to the Germans than to Timoshenko's counter-offensive which has been handicapped by dried wells and grass fires.

The Germans increased the weight of their drive toward Grozny but the Russians are well maintained there.

The Russian operations around Rzhev are making some progress but it appears the Germans intend to defend this area at all costs.

JAPANESE WITHDRAWAL

In the Solomons, the Japanese attempts to capture Guadalcanal have so far definitely failed but may be renewed. Japanese reinforcement can be landed without great difficulty owing ot the extent of the coastline.

American air defences, however, have been remarkably effective

In New Guinea, the Australians are adapting themselves to Japanese tactics and taking advantage of their better communications. In this way they have recovered some lost ground and compelled the Japanese to withdraw some 10 miles.

Japanese Strains

To maintain even the minimum supplies needed for their troops, the Japanese have exposed their ships and base installations to air attack and the gradual attrition of their shipping may become a serious matter for them.

It is not likely the Australian counter-offensive will be pushed far, but the more active the fighting can be made, the more supplies the Japanese will need with the consequent greater losses on their land lines of communication and shipping.

Broken only by the 8th army's sudden assault designed apparently to straightening out their lines, the lull in the Egyptian desert has continued and it appears the Axis is not now in a position to revive its abortive offensive.

Glancing Back 25 Years

In a brilliant operation in Mesopotamia, British forces under Lt.-Gen. Sir Stanley Maude captured Ramadie, on the river Euphrates, northwest of Bagdad, Sept. 29, 1917.

The Turkish garrison was encircled in a surprise attack the previous day, and surrendered in a body after fighting a few hours. Among the 3,455 prisoners were Gen. Ahmed Bey and members of his staff.

Allied Bombers Start Fires At Sidi Haneish

Cairo, Oct. 3 (AP)—Heavy Allied bombers attacked Axis shipping Thursday night near Derna, Libyan port, and light bombers started fires in a concentrated attack on landing grounds at Sidi Hanbish, British headquarters announced today.

"Yesterday there was nothing to report from our land forces," the headquarters communique said.

However, enemy air activity increased and six German planes were shot down without a loss.

A tanker was set on fire by a British torpedo plane which attacked an Axis convoy north of Tobruk, the communique said.

YUGOSLAVS CAPTURE TOWN

Moscow, Oct. 3 (AP)—The Soviet information bureau reported today that Yugoslav soldiers had occupied the Bosnian town of Yaitse after two days of fierce fighting in which they killed more than 600 German and Italian soldiers and destroyed some 600 blockhouses.

200 IDLE BY FIRE

Tiffin, O., Oct. 3 (AP)—Fire of undetermined origin early today leveled the main manufacturing unit of the Tiffin Art Metal Company, producer of bombs and other war materials. Three workmen were injured.

Company officials and firemen declined to estimate the loss.

More than 200 workmen were made idle by the fire.

AMERICAN COMMANDOS IN TRAINING

Wearing gas masks, these "bushmasters," crack jungle-commando infantry men, at Panama, C.Z., are grim evidence of the deadly surprise awaiting any enemy attack in the Panama area. These troops, highly trained and tough, are under the command of Lt.-Gen. Frank M. Andrews, chief of the Caribbean defence area.

Picton and District

Opening Day Attendance Records Broken at Fair State Officials

Picton, Oct. 3—First day attendance records were shattered at Picton Fair Friday afternoon, officials stated today. Though exhibits are limited to Prince Edward County, they exceeded in number those at any fair in the Bay of Quinte district, judges stated. The quality, too, was high and space in the main building was taxed to capacity. Poultry exhibits were three times as numerous as last year, while school classes brought out more than 500 entries.

Featuring yesterday's events was a baby show with fifty-one entries under 15 months of age. These were judged on the bandstand by Squadron Leader Bergin, who is in charge of the hospital at the R.A.F. He was assisted by Squadron Leader Lapham and Nursing Sister M. Gardiner of the R.A.F. hospital and Mrs. Albert Grinrod and Miss Marjorie Vance of the St. John Ambulance Division. Philip Dodds was in charge of the show, while music was furnished by M.D. No. 3 Depot Band of Kingston.

Betty Mae, fifteen-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carman Scott, Picton, was adjudged the champion baby in the show. Winners in the various classes were:

Girls' 1 year to 18 months: Betty Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Scott, Picton; Judith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roydon Hicks, Picton R. 6; Heather Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Newell.

SHANNONVILLE W.M.S.

The W.M.S. of Shannonville United Church was held at the Church on Thursday afternoon, October first with twelve ladies in attendance. The President, Mrs. Frank Doxtator opened the meeting and Mrs. Harvey Shetler presided at the piano. After the opening hymn all sang "God Save The King" and Mrs. Doxtator gave a reading entitled "The Golden Rule". Roll was called by the Secretary and brought forth a good response of Thanksgiving verses. Minutes of the last meeting were given by the Secretary and adopted. An extra meeting for quilting and dinner in the church hall was planned for October 20. Mrs. H. Murphy and Mrs. W. B. Robertson were appointed delegates to the District Annual at Plainfield. Mrs. Saul MacFarlane then took charge and used the program from the Missionary Monthly. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Robertson. Readings were given by Mrs. A. Houston, Mrs. C. Liddle, Mrs. D. Hinchey and Mrs. S. MacFarlane. Mrs. L. E. Mills led in prayer. After the closing hymn and benediction a delicious lunch was served by the Group Leader and president assisted by Mrs. Everett Stratton and Mrs. D. Hinchey. A social time was enjoyed after the meeting. Collection amounted to $2.30 and for the flower fund 65 cents.

NAZIS LOSING

"Stubborn fighting continues. One guards mortar unit, firing against a concentration of German troops, killed more than 200 officers and men.

In another sector one of our units repulsed three German attacks and destroyed four tanks and about one company of infantry.

Driven Back to Former Posts

"Northwest of Stalingrad our troops waged active operations. Our tank units broke into enemy positions and killed more than 150 Hitlerites."

Sharp combat continued in the industrial northwestern outskirts of Stalingrad, where the Germans have been pressing an offensive since they encountered stonewall resistance elsewhere inside the city.

Red Star said a German infantry division attacked another factory settlement, trying to expand the penertation, but retreated under Soviet fire to its starting point.

The newspaper Isvestia said that a column of tanks which had previously wedged into a workers' development was forced out under heavy fire from Red army artillery batteries.

Hand-to-hand fighting raged in some suburban streets. An entire company of German automatic riflemen was reported exterminated by Soviet infantrymen. In another street the Russians, firing from the attic of a house, forced two enemy companies to retreat with only a few survivors, dispatches said.

The Germans were reported driven from several large buildings, including a four-storey house dominating a broad district where the enemy lost 200 men.

Speed Proves Confusing

Red Star said a Red army force charged German positions, capturing a series of trenches, destroyed five machine-gun nests and a pillbox and killed 150 of the enemy. That chore completed, the Russians moved forward to new positions.

Red Star said the Germans, assuming that the assault force had dug in, rushed up dive-bombers and these raided the empty trenches for several hours without effect.

Garrison forces, inured to the rain of explosives which has beaten upon Stalingrad for only a few hours less than 40 days and 40 nights, were credited with killing 1,800 more Germans in defensive fighting and counter-attacks yesterday.

A Red army detachment which had wedged into Axis positions south of Stalingrad was reported to have made a fighting withdrawal to its starting point, accounting for 16 tanks en route, under the onslaught of a German infantry battalion supported by 50 tanks.

BELLEVILLE COMMUNITY CONCERT ASSOCIATION HOLD MEMBERSHIP DRIVE.

The Belleville Community Concert Association will hold its first annual membership drive next week, from Monday until Saturday.

This is the association that was recently formed to bring to Belleville the world's greatest artists and the world's greatest music. It is sponsored by the Columbia Concerts of New York City, and is the same plan which has brought great artists to similar associations in Brantford, London, Hamilton and St. Catharines in Ontario.

Membership in the organization is by subscription only. Members upon payment of their annual membership dues of $5.00 each are entitled to attend all concerts presented, of which there will be a minimum of three.

If a membership of 500 is secured, such artists as Lansing Hatfield, Rose Bampton, James Melton, the Don Cossacks, Nino Martini, Albert Spalding and others will be available.

The membership drive will last for one week only. After Saturday of next week no memberships will be available until next year. There will be no single admissions sold at the door.

An organization director from Columbia Concerts will be in town next week to assist local committee in putting over this campaign. Invitation to the association is not necessary. All residents of Belleville and vicinity are entitled to join.

Navy Presents Many Opportunities for Learning a Trade

Will qualify young men for peacetime jobs—Studies include machine shop theory, drafting and elementary marine engineering.

From all parts of Canada young men are flowing into the mechanical training establishment of the Royal Canadian Navy to learn a trade with which to fight the Axis. They are the new artificer apprentices.

Combined with the fascinating atmosphere of life in the navy, the training these men are receiving will qualify them as full-fledged machinists, fitters and so son, in about one half the time possible under peace-time conditions.

Everything from delicate machine shop operations to how to form fours and lash-up-and-stow a hammock is part of the daily doutine in the new lives of these new entries into the navy. Many of them later on will know the thrill of adventure as their intensive training continues.

What makes a ship go, how to keep it going through fair weather and foul, how to handle breakdowns at sea, how to maintain a ship's seagoing and fighting efficiency—all these become an open book to the successful apprentices. Whether it is the steady pace of convoy escort or the driving speed-draft speed of a submarine hunt, the thousand-and-one gadgets and gears that control a ship's power will have an exciting meaning for the young man who succeeds. Many, too, will be employed in the important work of shore establishments and repair bases.

While they are acquiring a knowledge of ship's routine and the salty jargon of the navy, these apprentices between the ages of 17 1-2 to 22, are studying such subjects as machine shop theory, drafting and blue-print reading, fitting, mathematics and elementary marine engineering. When they arrive at an east or west coast mechanical training establishment, they have completed pre-enlistment training courses at a vocational training centre.

On the successful completion of the pre-enlistment training, they are taken on active strength as engine room artificer apprentices, electrical artificer apprentices, anti-submarine artificer apprentices or ordnance artificer apprentices.

What part will these men play in the prosecution of the war? They've all heard of the battle of the Atlantic, for instance, and they know that Canada's war ships have played a tremendous part in the maintenance of the life-line to Britain—and keeping the ships at sea is the first essential in this vital aspect of the war against the Axis.

An E.R.A. will be responsible, with others in the ship, for the efficient mechanical condition and state of repair of all boilers and engines, and this necessitates his being a qualified tradesman. Also the efficient and successful running and operation of the boilers and machinery in a vessel and to take charge of a watch at sea—and this necessitates a high degree of technical training in marine engineering and the ability to handle men.

Efficient mechanical and electrical condition of the electric motors, generators, etc., in a ship is required of an E.A., so he must be a highly trained machinist and electrician.

Successful operation and mechanical efficiency of all the guns, the offensive and defensive armament in a ship is the responsibility of the O.A. He must be a machinist and possess a knowledge of hydraulic machinery recoil cylinders, etc.

The anti-submarine artificer is responsible for the efficient operation of the ship's anti-submarine devices. He must be an expert fitter with electric motors, lead-cased wiring, delicate instruments, and so on.

The men who are successful in their work, which involves hard work and initiative, will have these various qualifications. Opportunity is open to a good proportion to qualify for selection for entry into the R.C.N., or permanent force, and such candidates will gain a naval career with all its benefits. The remainder, after service with the R.C.N.V.R. for the duration of hostilities, will return to civil life as qualified tradesmen-machinists, fitters, etc.

Naval authorities declare "such an opportunity has never before been afforded to a young man to complete an apprenticeship in about one-half the time it would require under peace time conditions and thus enable him to fulfill a most important contribution to his country."

Fellow Officers Praise Leadership Of Col. Merritt

Somewhere in England, Oct. 3 — (CP) — The gallantry of Lt.-Col. Cecil Merritt, awarded the Victoria Cross yesterday, will never be forgotten by the South Saskatchewan Regiment whose men followed him through the operation but came back without him.

The 34-year-old commander, a peacetime lawyer in Vancouver and a graduate of Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., flaunted his brave leadership in the face of the Nazi defenders from the moment he landed until he was last seen at Pourville where his men scored one of the operation's outstanding successes.

He is listed as wounded and a prisoner of war. The men of the South Saskatchewan Regiment, in their camp in Southern England, say he was on Pourville promenade shortly before the re-embarkation, having brought his troops back from a deep penetration inland.

But no one remembers having seen him after that last appearance on the promenade, waving his men to the boats that brought them back to England.

"Never a Finer Man"

"There was never a better commander nor a finer man," said one of the officers who took part in the raid. "When he first came to the unit from a staff job a few months ago we wondered how he would be.

"He succeeded a commander admired and respected by every man in the unit. That man now is known as Brigadier Lett, who also played a prominent part in the Dieppe operation and was wounded.

"I worked closely with the new colonel and for about a month was undecided about him. Then I realized what a wonderful man he was."

Even on exercises, the tall, dark commander was always out there in front, leading the way and setting the pace, said other men of the camp.

Thought Venture Too Risky

Some of the officers decided that he was all right in training but when the real thing came along it would be too risky for their commander, they thought.

They told him and later told him again.

When the assault craft taking the South Saskatchewans to Dieppe approached the beach, one officer reminded the commander once more.

But during the operation, he still found his way out front.

Enjoyed Difficult Tasks

"I had often noticed during exercises that when the commander had done something difficult and special he would show up with his eyes twinkling," said another officer.

"On one occasion over there at Pourville, the commander came along, his eyes twinkling the same old way.

" 'Well, what is it this time?' I asked him.

" 'Oh, a pillbox — just knocked one out,' he said. 'You should try it.' "

The unit's new commander, formerly second-in-command, who missed the Dieppe operations, praised Col. Merritt as an "Outstanding C. O. who proved himself a good leader."

'Of All We Are Profoundly Proud'

Prime Minister King paid an impressive tribute to the members of the Canadian forces who fought upon the beaches of Dieppe when he said:

"The honors constitute an official recognition of what we all so deeply feel about the men who on that day took part in that engagement. These will be but a part of the larger recognition which has added Dieppe to the imperishable list of battle honors of the Canadian forces.

"In the heat and fury of battle, much gallantry and self-sacrifice inevitably passes unnoticed. Moreover, no gallantry, however great, can equal the sacrifice of life itself. We are fully conscious of this as we pay our special tribute to the brave officers and men whose names have been selected for signal honors. Of all we are profoundly proud."

Mr. King's speech was eloquent in praise of the men who represented Canada on that day and he paid honor to Lt.-Col. C. C. I. Merritt of Vancouver and Belleville, "that heroic officer who for bravery and gallant leadership, has been awarded the Victoria Cross. Col Merritt made sure, says the report of the day's events, of the safety and well-being of all ranks, except himself and twice wounded, now is believed to be a prisoner in the hands of the enemy. As the first Canadian to win, in this war, the highest award for valor, his name will always hold a proud place in our country's history."

Mr. King's fine words will be cherished by the men serving at Dieppe who returned wounded or unharmed and by the relatives and friends of those who on that day fell in the last supreme act of their devotion to Canada and freedom. His praise of the men singled out for honor for conspicuous bravery expressed the heart of the nation.

Wartime Design for Living

When Finance Minister Ilsley declared that there must be a lowering of the standards of living and actual reduction in the personal outlay, he struck a point that needs to be emphasized Some persons have not yet come to the full realization of this fact that in war the state is on war footing and that its aim is to carry on the war with the fullest effort, leaving only the absolutely essential for the ordinary comforts and ways of life. Men serving in the Canadian active forces endure training and hardship as good soldiers and place their lives and health on the altar of the nation's continued freedom. The people at home, not so privileged to serve, must be doing their whole part as civilians as far as they can like good soldiers, sailors and airmen.

Mr. Ilsley made a strong point when he referred to Russia as having "little to bolster her morale in these days—but that morale is the wonder of the world and the despair of our enemies."

Moscow, Leningrad and now Stalingrad stand as the bastions of Russia because her people have acted greatly. Today what they are doing goes far to determine the future course of history along the democratic and free way.

No one can explain away the great deeds of the Russian people, the British people and all the United Nations.

So those who live far from the battlefront, can think it a little thing to do what they will be called on to do when Mr. Ilsley says that keeping up with the Jones's is or must be out from now on, no one can fail to agree with his appeal that we must be prepared to wear our clothes for a longer time, see our houses less well kept, get along with any but the most essential servants in our homes, in clubs and hotels . . . and let me add, we must not give in to the tempting, comfortable doctrine that this or that is needed to maintain our morale."

With the demonstration of the heroism of the men who fought, died or suffered at Dieppe, and in the air force or on the seas, and in the knowledge of what the British, Russian and other peoples have endured, Canadians will welcome the forthcoming Third Victory Loan and show thereby their support of the armed forces who are in action or ready for action and of every factor in the Dominion's war effort.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

THE BIRTH OF ST. PATRICK

On the eighth day of March it was, some people say,
That Saint Patrick at midnight he first saw the day;
While others declare 'twas the ninth he was born,
And 'twas all a mistake between midnight and morn;
For mistakes will occur in a hurry and shock,
And some blamed the baby and some blame the clock—
Till with all their cross-questions sure no one could know
If the child was too fast, or the clock was too slow.

Now the first faction-fight in owld Ireland they say
Was all on account of St. Patrick's birthday:
Some fought for the eighth—for the ninth more would die,
At last both the factions so positive grew,
That each had a birthday, so Pat then had two,
Till Father Mulcahy, who showed them their sins,
Said, "No one could have two birthdays but twins."

Says he, "Boys don't be fightin' for eight or a nine,
Don't be always dividin' — but sometimes combine;
Combine eight with the nine, and seventeen is the mark,
So let that be his birthday"—"Amen" says the clerk.
"If he wasn't twins, sure our history will show
That at least he is worth any two saints that we know!"

HOW TO GET A DUCK DINNER

Sneak out from the hide and stalk the unsuspecting duck. Tickle it between the ears with the tail feather of a mate and it will die laughing.

Boldly row to where a flock is feeding and tell them the story of Drake and Plymouth Hoe. They will expand with pride until one or another of the fatter ones explode with importance and pride.

Insert a mechanism that produces laughing inside a wooden decoy, and set it loose among the rushes. The fighter ducks will break their necks in dive bomber attacks on the enemy.

Disguise yourself as a bag of grain and try to look seedy. Float out into the stream and when the ducks approach look them straight in the eye. Emit a couple of quacks and when the duck opens its mouth to laugh promptly reach out and choke it. A shot of rye will help.

Use cartridges with rubber bands attached. The pellets when they strike the duck, will pass through and clinch themselves on the other side. The rubber band will retrieve the ducks to your gun barrel.

Pay another hunter a buck apiece for the birds. If he is not looking you may get them cheaper.

RAZORS INTO BOMBS

A saving of 600,000,000 razor blades plus razors this year will release 1,550 tons of steel. It shows the costs of war if all the razors and blades of the American people would make approximately 5,000 bombs of the heaviest calibre. A heavy bomber costs approximately a quarter of a million dollars. That sum will provide 50,000 American males with a year's supply of razor blades.

Actually, many razor-blade consumers will do more than just get by with the shorter blade allowance. The thing can actually be turned to a profit. Men have shaved at night before going out to the theatre or to dinner, and the next morning have been driven once more to the shaving mirror, like the quarry slave to his dungeon, their protests about chapped faces scorned or unheard. They can now make out a fine case for going down to the office a bit fuzzy around the face. They will be doing their bit for the nation's steel supply. Some of us, the bolder of us, may even succeed in working the game at night before the theatre or dinner party. A touch of talcum and a heavy dose of patriotism, and there you are, not perfect, perhaps, but passable.—New York Times.

THE SOLDIER

The day they sent him forth to die
He did not question: If I stay
Beyond the hour will double pay
Be granted? Will my captain see
No task unusual falls to me?
But ordered out, he touched his cap,
They heard his heels together snap
And off he went on duty bent
Without one word of argument,

At war to save his native land,
A soldier at youth's finest age
He gave no thought to time or wage
Nor asked an easier command.
But at attention calmly stood;
Saluted as a soldier should,
And putting selfish ends aside
To serve, his country bravely died.

Oh, whether tasks be great or small,
The lads of land and sea and sky,
By day and night go forth to die
In freedom's cause as soldiers all.
Arrayed in freedom's uniform
They ride the clouds and brave the storm,
And all we ever hear them ask
Is tools to do their fearful task.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

Internal Ailments Cause Some Cases of Pyorrhoea

A patient consulted his physician regarding his constant feeling of tiredness. He was tired when he arose in the morning and tired during the day despite 8 hours of sound sleep every night. The physician found the iron in the blood to be slightly below normal and the blood pressure also slightly below normal. The lungs were clear. The liver and gall bladder were normal and constipation was not present. The use of a special lamp revealed a dark spot on the root of one of his teeth which dark spot was present also when an X-ray was made. The physician suggested that he consult his dentist about removal of the infected teeth. The dentist did not wish to remove the tooth and suggested that the physician look further for the cause of his tiredness and sleepiness.

Much against his will the physician made another complete examination and found nothing wrong. The dentist then removed the tooth which was found to be in even worse condition than shown by the X-ray. Within six weeks the tiredness and sleepiness disappeared.

Now the dentist might have suggested that the teeth do not decay or become infected unless the health habits of the patient are wrong — not enough vitamins and minerals in the food, which should have been prevented by the physician.

However there is apparently one ailment of the body which comes within the dentist's care that is more immediately or directly due to a general condition of the body than to the mouth itself. This is inflammation of the gums or pyorrhoea.

Dr. Bernhard Gottlieb, a physician of Dallas, Texas, in the Journal of the American Dental Association states that if a case of inflamed gums — pyorrhoea — fails to respond to local treatment, there is some internal cause present. He says further:—

"Sometimes the physician requests that the patient's apparently pyorrhic teeth be removed because they are causing some internal trouble. The dentist may have treated that patient just previously without success. I would say to this physician: Cure the internal trouble and the bad gum condition will improve."

The point is that while infected teeth can cause some general condition such as rheumatism, so can some general conditions such as rheumatism or other disease cause gum trouble.

HOW CANADIANS GAVE "AILERON" FOR AIR CRAFT

Small Wing Flap Important to Planes Was Invented in Cape Breton Village by Bell's Group

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP).—In these days of world-girdling air journeys and stratospheric aerial fighting between swift-circling and darting planes few people realize that the wing development making such flight possible was perfected in a little Canadian village just 35 years ago.

The "aileron", or small wing flap which enables planes to bank and make quick turns in full flight, was the invention of "Aerial Experiment Association", a group formed by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell at his Cape Breton home, Beinn Breagh, near Baddeck, on Oct. 1, 1907.

Dr. Bell was already well known to fame from his invention of the telephone. Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1847, he came to Canada in 1870. His first trial of the distance talking system which was to revolutionize the communications of the world took place in Brantford, Ont., in 1876, and was patented the same year.

J. A. D. McCurdy, who made the first aviation flight in the British Empire at Baddeck in 1909 and was a member of the Aerial Experiment Association, now is an executive of the aircraft division of the department of munitions and supply. He and Henri Farman, great French pioneer of aviation, named the aerial wing development of 1907 the "aileron".

Dr. Bell and his associates had invented it in the course of their experiments with a small powered "kite", when they discovered that, while they could make short flights of 100 feet or so they must have some form of lateral control.

They placed small movable sections on the edge of the wings which when the craft tipped, would be automatically depressed or raised by the sway of the operator's body—the pilot was suspended in the structure in those pioneer days—and thus bring the plane back to an even keel.

Mr. McCurdy thus describes the introduction of this development to aviation generally: "It was around Sept. 1, 1908. The American Aero Club invited Henri Farman, premier flyer of Europe, to demonstrate to the American public the machine which he had been successfully flying near Paris.

"His exhibition took place at a race course just outside of New York City. Farman took off and flew at an elevation of about five feet, flew for about 100 yards and landed. His mechanic turned the machine around by hand and flew back.

"I met him after he left the pilot's seat and asked him why he could not fly higher and make circles around the track, as he had been doing throughout the summer. He replied that it was impossible because the plane would tip over. He spoke broken English and I had no French so I had great difficulty explaining to him how we had overcome this by invention of the moveable wing tips.

"It was only when I used the words 'little wings' that he exclaimed: 'ah, ailerons,' and a smile spread over his whole face.

Newspaper men present were so interested in the discussion that they picked up that word and spread it in the papers next morning. The appellation has remained ever since."

Mr. McCurdy, tall, spare and now somewhat grizzled but youthful and keen, has given his life to the development of aviation and still contributes.

He remains one of the closest links with the life and experiments of Dr. Bell who, by chance of shipwreck while enroute to England in 1886, was landed in Cape Breton, visited the Bras d'Or Lake region and determined to make his home on a hillside near Baddeck, naming it "Beinn Breagh", gaelic which may roughly be translated as "Beautiful Hill". There he built a substantial home and experimental laboratories. McCurdy, a native of Baddeck, went to the Bells from his engineering studies at McGill University.

Others about Dr. Bell were F. W. "Casey" Baldwin, another Canadian flyer who afterwards worked with the Wrights; Lieut. Thomas E. Selfridge, United States Army who was soon to give his life in experiments with aircraft built by the association and Glen. H. Curtis, American motorcycle manufacturer who was to become a great figure in aviation.

Early Flights.

Dr. Bell had developed the telephone and kindred appliances and was turning his mind to aviation. Mrs. Bell was his constant companion and aid and it was her money and inspiration that financed and originated Aerial Experiment Association. It was at an after-dinner discussion in Beinn Breagh's spacious hall, under the light of oil lamps and before a roaring fire that the association was born on a chill fall evening 35 years ago.

Four machines were built and flown. The Silver Dart was flown from the ice of Bras d'Or Lake Feb. 23, 1909, for a distance of three-quarters of a mile—the first heavier than air flight in the British Empire, with Casey Baldwin at the controls.

Mr. McCurdy likes to talk of those old days when he and his associates, under Dr. Bell's direction, attached themselves to great box-like kites and were thrown off Beinn Breagh's lofty promontories in their first efforts at flight. Those experiments were made in the winter time when soft snow at the bottom would cushion their fall.

Late in the summer of 1922 Mr. McCurdy made a sad pilgrimage to Beinn Breagh. He and a small group of Dr. Bell's relatives joined with the people of Baddeck and the surrounding country on a last climb to the peak of the mountain where Dr. Bell's body was laid in a grave blasted from the solid earth beneath his giant tetrahedral observation tower.

A few years later the ashes of Mrs. Bell were brought home to Beinn Breagh and laid beside the body of her husband.

Hitler's I.O.U. To German People Still Unpaid

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Hitler's I.O.U. to his war-weary people for the capture of Stalingrad still is unpaid The interest rate it bears in Axis blood is beyond estimation; beyond any conceivable strictly military strategic value attaching to possession of the ruined industrial metropolis—except one.

The prestige and morale value of Stalingrad to Nazis and Russians alike are plain to see. Should it hold against all odds, Russian hope, courage and determination must soar to new heights and Hitler prestige at home and abroad drop to a new low. Whether in excuse for the terrible blood-letting he has decreed to accomplish its capture or because Stalingrad even in utter ruins is as vital strategically to his war design in Russia as he said, the Nazi warlord spent much time in his Berlin broadcast depicting its importance.

Conquests in Jeopardy.

He scornfully waved aside the notion that he had ordered the conquest of Stalingrad because it bore the symbolic name of his great Eastern rival, the man of steel in the Kremlin. Only military reasoning, not Hitlerian dramatics, had dictated the costly siege, he contended.

He clearly made Stalingrad the military key to the horn-of-plenty he pictured opened by his Russian conquest not only for Germans and their Axis mates; but for soon-to-be-Hitlerized Europe.

That is where the exception noted above presents itself. If Stalingrad in a military sense is as vital to the security of Nazi 1942 conquests as Hitler painted it, the converse must also be true. It follows logically that if it is not taken and taken soon, all or a major portion of the fruits of victory he itemized must be placed in jeopardy.

"The occupation of Stalingrad... will strengthen and deepen" an already "gigantic" German success Hitler said. By the same token failure to take it must weaken and imperil much of that success. That is the alluring thought which must fill the dreams of Russian leadership and evoke new prodigies of heroic valor from the city's garrison.

Is there an intimation in the Hitler resume that if his armies fail to take Stalingrad—which he did not admit as even a possibility—they might have to fall back for the winter on a broad front in the south? It is there by implication. It is there, too, by any study of the war map of Southern Russia and the Caucasus.

Might Be Forced Back.

Without Stalingrad as its forward anchor on the Volga, the Nazi winter line well might be forced to fall back behind the Don or even the Donets. That bulge across the Don-Volga corridor to Stalingrad was driven in "exclusively because it (Stalingrad) is a strategically important place,' Hitler said.

"The exclusion of the Don, Volga and Dnieper traffic arteries means for Russia approximately the same or even worse than if we, in Germany, would lose the Rhine, the Elbe, the Oder and the Danube."

And without the Stalingrad anchor that "exclusion" from Russian use of the Volga and the Don is insecurely achieved. Without that bulge to the north, Nazi penetration of the Central Caucasus to the close vicinity of the Grozny oil field would be up in the air.

Typhoon Pictured As Superior Even To the Spitfire

London, Oct. 3 (AP)—The designer of the famous Hurricane fighting plane, one of Britain's leading air weapons, has fathered another fighter, the Typhoon, which was pictured today as superior even to the celebrated Spitfire.

The Typhoon was reported to be a decisive retort to Germany's bid for air superiority in the Focke-Wulf 190, the only Axis plane which has presented a serious challenge to the Spitfire.

The Typhoon, a single-engined plane unofficially credited with a speed of more than 400 miles an hour like the Spitfire, is still on the secret list.

Designer Sydney Camm is perhaps the top British designer since the death of R. J. Mitchell, father of the Spitfire.

The Typhoon is armed with machine-guns and cannon and is said to have an amazing climbing ability.

BRITISH MAJOR AWARDED V. C.

Saved a Sergeant at Dieppe and Then Led Bayonet Charge

London, Oct. 3 (CP)—A British Major who, though wounded, saved a sergeant at Dieppe and then led his detachment in a bayonet charge against the Germans, was awarded the Victoria Cross.

Capt. (temporary Maj.) Patrick Porteus of the Royal Artillery Regiment was acting as liaison officer between two detachments assaulting heavy coast defence guns when he was shot through the hand at close range.

Soon after all the officers of one of the detachments were killed and the advance was checked. Porteus dashed through the hail of fire and took over command.

Rallying the men, Porteus led a bayonet charge and took the German position, though severely wounded a second time in the thigh.

He collapsed after the objective—destruction of the Nazi guns—had been accomplished.

Tactical Exercise Executed by A.L.I.

Staging the tactical exercise of defending the footbridge against the attack of an opposing force, "A" Company of the Argyll Light Infantry (Tank) successfully held the local river crossing against capture last evening when "B" Company of the same regiment was forced to retire under a concealing smoke screen.

The exercise was held in connection with the current recruiting drive of the local reserve regiment and was lent a realistic touch with the explosion of thunder flashes and the brilliant flare of rockets from Very pistols as the defenders fought off the attacking force. "B" Company was forced to retire up the footbridge gangway and covered their retreat with smoke from a smoke generator placed on Front Street.

Pedestrians on Front Street and in other parts of the city were at loss to understand the cause of the thunderous explosions on the banks of the river, but their fears were soon rested when a voice over a loud speaking system informed listeners the exercise was part of a recruiting drive for the Argylls. "A" Company, which successfully defended the bridge, was in charge of Lieut. Dixon, while commander of "B" Company was Lieut. Shapiro.

Select Wisely In 1942 Gifts For Overseas

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 3 —(CP)— When Canadian postal authorities have nightmares they don't fall over cliffs or race two steps ahead of a flame-spouting dragon. What they may see is a mass of parcels for soldiers overseas and the stopper slowly coming out of a huge vat of maple syrup.

Having asked that Christmas mail for the men overseas be mailed before the deadline date of Nov. 10—if possible during October—officials, urge that the mail be properly addressed to facilitate movement.

Then they plead for wise selection of the gifts to be sent and equally wise selection of containers in which they are placed.

Maple syrup has caused endless woe. The folks at home want to send it and the men overseas want to get it. But bottles break and caps come loose, and not only one parcel but bags of parcels can be ruined. The man receiving the gift will get a few bits of broken glass instead of syrup — and everything else in the parcel is either damaged or destroyed. "Not much of a gift to open on Christmas morning," one official commented.

Glass bottles of any kind are unpopular with the post office. It is not possible for all mail to be handled with kid gloves. Ships have to be loaded in a hurry sometimes. and, with tons of mail, individual care for any parcel is not possible.

"We have had sorrowful experiences with bottles and jars containing jam, pickles and other kinds of food," an official said. "We have had trouble with tins containing liquids or solid foods where the caps have simply been pressed on and have come adrift while being transported. And, grapes, bananas and other perishable fresh fruits usually cause trouble."

Cake a Favorite.

Apart from these problem children of the post office world, an abundance of toothsome morsels can be sent for Christmas—or any other day — and arrive safely.

Officials guessed that Christmas presents of the men overseas are cake as often as anything else. A cake placed in a tin or other strong container is practically sure to arrive in good condition.

"About the best way of doing it is to make sure that the package is securely sewn in cloth with the address label firmly attached," a post office expert said. "We also suggest that those sending parcels insert a slip inside the package giving the name of the sender and the person for whom it is meant. This guards against damage to the outer label. If we have the inner slip as well, the parcel can still go on to its proper destination."

Among other pet hates of the department are matches and lighter fluids. "These things not only threaten the safety of the mail, but they threaten the entire ship and its cargo," the official said. "This has been stated many times, but they still turn up in parcels occasionally."

Watch for Heat.

Canadian postal authorities have been advised from England that parcels to Canadians in the Middle East and in Ceylon should not contain foodstuffs and confectionary likely to be affected by severe heat. Chocolate candies are likely to suffer damage, for instance

Light cardboard boxes not packed carefully give trouble. When placed with other parcels they are likely to be crushed and the string is loosened and falls off. Next the covering paper goes, taking the address with it — and the post office has a new problem on its hands and a soldier goes without the parcel he expected.

Officials have this bit of kindly counsel for those who are full of good intentions and sometimes fail to follow through:—

"Don't write a man overseas saying you are sending him a parcel until it is actually mailed. Disappointment is caused to a man who receives a letter saying a parcel is on the way and who waits patiently and then fails to receive it.

"'He suspects it has been stolen or has been lost, and has a feeling of frustration. But practically always he will receive the promised parcel if you tell him it is coming only after it has been mailed. If he gets the letter promising it after it has been received, then no harm is done."

Whoever You Are . . . Whatever Your Job . . . .

Here is what Canada Needs of YOU...

THIS is a war of peoples—not just of armed forces. Somewhere in Germany is your "opposite number"— living on a meagre margin, sacrificing every day to win the war—compelled to do it!

You live in a free country. But unless you, and others like you, do of your own free will better than the enemy can do by compulsion, we can lose the war.

WHAT CANADA ASKS OF YOU

Every day that passes Canada must spend for war purposes Six Million Dollars over and above taxation. It can only come from voluntary loans by her people. Each one must accept his or her just share of responsibility.

What's your share of the savings job? Well, the average Canadian would have to lend to Canada to meet Canada's need $1 in every $5 of income left after taxes and compulsory savings have been collected. The average may not fit your case. Your own circumstances are distinctly your own. You may be able to do better both out of your current income and out of your accumulated savings in the bank—or you may not be able to reach the average. Your share of voluntary savings is every dollar you can possibly spare.

HOW YOU CAN DO IT

To do the utmost of which you are capable, you must budget your living expenses every week to cut out every item of needless expenditure and never spend more than your budget allows.

This is what Canada is asking of you to help win the war . . . to lend your money while others are risking their lives. It is, in fact, hardly self-denial— because you will be laying up for yourself the best of all investments—VICTORY BONDS are backed by all the resources of the Dominion of Canada; they yield a fair rate of interest; you can borrow against them and they are readily saleable when you need the cash.

St. John's Anglican Church, Port Arthur, was the scene of a wedding, Monday at 6.45 when Mary Louise Craven, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Craven of McIntyre, became the bride of William Rinaldo Falls, R.C.A.F., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Falls, Fort William. Rev. Julian Smedley officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor length gown of white jersey. The bodice had a white jersey background with a blue and fuschia flower design, and with a heart shaped neckline. She wore gardenias in her hair and a corsage of white gardenias.

There were no attendants.

A wedding breakfast was held at the home of the bridegroom's parents. Mrs. Falls received in a rust gown with a lace bodice and sweetheart neckline. A two tier wedding cake topped with a bride and groom and flanked by flowers and candles, was placed on the bride's table.

Mr. and Mrs. Falls left for a trip to Minneapolis. For travelling the bride wore a red wool crepe dress with a tweed top coat. Her hat and pumps were black.

Two wires of congratulations were received by the bride from her two brothers in the R.C.A.F., who are stationed at Ottawa and Trenton. Mr. and Mrs. Falls will reside in Saskatoon, where the bridegroom is stationed.

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Party and Gift for Army Nurse

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have a very dear friend, an Army nurse, who is leaving soon, I would like very much to invite her close friends to a tea in her honor and I would like to combine it with a shower. Would you please answer a few questions concerning this?

Is it proper to call this kind of party a "shower," If not, what could I call it to let the girls know they should bring a gift for her?

Do you think it would be best for us to obtain, if possible, a list of the articles she will need, or do you think it would be better for all the girls to chip in and buy one "important" gift, perhaps a fitted toilet case?

Lorraine.

I believe it would be best just to call your party "a tea," and then, in your invitations, whether telephoned, verbal, or written, tell your guests about your plans for the "going-away present." However, there's no reason why you shouldn't call it a "shower," if you think this name might give a more festive suggestion to the party.

I think that you and your friends might run into some difficulties if you attempt to supply the articles in the nurses' required list — these articles are restricted as to kind, number and so forth, and your friend can more easily get these than you can.

But I'm completely enthusiastic about your concentrating on one important gift. Couldn't you or one of your friends do a bit of subtle questioning of the nurse, to get some helpful pointers as to what she really needs? Then you might choose the gift, take it with the proviso that it may be exchanged, and tell her of this proviso. So important is one single gift like this for her particular use that you should surround it with every possible foresight. Remember, don't have it marked until she approves.

Mother to Mother

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My fiance is in the Service, and we plan to be married the last part of October, whenever he can get his furlough.

Because of distance, our families have never met, and it will be impossible for them to meet until his family comes here for our wedding. His mother and I have been writing to each other for about six months. My mother has been wondering if she should write to his mother. Do you think she should? If so, what should she say in her letter?

B. A.

Although customarily the fiance's mother, when she cannot call on her son's fiancee and her mother, writes to both the fiancee and her mother, don't let this formality stand in your way. Have your mother write a warm, friendly note to your fiance's mother, telling her how delighted she is about the engagement and how much she admires and is devoted to your fiance. Then it would be natural for her to chat about the plans for your wedding, to tell of her happiness in the anticipation of welcoming them when they come to the wedding. Her mother's heart will know what that other mother's heart will want to have her say, and what she will want to know about the wedding plans.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Must Get Letter to Soldier

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Please help me, if you can, as soon as possible. There is a boy in the service to whom I must write. Circumstances prevent his writing to me, but I must get a letter to him.

Waiting.

Write to the Adjutant General's Office, Enlisted Personnel, War Dept., Washington, D.C., and ask for your friend's address, stating that you must get in touch with him at once, that the camp at which he was stationed was such and such and the state so and so, but you do not know the name of his company.

* * *

Married Six Months, Haven't Told Parents

Dear Miss Fairfax:

About a month before my fiance, a soldier went overseas I married him secretely without telling my mother, father or any member of the family. I now find I'm going to have a baby. As I have no money, no allotment and my parents are not in a position to help me, can I claim hospitalization as a soldier's wife?

Terribly Worried.

You must, of course, tell your parents immediately that you've been married; then show your marriage certificate to the officer in charge of Army Emergency Relief so that you can secure hospitalization at your nearest camp, if they have room for you. Get your husband to apply for an allotment, but if he's overseas and can't get in touch with him, fill out your own application.

Change of Address

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My husband is in the Army overseas, and it takes a long time for mail to reach him. I have been receiving an allotment check regularly, and as I have recently moved, where should I write to notify of my change in address?

Mrs. T.

Write to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, Washington, D.C., and the Adjutant General's Office, War Department, Washington, D.C.

Enlistment After Receiving

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I was in the 18-20 draft, and expect they will call on me before very long. How long before my draft number is reached am I given time to enlist?

Almost Twenty.

A registrant may voluntarily enlist in any branch he desires, if he does so before he receives his orders to report to the Army Examination Station for induction. However, if he waits too long, he must go through with the plans of his local Draft Board.

Mr. and Mrs. John Colden Celebrate 58th Wedding Anniversary on Sunday

Employees of the Belleville Waterworks Department still come to him seeking information regarding equipment of the service or asking the location of mains throughout the city. And with a wealth of experience gained by 30 years' association with the service, his decisions are unerringly correct.

He is Mr. John Colden, 21 Reid Street, Belleville, who became employed with the local waterworks department in 1905 and rose to the position of foreman with the service before he resigned in 1935 when he was forced to retire owing to ill health.

Now in his 78th year, he and his wife, the former Hannah Paul Sweet of Newburgh, will on Sunday celebrate the 58th anniversary of their wedding in the quiet of their home. Felicitations from friends and relatives there will be, but no elaborate celebration has been planned.

Although born in the 8th concession of Tyendinaga, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Colden, the veteran of the local waterworks service has lived practically all his life in Belleville. He first came to this city when only 15 years of age and took up residence here following his marriage in Newburgh 58 years ago.

Shortly after their marriage, however, the Coldens moved to the bride's former home in Newburgh and the next few years saw the young husband engaged in a multifarious round of employment ranging from river driving and shantying to working with the Grand Trunk Railway and in the cement plant at Point Anne.

Moved Here in 1898

The Coldens returned to Belleville to live in 1898 and seven years later Mr. Colden entered the employ of the local waterworks department.

While they were in Newburgh, however, Mrs. Colden recalls witnessing a tragedy of river driving days. An elderly woman was crossing a log jam in the Napanee River when the force of water broke the jam and carried the woman to death in a torrent of twisting logs and foaming water.

The Coldens have seen a great change in the city since they first came to reside here 58 years ago.

"Why," recalls Mr. Colden, "east of Charles Street was a commons when we first came to Belleville." The local waterworks system has also taken great strides since his term of employment started with the service. In 1905 the number of services totalled only 1,200 while 1935 had seen this increased over three times.

Says Spare Watermain Justified

Still vitally interested in his former job, Mr. Colden loves to talk of laying mains and services. He views the decision of a former city council to build what was then called a "spare" watermain from the filtration plant to the river, "one of the greatest strokes of business they ever did."

The recent discovery that the condition of the water pressure tank on Hillcrest Avenue "was none too good," came as no surprise to Mr. Colden. "Why when I last cleaned the tank out seven or eight years ago, the rivets were then beginning to rust through, some of them showing as much as one quarter corrosion."

Lifelong members of the Methodist and present United Church, the Coldens have now given up regular attendance owing to their inability "to get about as well as we used to." They still listen to sermons over the radio, however, while Mr. Colden is a real sporting enthusiast and listens regularly to hockey games, baseball, and prize fights. He also listens to the news and takes a vital interest in war events.

Fraternally Mr. Colden is a Mason and is a life member of No. 11 Moira Masonic Lodge. He is also a member of the Orange Order. Mrs. Colden is a member only of Tabernacle Street Church. "I've never been a great joiner," she says.

Main Hobby Was Fishing

Of hobbies Mr. Colden has but one. That is fishing. But rheumatism of late years has considerably hampered his enjoyment of this pastime.

Both great lovers of reading, the Coldens have read the Intelligencer and the Ontario Intelligencer for a great many years, Mr. Colden since he was 15 years old. Of how he first became a subscriber of the then Weekly Intelligencer, Mr. Colden now laughs heartily.

When he first came to the city at 15 years of age, he was intrigued by the sight of the newspaper press as he passed the offices of the Intelligencer, then at the corner of Front and McAnnany Streets. Stopping to view the machinery through the open door he was invited in by one of the employees who showed him the intricacies of the printing shop. "Before I came out, the fellow had talked me into being a subscriber to the paper," stated Mr. Colden.

Strong Conservative

A lifelong Conservative in politics Mr. Colden has no use for "turncoats." "I never voted anything but Conservative in my life," he said. "But in municipal elections I vote for my man."

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Colden, all of them now living in Belleville. They are William Colden of Boswell Street; Samuel Colden of Station Street, and Hannah Eleanor, now Mrs. Lee Norris of Cannifton Road. They have eleven grandchildren and "almost as many great grandchildren."

"I have to set the table and call the roll," laughed Mrs. Colden, as she named over their grandchildren and great grandchildren.

Ultraviolet Lamps in Schools Curb Spread of Disease

For many years engineers and doctors have been studying the value of ultraviolet rays for disinfecting the air to prevent the spread of epidemic diseases. A recent report of the successful use of ultraviolet lamps in classrooms during an epidemic of measles seems to show that there may be great value in this idea.

The spread of catching diseases in school rooms is difficult to control. When children are in a group and one of them comes down with an infection, it easily is passed on to others.

An interesting study, carried out by Drs. W. F. and M. W. Wells of the University of Pennsylvania, shows a possibility for controlling the spread of these infections, to some extent at least. They have collected evidence that ultraviolet ray lamps kept constantly going in school classrooms may help to check the spread of measles and possibly, chickenpox and mumps. These lamps do not shine directly on the children, but their rays are carried upward toward the ceiling.

An epidemic of measles broke out in the community where the lamps were installed, and it appeared that their use checked the spread of the disease in the 22 classrooms in which they were installed. In 1940, an epidemic of measles broke out in the city. Of course, many of the children in the rooms where the lamps were used contracted measles at home but it was found that in the school rooms only about one out of every eight children exposed to the disease caught the measles, while in the rooms where the lamps were not used more than half of the children exposed contracted measles.

Of course, it is not desirable to make an effort to keep children from ever getting measles, since they do develop sooner or later in practically all instances. However, this disease has its worst effects in younger children and if by the use of the lamps in schools the spread of this disease may be limited among the younger children, lives may be saved and much permanent damage to health prevented.

The value of the ultraviolet ray lamps in the prevention of the spread of colds has not as yet been definitely determined. Experiments are going on in an effort to find out if their use in schools may not be of some value in the prevention of colds and similar infections. It would appears that these lamps also have great usefulness in the prevention of the spread of infections in wards of hospitals, in nurseries, and in operating rooms. Thus, another weapon may have been added to the armament needed to prevent spreading of infectious diseases.

Spot Baldness a Beauty Woe

Jane Wyman has lovely blond hair

By HELEN FOLLETT

NO IMAGINABLE beauty grief is alopecia areata. A woman can awaken some sad morning, discover a bald spot in her glorious crown. Not so glorious then, alas! She may have one bald spot or several. They can be small or as big as a silver dollar, or even larger. Nearly always they are round.

Strangely enough, children and young persons are more likely to be afflicted with this trouble than the middle-aged or the aged. After forty, one is pretty well immune to this form of hair moulting. The majority of cases correct themselves, so there's no reason for being scared.

Vitamins May Be Needed

Within two months' time a soft white down begins to fill up the bald area. That soon fluffs away. The normal growth takes its place, grows rapidly, and one's troubles are ended. The physician who specializes in diseases of the scalp will recommend special medicated shampoos, vigorous daily friction and some antiseptic application. Sometimes rays are used. Maybe the doctor will write a prescription.

The cause of alopecia areata is supposed to be parasitic. Some specialists believe that it is an acute form of seborrhaea with definite localization. Much has yet to be learned about it.

To protect against all manner of scalp disorders it is wise to shampoo the hair once a week, using a bland soap that has been melted, to rinse thoroughly with a bath spray and a strong current of water so that every bit of the suds has been removed.

FIGHTS AXIS

After harrowing experiences at the hands of our Axis enemies, one girl has taken to the shops to get back at the enemy. She is Maxine Robinson, who was aboard the Athenia when it was torpedoed in 1939. She is now working as a parachute packer at Randolph Field, Texas. That is her way of hitting back at the Axis. Three years ago she was the official sweetheart of the University of Texas.

The September meeting of the W. M. S. was held at the home of Mrs. Milton Ross. In the absence of the president, Mrs. Ross, vice president, took charge, opening the meeting with a hymn and the Devotional. Business was discussed. Minutes of the previous meeting was read and adopted. Roll call was answered with a Scripture verse. Mrs. Reynolds then took charge of the program, opening that part with a hymn. Readings were given by Mrs. J. Patterson, Mrs. Herb Howes and Mrs. Geo. Morman. Mrs. Reynolds outlined the 1st chapter of the Study Book, which was enjoyed by the members. A contest conducted by Mrs. Percy Reynolds closed the program.

Meeting closed with a hymn and Mispah Benediction. The hostess then served refreshments.

Chatham, Ont., Oct. 3 — (CP)— When a horse and a car collided in Burleigh Township, the horse escaped practically unscathed. Cuff Notes

Earliest reports on dramatics hint that a Pulitzer Prize-winner of three seasons back will be attempted this year. We'll keep you guessing for a few days ... The "defence" classes we reported last week include a course in Aeronautics, with Mr. Heard teaching as though everyone understands fully the principles of aerodynamics — as well he might, with most of the Air Cadets attending the Collegiate .. Noticed the gals strutting with fluffs of coloured net in their hair. Ah, to be young again!

Six-man rugby is being organized this year, but there will be no field day. Of course, the question arises as to what we are expected to do with those five-yard lengths of black, heliotrope and scarlet ribbons ... In cuffnoting new arrivals at the school we missed Jacquelyn Lu Sellers, from Melrose, Mass. So sorry, please ... Quite a gala affair on Wednesday evening in honour of a birthday in the Dunavin family. Now the teachers can trace back those yawns on Thursday morning to the lateness of the hour, and not the subject.

Assembly, Sept. 30

The first of our new, short Assembly periods last Wednesday was noteworthy for the unusual lack of elaboration. Mr. Maybee led the band in a bright march while we filed in, and then Mr. Baer read the Bible selection, the 23rd Psalm, followed by the Lord's Prayer and the hymn, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus." The latter was sung from a slide projected on a screen hanging just above the stage.

When the lights were turned on, Mr. Turner began to inform us of the various items connected with the smooth-running of the school. Mr. Hill read a brief summary of our War-Savings record, which was followed by a few brief announcements concerning lost articles, etc.

We finished with the National Anthem and were out of the Auditorium just in time for our regular class.

Library Club News

The Library Club started the school year off with a wiener and corn roast, attended by 24 members. It was held at Zwick's Island on Friday, Sept. 25, with all the usual excitement of these occasions. After the delightful, but rather chilly feed, a short meeting was held. The executive for this year was chosen as follows: President, Betty Redner; Vice-President, Theda Moorcroft; Secretary, Maida Woodley; Treasurer, Jean Price.

The excellent taste shown in choosing the executive promises well for the coming year. Already they have announced that they will still continue to mend books in the school. So bring in all those loose covers and old books and they will be fixed up like new.

And last, but not least, we wish to announce the coming of our Tea Dance, which will be held on Thursday, October 8. The club extends its welcome to all. Hope you'll be there!

The October meeting of the W.M.S. was held on Thursday afternoon in the Sunday School rooms. Mrs. J. Daniels was in charge and gave the theme "Building a Community of Christian Homes." The thankoffering meeting is in November with a special speaker from Stirling and plans were made to attend the sectional rally at Plainfield. Mrs. S. C. Gay read a poem "I Have Not Lived in Vain," and Mrs. W. Wickett offered prayer, for all those in special need and for those who do not know His love and care. Carol Stewart took up the offering. Mrs. Daniels closed the meeting with prayer.

HOLLOWAY STREET W.M.S.

The October meeting of Holloway Street W.M.S. met in the church parlors Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. Hagerman presided over the meeting, and conducted the opening Worship Service. The reports were given by the various secretaries. A very interesting report was given by Mrs. Hubbs, who gave the story of the bale recently packed by the Mission Band, Mission Circle and the ladies of the W.M.S. After the business period Mrs. Hunter, the group leader, took charge of the program. The subject was "Making Christian Homes in the Community." To build a community of Christian homes, is one of the important ways of building a Christian Canada. After singing a hymn on the home, Mrs. Walters led in a beautiful prayer for our homes and for all mothers in sorrow today. Scripture lesson was taken by Mrs. Killbank.

The guest speaker for the afternoon was Mrs. Sweetnam, who gave a very fine report of the Leaders School at Whitby. "Church in Our City Street," is the name of the new Study Book. Miss Ching, M.A., principal of Chengtu Middle School, from West China, sent a personal message, through Mrs. Sweetnam, to the Auxiliary to thank them for their contribution to China, which had brought such joy and comfort to so many girls and boys in China. She made a plea for the Christian women to be truly Christian and do all in their power to promote Christianity in China. Owing to the lateness of the hour, Mrs. Sweetnam was asked to continue her report at the next meeting. The meeting closed with the Benediction.

Yankees May Switch Lineup After Southworth Announces Lefthander White Will Pitch

Priddy Will Go to Third Base for Rolfe and Gordon Will Move Up

CARDS CONFIDENT

By GAYLE TALBOT
Associated Press Sport Writer

NEW YORK, Oct. 3 — (AP) — The Cardinals and the Yankees, locked in a world series that looked tighter every minute, were agreed today upon at least one point as they come to grips again at Yankee Stadium in the third game of the autumn classic.

They concur in the belief that it might be a bright idea for one of them to win the next three games in fast succession and obviate the necessity of trying to get back to St. Louis, possibly by mule train, some time next week. They only differ sharply as to which of them should have the honor.

Each has won one tussle, the Yanks taking the opener 7-4 and the Cards coming back behind their freshman phenom, Johnny Beazley, to win the second bout in St. Louis 4-3. A sweep of the three games at the Stadium, starting today, would give either the championship and ease the strain on a sorely taxed railroad system.

Baseball's top men, travelling on the long train that brought both clubs into New York late yesterday, quite frankly do not know how the governmental order banning all special trains after tomorrow would affect their chances of getting the teams back to St. Louis in the event the series goes more than five games. To say that they seem worried, though, would be an exaggeration.

A Hypothetical Question

When Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis was asked if, in the event a sixth game were necessary and it were impossible to obtain transportation back to St. Louis, he would order the series to be played to its conclusion at Yankee Stadium, he replied:—

"Sir, that is a hypothetical question. Lawyers plagued me with those things for 30 years. We will wait and see what Washington tells us to do."

President Will Harridge of the American League said he thought it would be a "nice gesture" to play all the remaining games at the Stadium, inasmuch as its seating capacity is much greater than that of Sportsman's Park in St. Louis and the United Service Organizations' share of the receipts would be correspondingly larger.

Teams like to play in their home parks, though, and president Ford Frick of the National League said he believed the clubs will be able to return to St. Louis if it becomes necessary. He predicted it will not be necessary, that the Cards will win the next three.

It was surprising what a taste of raw meat had done to all the National Leaguers. They all talked like Frick and were full of spirits. They think they have the Yankees on the run as the result of the manner in which they won the second contest — with sharp base-running, fine fielding and timely hitting.

Slaughter, Musial Hitting

"I was always confident we would beat the Yankees," said the Cardinals' manager, Billy Southworth, "and I'm more sure of it than ever now. Slaughter and Musial started hitting in the second game and I think they'll keep it up."

Even Ernie White, the slight, blond southpaw who is scheduled to pitch against the vaunted Yank sluggers today, exuded quiet confidence.

The Yankees on the long trip east were pretty solemn and constrained as befitted the young baseball executives they are. Their second best right-hander, Spud Chandler, picked by manager Joe McCarthy to lock horns with White today, mostly remained in his compartment.

The Yankees were not particularly worried about meeting a left-hander today. Despite some opinions to the contrary, they said they are not susceptible to southpaws, having achieved a healthy margin over the species during the last season. Only hubby Dean of the Indians, they said, had given them much trouble and they obviously expect to fall upon White with all four feet.

Priddy May Play Third

McCarthy said he would make only one change in the Yanks line-up, elevating Joe Gordon, a right-hand batter, into the fifth position and dropping Charley Keller, a lefty, to sixth. It was considered probable, however, that he also will insert Gerry Priddy for Red Rolfe at third base to get another right-hand hitter in his run-making staff.

Southworth was only mildly worried about his regular third baseman, George Kurowski, who developed a pain in his throwing arm in the second game. Kurowski, himself, said the ailing wing felt all right. However, in the event he cannot play, Southworth is prepared to shift Jimmy Brown over to third and plant Frank Crespi on second, a move that would not weaken the team appreciably.

"SPUD" CHANDLER
(New York Yankees)

ERNIE WHITE
(St. Louis Cards)

World Series Notes

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Oct. 3 (AP). — New York Yankees and St. Louis Cardinals today bring their post-season baseball argument into the house that Babe Ruth built. . . . The Yankees, who haven't been beaten by a left-hander in a world series game since Carl Hubbell turned the trick in 1937, are to face southpaw Ernie White in the first of three games at the stadium. . . White's mound opponent will be Spurgeon Chandler, the right-hander who absorbed the only defeat handed the Yanks by Brooklyn Dodgers in last year's series.

* * *

Among those who still like the Yanks to win are the Broadway betting boys. . . . If you want to wager on the 1941 champs today, you must put up $11 to win $5. . . . A $5 bet on the Cards will net you $9 if they deliver. . . . If you believe the Yankees will take the series, you can win $5 by risking $12. . . . On the other hand, $1 on the Cards will get you $2 if they win the classic.

* * *

It's a fact: All eight Cardinal runs in the first two games were scored by different players. . . . Charlie Keller's second-game homer, the only four-bagger of the world series date, was his fourth in world series play. . . . The three previous world series won by the Cards all went seven games. . . . A victim of circumstances, American League Umpire Bill Summers blushes when the boys tell this one on him: In St. Louis, Summers was asked by Will Harridge, American League president, to get several balls autographed by the players for him. The ump complied, using the only balls available in the Cardinal stronghold. Not until he was ready to turn them over to his chief did he realize that on each horsehide were the printed words, "Official National League Baseball".

* * *

Speculators, who had a corner on the tickets in St. Louis, are finding themselves caught off base in New York. . . . 28,000 general admission tickets went on sale at 10 a.m. today, but fans who decided suddenly that they wanted to see the series, now that the teams are all square, are finding reserved seat tickets few and far between. . . . Offers of as much as $45 for single box seats are going begging, simply because the brokers don't have the tickets. . . . After getting their fingers burned last year, when plenty of seats were available at regular prices, the "specs" bought a smaller supply this time, figuring the Dodgers and the Yanks would meet again. . . . When the Cards came through, all reserved seats at the stadium had been sold.

Canada's Athletes at War

By MIKE GREENSTEIN

Toronto, Oct. 3 — (CP) — From Western Canada this week comes reports of several well-known football players who have made the switch from football drill to battle drill.

Second Lieutenant Jimmy Gilkes, former member of the Calgary Bronks, is in the army now and at present is stationed at Brandon, Man. His brother "Gobo" is a sergeant in the Royal Canadian Air Force.

George Derrington, who played a major part in St. Paul's College (Winnipeg) football conquests last season and was Manitoba amateur welterweight boxing champion in 1936-37 has joined the R. C. A. F.

Two Winnipeg footballers—Monty Guberman, formerly member of the University of Manitoba team and B. Tesslet, who played for the Young Men's Hebrew Association—have enlisted for air crew duties in the R. C. A. F.

Two former members of the Regina Rough Riders, Bob Walker and Les Monk have joined the navy. They plan on keeping in step with the football march though.

Walker, former line star, will coach the R. C. N. V. R. team at Regina and Monk, hustling Rider executive, will manage the club, officials say.

Well known in amateur sport circles at Toronto as an all-round athlete, Otto Stevens of the Toronto Central Y. M. C. A. has enlisted as a stoker petty officer with the R. C. N. V. R.

Before coming to Canada from Czechoslovakia, Stevens was a merchant sailor and has travelled around the world on numerous occasions.

Teddy Gray, who made a name for himself in amateur boxing circles at Vancouver, is in the navy now.

Two Vancouver soccer stars, Bobby Moss and Jimmy Love have joined the services. Moss is in the navy and Love in the air force.

TWO-GAME BILL AT VARSITY BOWL

Hurricanes and Balmy Beach Will Tangle in the First Game

Toronto, Oct. 3 — (CP) — The first two-game bill in the history of the Senior Ontario Rugby Football Union will be unveiled here today when the Hurricanes of No. 1 Training Command, R. C. A. F. and Balmy Beach tangle in the first feature and Toronto's Oakwood Indians take on Hamilton Wildcats in the second.

The third Union engagement will be fought out at Kitchener, Ont., when a team from the Royal Canadian Navy Volunteer Reserve's H. M. C. S. York at Toronto meets the Kitchener-Waterloo Panthers.

The R. C. A. F.—Balmy Beach engagement here will be like an alumni-school engagement. The Hurricanes have seven former Beach players on the line-up, including Flt. Lt. Eddie Thompson, a speedy backfielder, who is the team's co-captain.

When the navy and the Panthers meet at Kitchener, the senior service will likely be without the services of Coder Elwyn Morris, former star of Toronto Argonauts, who suffered three cracked ribs here last Saturday when the Navy and Air Force collided before 17,000 fans.

Detroit, Oct. 3 —(AP)— Manager Jack Adams of Detroit Red Wings hockey players had been invited to announced yesterday that 55 start practice Monday for the National Hockey League season that opens in a month. The squad includes 12 members of last year's team that reached the Stanley Cup finals.

Adams said three practice sessions a day would include a night drill for players employed in war plants.

The returning veterans are goalie Johnny Mowers, defencemen Jack Stewart, Alex Motter and Jimmy Orlando and forwards Sid Abel, Modere Bruneteau, Joe Carveth, Syd Howe, Don Grosso, Adam Brown, Eddie Wares and Carl Liscombe.

Adams said 17 players in the Detroit organization had entered armed service in Canada or the United States. The list includes Eddie Bush, Gus Giesebrecht, Pat McReavey, Jerry Brown and Ken Kilrea.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Oct. 3 —(AP)— Freddie Hutchinson, up from the Norfolk naval training station to see the World Series, may have a lot of players for shipmates in another year. Folks down that way figure Phil Rizzuto is a cinch to join up and maybe Joe DiMaggio will get himself measured for bell-bottomed trousers.

Serious Stuff

This is the sixth World Series for the Cardinals. They won three of the others, but the only time they ever took the opening game was against the Tigers in 1914 . . . Terry Moore is hollering because someone swiped the bat he used to break up Red Ruffing's no-hitter Wednesday . . . Rogers Hornsby, who bossed the Fort Worth club this year, and Manager Tommy Thomas of Baltimore Orioles were spotted in a St. Louis hotel lobby the other day talking about coming back as big-league players if the war takes all the young fellows next year. Rog says he already has gone into training.

Who's Coach, Coach?

Cardinal Hayes High School in New York never has played a football game, but it already has had three coaches . . . Which ought to be a record of some sort . . . When the new school was opened last year, it was announced Charlie O'Rourke would be coach. During the summer he decided the Chicago Bears offered better prospects . . .

Katan Defeats Watson For Empire Title

Wrestling referee Al Dunlop got himself into a fair mess of trouble at the Hume Arena here this week when "Big Earl" McCready let his sense of ring reasoning get the better of him to physically hurl Dunlop from the local ring during the main bout of Skipper Tunney's weekly muscle-bending business. However, Dunlop might have raised the ire of a thousand fans here, but the following night in the Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto Mister "Pudgy-tummy" Dunlop brought the wrath of 5,000 quiet (that's a laugh) wrestling patrons of Toronto upon his broad shoulders when he declared John (the Calgary eye-opener) Katan British Empire heavyweight champion over "Whipper Billie" Watson.

It was a double-play performance with Watson attacking Dunlop in his ire and Katan standing nonchalantly aside to pounce on the ladies' favorite from York Township after Dunlop had hurled Watson to the canvas. Truly Katan used all of his ring craftiness to whip "the whipper" and gain for himself the Empire title. Locally, wrestling fans have begun to respect Katan's ring ability despite his unorthodox antics in the ring and only last Wednesday Katan showed for the second time he was a little too cagey for the popular Earl McCready, when he lured "Big Earl" into a trap that won for the Calgary boy a decision.

However, McCready is always popular in a Belleville ring and realizing this factor Promoter Frank Tunney has matched the popular McCready versus Ali Adali, the Terrible Turk, for his main attraction of a three-bout card at the Hume Arena next week.

Herb (Winnipeg Tribune) Manning, after the report that Joe Ryan will accept a government spot in Ottawa this month: "If you want to see how a ship acts without a pilot, watch local football after Joe Ryan leaves town."

Incidentally:

Hockey information is ganging in on sportswriters these days . . The accent on youth (to coin a phrase) is terrific . . . Oshawa Generals, perennial Ontario junior titlists, may be hard hit. . . Most Oshawa stars are property of N. H. L. clubs. . . When Lester Patrick's hockey school opens in Winnipeg tomorrow, 24 of the 40 players reporting will be Manitobans, which makes the outlook grim for Manitoba Junior Hockey . . . Montreal's Dick Irvin says Canadiens will win the N. H. L. championship if they get Gordon Drillon. . . For Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson he estimated that Drillon would get 20 goals, Joe Benoit 20, Toe Black 15, Ray Getliffe 15. . . He looks for a boom at the box office, too. . Almost every other sport has had one . . Four Canmore, Alta., Juveniles have been invited to attend the Detroit Red Wings training camp in Detroit. . . One, Bill Jones, is a 17-year-old defenceman. . The others, forwards John Hrushka, Darrell Heath and Pete Stasiuk, are 18. . . On the coast, observers are wondering whether Pat Egan will be released from shipyards work for hockey. . . There hasn't been anyone say yet whether Egan wants to leave the yards for hockey, in wartime. . . Ken Black, the Vancouver golfer, says he won't turn professional, would have done so 10 years ago had he so intended.

Brother Battery Stars in World Series

Once in a lifetime a brother battery turns up in the World Series—so here is a "once in a lifetime" picture. The players are Morton Cooper, St. Louis Cardinals' pitcher, and brother Walker, the Card, first string catcher, who is shown handing over a ball to Morton. This pair started in the first series game.

THEY FIGURE IN BASEBALL NEWS

Paul Richards — Bucky Harris

Their baseball season has ended but these two gentlemen figure prominently in the news. Bucky Harris has quit as manager of the Washington Nationals and is being linked with the job as possible manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers to succeed Leo Durocher, reported to be slated for a commission in the Navy. Paul Richards, ex-big league catcher and successful manager of the Atlanta team of the Southern association, is one of those prominently mentioned for Harris' job.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

THERE WERE A LOT OF SAD and weary faces in Belleville twenty years ago this week and a sickly crowd of faithful baseball followers hung their heads in mental worry. The reason for the depression was the fact the Belleville Grand Trunks—winners of the 1922 championship of the C.O.B.L. had sustained their worst defeat since the club was organized in 1919. For on Saturday, Oct. 1, 1922, the Grand Trunks were handed an 18 to 2 shellacking at Toronto's band-box ball park, Hampden Park. The defeat was at the hands of the mighty Hillcrests. This correspondent recalls having scouted the Hillcrests at the Island Stadium the week before when the Hillcrests beat Joe Spring and the Oslers 16 to 0 to win the T.A.B.A. and advance into the O.B.A. semi-finals versus Belleville. "There isn't a right-hand pitcher in Ontario who can beat that Hillcrest nine," we reported back to Manager Walt Gerow as what the great Hillcrests did to Spring that fall day was nothing short of baseball murder.

★ ★ ★

BELLEVILLE HAD TWO PITCHers that season, Ray Mallen, a right-hander, and Jack "Chief" Williams, a left-hand pitcher who later blazed a trail across this province that still is referred to in all good baseball channels. Skipper Gerow and his able assistant, "Peeney" Mills, elected to start Mallen in Toronto and save Williams for the second game regardless. Upwards of 6,000 Toronto ball fans turned out to see Belleville's heralded left-hand pitcher, "Chief" Williams, but alas the only glimpse the Queen City fans got of Williams was when he warmed up for a few moments before the game. The story of the game was most tragic to Bellevillians, as the Hillcrests, headed by Harry Samuels, Artie Lancaster, Pete Lang and Harry Batstone, pounded Mallen's deliveries to every conceivable corner of Hampden Park and rattled off 20 hits, while Ed "Cannonball" Scott, who had failed to impress C.O.B.L. batters in 1920 with Lindsay, was pitching a four-hitter for the homesters. Vern Weir, with a double and a single, Stan Hagerman and Harry Mills counted all Belleville's blows that hectic day in Toronto.

HOWEVER, THE FOLLOWING Wednesday here it was a much different story and it was then the high and mighty Hillcrests discovered that there were more than rumors to the effect that Jack "Chief" Williams was a baseball pitcher of renown and that collecting hits off a left-hander wasn't the easy chore they had experienced against right-handers. The line-ups for the first game in Toronto were as follows: Belleville—Weir ss, Ross cf, W. Mills c, H. Mills 1b, J. K. Williams 3b, Meagher 2b, Casey rf, Hagerman lf, and Mallen p, while the Toronto Hillcrests batting order read: Walker rf, Hennessy c, P. Irwin cf, Batstone 3b, Samuels 1b, Lang lf, Waldron ss, Lancaster 2b, Scott p, Scrutton cf, and B. Irwin 2b. The umpires were Bradley and Cockman of Hamilton.

REMEMBER WHEN THE CINcinnati Reds evened their world series with the Detroit Tigers at one game each with a 5 to 3 victory over their motor-city foes two years ago today? The Reds went on to win the series in seven games. Today, with the resumption of the 1942 world series in New York the starting pitchers were announced as Spud Chandler for the Yankees and Ernie White for the Cardinals.

BY POPULAR REQUEST OF local wrestling fans Promoter Frank Tunney is bringing back Ali Adali, the Terrible Turk. Ali may be as bald as a billiard ball but he prizes highly his handle-bar moustache and it's bordering upon personal suicide to become too familiar with the Turk's moustachios. Ali meets Earl McCready, that one-man tornado who showed no respect for personages here last week. Skipper Tunney also announced the return of the Burns boys, who made such a hit here the other nightt.

★ ★ ★

THIS AND THAT — Another sports event went for the duration—the Augusta Masters Golf Tournament. . . . The St. Louis Cardinals voted 28 full shares for their world series cut. . . . It was made up of twenty-three eligible players, Manager Southworth, coaches Gonzales and Wares, Trainer Weaver and Secretary Leo Ward. . . . Mel Ott, manger of the New York Giants, was named as the outstanding sportsman of the year by the Sportsmanship Brotherhood. . . . Manager Jack Adams of the Detroit Red Wings, has called fall drills commencing next Thursday. . . . He expects between 30 and 35 to respond. . . . It's Alsab and Whirlaway at the spacious Belmont track today. . . . It is expected that all baseball attendance records will be broken at the Yankee Stadium over the week-end. . . . Ducats are as scarce now as the proverbial hens' teeth. . . . The largest crowd ever to turn out for a series game was 68,540 on hand for the Dodger-Yankee game just a year ago. . . . They'll probably run that to an even 70,000 before Monday. . . . The scalpers are reaping a great harvest as the streets of New York are jammed with service men and women as well as week-end civilian thrill-seekers. . . . Don't forget the Kinsmen bingo tonight, folks.

SALMONBELLIES BEAT LACHINE BY 18-4 COUNT

PLAYER INJURED

(By HAROLD ATKINS)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Lachine, Que., Oct. 3 (CP) —A confident New Westminster Lacrosse Club, eager to return the historic Mann Cup to the Pacific Coast town where it last roosted in 1937, believed today that only one more game will be necessary to wipe Lachine-Ville St. Pierre from the path which leads to the Dominion final against Mimico-Brampton, Ontario titleholders.

The Salmonbellies, who came east sporting a record of six straight victories but riddled by the loss of three of its front-rank players unable to make the trip, proved last night they still pack a mighty wallop as they flattened Lachine 18-4.

Second game of the best-of-three semi-final affair is scheduled here tomorrow night, with a third game if necessary on the same floor, Monday. The winner opens a similar series in Toronto, starting Oct. 7.

Possessing the qualities for which some of the famous New Westminster teams of the past were famous, the 1942 edition of the Salmonbellies subdued Lachine with ease.

After ringing up a 5-2 lead in the initial period in which Lachine wore themselves out trying to keep pace with the coast invaders, Salmonbellies broke loose for six more goals in the second period and closed out the last half of the struggle with three goals in the third frame and four more in the final quarter.

Although victory was sweet for the Salmonbellies, they paid a costly price. Art Mathewson, one of their ace goal-getters, suffered a dislocated collarbone when he was boarded to the floor early in the second period.

The Salmonbellies have wired home seeking a replacement for Mathewson, and have asked that Jim Meeghan, Kip Routley or Harry Carter be sent down by plane for the rest of the series. They were the three players unable to make the trip east with the club.

It was Jim Douglas who scored the first goal of the game and his uncle, John Douglas, who stole the hearts of the crowd of little more than 2,000, as they rifled home four goals and an assist apiece.

Postal Corps Enters Team

Ottawa, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Application of Canadian Postal Corps to enter the Ottawa City Senior Hockey League was accepted at a league executive meeting last night.

The league now embraces six teams — the Postal Corps, Hull, Que., Volants, Royal Canadian Air Force, Kingston, Ont., Canadiens and Montagnards. There has been talk of an amalgamation of Canadiens and Montagnards, two local teams, but nothing definite has been decided yet.

Under present plans, the league will get under way Nov. 8 or Nov. 10.

Ray Robinson Scores Wins Over Middleweight

New York, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Harlem's dazzling Ray Robinson, who mowed down so many of the welter-weight fighters he just about exhausted the supply, continued his winning ways against the middle-weight class last night, running away with a one-sided 10-round decision over Jake La Motta, Bronx, N. Y. Robinson weighed 145; La Motta 157 3-4.

La Motta had a record of 35 victories in 39 starts but the undefeated Harlem hammer, bowled him over for his 125th victory in a row.

AT THE BELLE

"Holiday Inn"

A combination of song-and-dance talent to make any movie fan sit up and take notice, will be on the Belle Theatre screen when Paramount brings Irving Berlin's long-waited "Holiday Inn" to Belleville today stars Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire topping the players.

Casting Hollywood's most popular warbler and hoofer together seems to be a stroke of showmanship genius. Adding Irving Berlin's music—eleven new hit songs and two old ones, two lovely-to-look-at singing and dancing girls, Marjorie Reynolds and Virginia Dale, plus a delightful story—and you have a silver platter of entertainment the like of which isn't dished out every day!

"Holiday Inn" tells the story of Bing Crosby's efforts to live the kind of life which will leave him free to rest and relax a good part of the time. He hits upon the idea of converting his Connecticut farmhouse into an inn open only on holidays, so he'll have the balance of the year to himself. On each of the holidays he puts on an appropriate floor show with the asistance of Marjorie Reynolds. Astaire is trying to steal Marjorie from Bing to be his dancing parner, replacing Virginia Dale who has walked out on him. Virginia complicates the situation by returning at the wrong time. There's quite a romantic to-do among the four principals. But it would'nt do to tell all.

"Holiday Inn," produced and directed by Mark Sanrich, who directed most of Astaires dance musicals, and Jack Benney's hits, promises to be movie diversion on a grand and melodic scale. With Crosby singing Irving Berlin songs, and Astaire dancing with two new beauties, all in the celebration of America's fifteen national holidays, this would seem to be a picture right down the country's alley.

The Belle News of the world, and "Olive Oil and Water" a cartoon comedy will be exhibited on the same programe. Continuous shows will be presented today. Please come early!

AT THE McCARTHY

George Formby

One of the finest and funniest two feature offerings ever presented at the McCarthy Theatre is the attractions now playing, George Formby in "Keep Fit" and Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville in "Miss Polly." George Formby is just as goofy and twice as funny as ever before and for an hour and a half brings to the screen one of the most laughable comedy treats of this or any other year. "Keep Fit" is now in it's second week at the Uptown Theatre, Toronto, you are urged not to miss it. Slim Summerville and Zaza Pitts, two of Hollywood's greatest laugh-makers in the new Hal Roach streamlined all-comedy howl "Miss Polly" was voted tops in fun by yesterday's audiences and word-of-mouth praise by patrons should in no small way boost it to having a sensational run at the McCarthy Theatre. It is highly recommended to be at the theatre early as many hundreds had to be turned away last evening.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Hurricane"

Samuel Goldwyn knew that he had a truly great picture in "The Hurricane," which comes to the Capitol Theatre starting Sunday midnite with Dorothy Lamour and Jon Hall heading a great cast which includes Mary Astor, C. Aubrey Smith, Thomas Mitchell, Raymond Massey, John Carradine and Jerome Cowan.

In this dramatic saga of the South Seas, written by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, authors of "Mutiny on the Bounty," he was confident he had a story rich in every element of cinematic entertainment. And under the virile direction of John Ford, the story has been translated into a picture which surpasses even the producer's fondest expectations.

Published first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, later as a novel, "The Hurricane" has a ready-made audience of millions of readers. It was Goldwyn's determination not to disappoint these old friends and to that end he entrusted the screen play adaptation to Dudley Nichols with instructions to adhere closely to the original story in shaping his drama.

"The Hurricane," with its tender romance, its powerful drama, its picturesque setting and its amazing spectacle climax, is a story ready-cut to the screen's most heroic measure.

On the low island of Manukura, 600 miles from Tahiti, two native sweethearts, Terangi and Marama are wed. Their brief happiness is shattered when Terangi, returning to Tahiti on the trading schooner of which he is first mate, is imprisoned for striking a white man who insults him.

After five years of unsuccessful attempts, the boy escapes from Tahiti and makes his way to his native island. Because of the implacable sense of duty of the French Administrator, however, he is forced to hide on a neighboring island.

The search for him is at its height when a great hurricane begins to blow up. Unmindful of his own safety, the youth goes to Manukura to warn the inhabitants. In the fury that follows, he plays a heroic part, and the hurricane scenes provide one of the most thrilling and powerful climaxes the screen has ever shown.

Largest of the Hollywood settings is a complete island village, encircling an acre-and-a-half lagoon. This set occupied two and a half acres of the studio's "back lot."

It is there that the hurricane, brewed by James Basevi, the technical genius who created the earthquake effects for "San Francisco," unleashes its full destructive power. The great storm, filmed with almost terrifying realism, involving exceptional hardships and hazards to the cast principals, promises to make "The Hurricane" the most talked-of picture in years.

"The Hurricane" is released through United Artists.

REMEMBER WITHOUT WANTING

by MARGARET GORMAN NICHOLS

CHAPTER TEN

Emily stiffened and her lower lip trembled. "Why don't we know? Why must we wait and guess? Tim can't see me on Christmas. He told me so, apologising. He'll be with his fine, rich family in their fine house in Connecticut . . . .Why don't I stop it, Judith? I'm only kidding myself that he'll marry me.

"I'm a working girl who came out of the middle west, and his family has never heard of me. I don't measure up. And why don't I stop it? Why don't I? Because I'm in love with him and I'll see it through to the end when he tells me, very sweetly and honestly, that we've had a lot of fun together and we do love each other, but that there are such things as family and duty. . . .I'm sorry. I'm holding you up."

"You know that Max is always late." Her hand went out and touched Emily's thin shoulder. "We'll talk more about this later. No girl in love ever knows where she's going, Emily. I've learned that, too. You and Phyllis have called me efficient—but I'm not with Max. You can't analyze love, Emily. When you accept it you just have to go along with it. There are some things that people in love share and know about each other, but there are other things they never share and never know."

"You walk down a blind alley and once in a while maybe you see a little patch of light. . . . .I suppose women always think they're more easily understood then men, more transparent. I don't know, Emily. There's so much I don't know." She smiled. "A girl in love has no perspective."

One place, small and intimate and unheard of by tourists, had seen them often and a certain waiter had come to know them. Judith, slim and erect, the gay feather in her black hat the only spot of color in her all-black outfit, followed Fritz, the portly, florid waiter to a table against the wall.

Presently she faced Max and all other thoughts were swept away in the pure delight of looking at him. Often when she had been thinking of him she had roughly sketched his face, frowning because she could not quite make his nose as straight as it was or his mouth as sensitive or as sensuous, or his chin as sternly square.

In a pencil sketch it was impossible to see the lights in his close-cropped fair hair; impossible, too, to make his eyes as blue, as intense, as knowing as they really were. Nor could a mere sketch speak, enclosing her in a world with only that will—remembered voice.

She felt warm now and loved and loving as she responded to his smile. And she felt lost. Yes, always a little lost and reckless as though she were following him and neither knew nor cared where he was taking her.

Max said, "My darling."

That was always their beginning, Max's words of endearment and their sudden and complete absorption in each other.

"Max."

"You look so good to me," he said, smiling. "And you're such a little girl. Not so young in years—you're 22, aren't you? But a good many girls at 18 are more sophisticated than you, but it's sorbid sophistication. You and I have done a lot toward making love beautiful."

"And to keep it beautiful, Max."

He smiled again. "You can always go me one better. Yes, toward keeping it beautiful. You've done that. It's on of the many rare and precious gifts you have, darling."

"You'll turn my head."

"Don't you dare turn your head and break the warm current flowing between us."

"We've never quarreled. I thought people in love had misunderstandings and quarreled."

"We won't let us quarrel." He looked at her soberly before he said, "You're perfect—for me. I can't find anything about you to disapprove of. And you—you never reproach me for being late habitually. You've never made a scene in your life, and I love you for it. And you don't realize and perhaps I shouldn't tell you what a unique specimen of feminity you are because you are a combination of beauty and intelligence and strong feelings. . . .Fritz is coming over to take our orders. A tactful, patient waiter is another rare specimen, darling. He lets us have our romantic preliminaries before he suggests anything as prosaic as food. How would you like champagne tonight?"

"Is tonight a special occasion?"

"Any time you and I are together is a special occasion," Max said and looked up at Fritz.

Fritz had brought their coffee and had gone away again.

"I'd like to stay like this with you for six months," Max said.

"Only six months? I love this place, Max. It's—us. I could never come here if you weren't with me. I don't think I could go to any of the places I've been with you if you weren't with me. It's two weeks before Christmas and it's snowing outside and one girl in the world tonight is terribly happy. There's humility and gratitude as well as great happiness in my love for you, Max."

"I know, darling. And that makes it all the more difficult for me to to tell you what I must tell you."

What he must tell her? She couldn't breathe.

He smiled. "It's not that bad! It's simply that my office thinks it is giving me a tremendous break by making it impossible for me to spend Christmas anywhere except in Florida. I won't go into details. It's all very complicated, but I must be in Miami for a few weeks to see a Mr. So—and So who won't have his suntanning interrupted to make the trip here. I'm counting on your understanding."

"Then you shall have it. When are you going?"

"Tomorrow. I'll write you, of course. It won't be long. So you go home to your devoted family for Christmas and think of desolate Max alone in the sunshine with Mr. So-and-So. Now let me see you smile. . . ." And when she couldn't smile, he said with a slight, but unmistakable annoyance, "We can't fight distance, dearest, and I never promised I'd never leave you. I'm much fonder of living than of working, but unfortunately you can't do one without the other. I'm a lazy man with a stern sense of duty."

"I'm sorry if I'm not gallant."

His smile was compassionate. "You are. You fit into my life as neatly as you fit in my arms. Think of the fun of re-union. . . ."

"And champagne for re-union? I'll pretend you haven't gone. But your family, Max."

"They'll save the usual shirts and ties until I get back and I'll save them for you to exchange. I haven't packed yet and I must get it done tonight. At re-union I'll make it up to you for cutting tonight short."

Outside they hurried through the blinding snow to his car; and when they reached an intersection where the snow had piled high against the curb, Max, without preface, picked her up and carried her across the street.

She laughed quietly; he chuckled and for a moment she forgot that he was going away. Then thought, "I won't be possessive or tearful or any of the things I could so easily be."

Walking down the hall to her apartment he smiled and said, "In retrospect the sound of my wooden heels won't be as harsh. Your neighbors always know when I call for you and when I bring you home."

"I haven't had any complaints. You know, my mother can't understand one's living so close to people and not knowing them."

"Let me open the door. You're nervous. . . . .My poor darling."

There was a small light in the foyer where they stood, his arms around her, cold face to cold face quickly warmed by proximity. And suddenly she saw Max look desperately unhappy, a keen, cutting, naked unhappiness that hurt more than his going away. Were his eyes really misty? She couldn't quite see. . . .Did he mind that much?

"Judith—" He held her face between his hands and kissed her. And when he spoke, his grave voice shook a little. "Judith, doubt everything and everyone, if you must, but never doubt my love."

This was their closest moment, surely, she thought. A moment to catch and hold forever.

"I won't, Max. And I love you. It is the one indestructible thing in my life."

"Don't say anything more. And don't move. Stand there as you are and. . . .I'll go."

She stood, scarcely breathing, hearing the sound of his footsteps on the hall outside becoming fainter and fainter until she could hear them no more.

NEW HOUSE DAMAGED BY RIFLE FIRE

City police today were investigating the damaging of a newly constructed house on Ridley Ave., after marauders had broken windows and damaged the front door lock. The damage was caused by the firing of .22 calibre rifle bullets through the windows and door lock. Police investigated the report and were informed by neighbors that the firing of a rifle had been heard in that vicinity sometime after midnight Friday.

MARRIED IN FUNERAL CHAPEL

Philadelphia, Oct. 3 — (AP) — Dorothy Biensinger became a bride yesterday — in a funeral chapel. "What difference does it make where I get married, as long as I marry the right man?" she asked. She and the groom, James R. Lupfer, both 22, met outside the chapel a few months ago and were introduced by funeral director Walter Gray.

NEW TACTICS ?

A possible change in the German tactics at Stalingrad is seen in the report, unconfirmed, that Field Marshal Walter Wilhelm List, ABOVE, the Nazi "blitz master," has taken command of the German armies besieging the Russian industrial centre. List led the victorious German drives through Poland, western Europe and the Balkans.

THE WAR TODAY

By GLENN BABB
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Wendell Willkie's journey from Russia to China illustrates vividly the situation of Russia and China who now are bearing the brunt of the axis assault on civilization. Along the Yangtze-Kiang and Huang-Ho, as on the Volga and Don, the major armies of one of the two great aggressor powers are pinned down while the rest of the allies gain the time they need to prepare for the great land battles to come.

Willkie flew in four daily stages from Kuibyshev, the auxiliary capital established when it seemed Moscow, where Lenin rests, might fall, to Chungking, the provisional capital of a free China driven nearly five years ago from Nanking, where the remains of its Saint, Sun Yat-Sen, are enshrined. Each is a symbol of tragic loss, of heroic resistance. The American's route traversed the little-known heart of the great Eurasian land mass, at either end of which a mighty axis army is striving for a knockout blow.

Geographically, the Russians and Chinese are standing back to back in this struggle politically, there lies between them a space as barren and impassable as the Turkestan deserts over which the good plane Tientshan (heavenly mountains) carried President Roosevelt's envoy. Neither is able to help the other. Russia maintains painfully-correct but anxious diplomatic relations with China's chief foe, Japan, for reasons which appear good and sufficient to the Kremlin and which Russia's allies understand. Although China has declared war on Germany, she is nowhere able to strike directly at Hitler. Both Russia and China must look to other, far distant allies, Britain and America, for the offensive that leads to victory.

Willkie's journey has been described as a fact-finding mission, but it is not to be expected he will uncover anything new to tell President Roosevelt, despite his powers of penetration and ability to grasp broad strategic problems. His major accomplishments in Chungking should be two: assurance to the Chinese that American help will come as soon and in as full measure as the exigencies of this global war permit, and a reminder to the American people that in China, as in Russia, we may well lose the war, at least lose one of the battlefields on which it might be won.

This is no lack of information in Washington or London as to China's needs or the potentialities of the China war zone for eventual Allied victory. T. V. Soong, China's foreign minister, established himself in Washington some months ago and he is not one to let China's desires go unheeded for lack of asking. The United States is represented in Chungking by diplomatic and military experts of long experience of that unique land of full comprehension of its place in the Allies' global strategy. But in the last few weeks the homeric defence of Stalingrad has pushed the recovery of most of Kiangsi and Chekiang into the background and the worldwide discussion of the second front — against Germany — has left little attention for the first front against Japan.

Miss McClung Elected President Of High School Students' Council

Trenton, (Special) — Miss Lina Marilyn McClung was elected president of the Students' Council of the Trenton High School, at their election on Thursday. Miss McClung, who is a fifth-year student, is exceedingly popular with both teachers and students and last year gave considerable of her time to the Girl Cadets, which were organized at the school, being Commanding Officer.

Others to be elected to the council were; secretary, Miss Dorothy Donnely; literary convener, Miss Marion Wetherell; social convener, Percy Gitelman; convener of girls' sports, Miss Marion Bell, and convener of boys' sports, Clare Langman.

Car Badly Damaged

While driving west on Dundas Street on Friday afternoon, a car owned and driven by Basil Busby, 140 West Street, was badly damaged when struck from the rear by a Rathbun bus driven by Thomas Roy of Trenton. Busby informed police he was attempting to make a right turn from Dundas St. to Scott Street and turned out a little to pass a car, owned by Mr. Miron, R.R. 2, which was parked along the curb. Just as Busby started to turn the Miron car started and Busby was forced to apply his brakes. As he did so his car was struck by the on-coming bus, damaging the spare tire, trunk, fender and chassis. Fortunately no one was injured. Trenton police investigated.

Sum of Money Returned

A billfold containing a large sum of money was picked up in the police station on Friday afternoon by the court stenographer and turned over to the owner, Mr. B. Rattray, Consecon. Several persons were in the station at the time in connection with a motor accident. Mr. Rattray had been registering a gun and had apparently mislaid the purse at the time.

Garrison N.C.O.'s Hold Annual Ladies Night

Featuring as special guests, the senior non-commissioned officers of the Belleville company of the C.W.S.F., the sergeants of the Argyll Light Infantry (Tank) and 34th Battery, R.C.A. held their annual "Ladies Night" in the sergeants' mess in the armouries last night.

Dancing and cards predominated as the evening's enjoyment with Mrs. J. Nixon and Sergeant-Major Lacey winning prizes at bridge, and Mrs. D. Ridley and Sergeant Findall the euchre trophies.

Interesting motion pictures depicting the troops at home and in camp were shown by Sergeant Nicholson during the intermission period.

Highlighting the "At Home" was the presentation by his sergeants of a handsome pen and pencil set to the Argyll Regimental Sergeant Major T. Willerton. The R.S.M. made an appropriate reply expressing his appreciation of the gift.

Many guests were present from out of town.

The results: Murray Heath, Campbellford, 906; Harold Bush, Stirling, 900; Wesley Finch, Campbellford, 895; Gordon Richardson, Stirling, 883; Jack Bush, Stirling, 859; Douglas Campbell, Stirling, 857; Harvey Honan, Corbyville, 856; Delbert McComb, Bonarlaw, 846; Ed. CANADA TO HAVE MILLION MORE SHEEP NEXT YEAR

Expect Four Million Sheep to be Ready for Shearing in 1943

WOOL PRICE HIGH

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP).—One million more sheep and 7,000,000 pounds additional wool production appeared assured for Canada next year as a sturdy slap to enemies who seek to cut off essential supplies reaching the Dominion.

James A. Telfer, assistant chief of sheep and wool production, said today he believed the sheep expansion campaign launched by the Dominion government and the provinces early this year would succeed.

At Dec. 1 last there were 2,824,500 sheep in Canada. After the spring lambing season this total had been increased by about 80 per cent. Reports of sheep marketings received by the agriculture department indicated that farmers had responded to the government suggestion to hold their ewe lambs to increase their flocks.

"It certainly appears as if we will have 4,000,000 sheep—a record number—for shearing in 1943," said Mr. Telfer. "The farmers have done a good job. If they continue to maintain their flocks, a sheep population of 5,500,000 is possible in 1944.

28 Million Pounds of Wool.

"The 4,000,000 sheep being sheared next year will provide about 28,000,000 pounds of wool. Although Canada's wool consumption in 1941 was estimated at 150,000,000 pounds, the home production contribution is increasingly important because of the scarcity of shipping needed to bring in wool supplies from other lambs."

The prospective Canadian wool production of 28,000,000 pounds in 1943 compare with from 19,000,000 to 20,000,000 pounds at present.

WILL CO-ORDINATE AFRICANDEFENCES

Two Commands Announced —Envoy to Britain Had Successful Trip

Cape Town, Oct. 3 (CP) Southern Rhodesia and the Union of South Africa have united under a single military command in a move to co-ordinate the defences of the whole of Africa. A joint statement issued by Prime Ministers G. M. Huggins and J. C. Smuts announced the step had been taken after full consultation with all parties concerned, particularly the British government.

Two commands are to be established in southern Africa with the General Officer Commanding the Union defence force in charge of the new Southern Africa Command. In event of any combined operation for mutual security or Southern furtherance of mutual effort, Southern Rhodesia forces will be placed at the disposal of the G.O.C. Operations in Madagascar will remain under control of the Eastern African Command. mand.

Fuller Co-operation

Hon. F. C. Sturrock, Minister of Railways and Harbors, declared in London on the eve of his departure for South Africa that his mission in connection with more energetic prosecution of the war through fuller co-operation with the British government was very successful.

He stated that British ministers handled his business of transport and harbor works sympathetically, and that Whitehall now has a clear understanding of South Africa's war supply problems. The British spirit of grim, quiet determination so impressed Mr. Sturrock that he said, "If I were Hitler I would feel very uneasy".

Cost of living decreased by one-half per cent throughout the Union during August. A survey showed that Pretoria's living costs were highest with 22 per cent increase over pre-war days; Kimberley is lowest with a nine per cent rise.

Price of South African livestock has risen tremendously due to military and shipping requirements and secretary of the South African Federation of Meat raders prophesies meatless tables unless prices are fixed.

Many leading Johannesburg shops have curtailed business hours in an effort to conserve stocks, ease transportation difficulties and provide employees with more time for war work.

South Africa and U.S.

Hickman Price of the United States Economic Mission to South Africa has stressed in Washington the necessity for co-operation between the two countries in sending supplies to the Union while developing it as a strategic base. He paid tribute to the great strides made in South Africa's war effort under Prime Minister Smuts.

Brazil is also anxious to develop trade relations with the Union according to Dr. Julio Diogo, Brazilian Consul General. The Consul favors a direct shipping line between the two countries.

A contingent of 200 officers and cadets of the Youth Training Brigade now is on a demonstration tour throughout the northern areas of the Union. In a send-off message, Prime Minister Smuts said that half of the 4,000 enlisted in the Brigade two years ago have been drafted into the South African Army.

ANOTHER "YORK"

Sgt. Alvin York captured 132 Germans in the first world war. Now Sgt. Keith Elliott of New Zealand captures 130 Germans near Ruweisat, in the Alamein line in Egypt. He is pictured after the exploit which won him the Victoria Cross. Enemy tanks attacked three sides of his battalion and 19 men were left of B. Company. Elliott led them in a charge which at first rush captured an anti-tank gun and five machine-guns. Later he captured four more machine-gun posts, an anti-tank gun, a German machine-gun nest, as well as the prisoners. Only one of his men was wounded.

FUSILIER ALLIES OF CANUCK UNITS HEROIC FIGHTERS

Written For The Canadian Press

By CLAUD GOLDING

London, Oct. 3 (CP)—There is no one to doubt the fighting qualities of the Australian soldier so tribute to the famous "Fighting Fifth" from Aussie fighting men is no mean accolade. And the Australians have been heard to say of the Royal Northumberland Fusiliers, "they're the finest fighting men we've seen anywhere, at any time."

The Fighting Fifth, allied to three Canadian regiments, were in the thick of the fighting alongside the Australians in the western desert. They were among the heroes of Tobruk where one of their officers won the Victoria Cross. Allied to them are the Northumberlands of Cobourg, Ont., the Elgins of St. Thomas, Ont., and Les Fusiliers du St. Laurent of Rimouski, Que. Also allied to the regiment is the 35th Battalion of Australian Infantry of Newcastle, Australia.

On March 25, 1941, the Tobruk garrison, besieged for many months, sallied forth to attack El Duda Ridge, dominating the wide expanse of country across which the main Imperial army had to pass to relieve the garrison. At a critical moment a machine-gun company of the Fifth came into action and saved the British right flank which was threatened.

Next they drove across the front between the British tanks and the German guns and covered the left flank also. Credit went to the Fifth for turning the tide of battle and El Duda fell; the Tobruk garrison and the main army were joined.

In Desert Warfare

In the desert warfare night patrols, ambushing jumpy Italians and other activities which needed clear thinking and courage were the lot of the Fusiliers. One platoon in a bayonet charge at Maktela bagged 7,000 Italian prisoners. The Fusiliers helped take Tobruk; then went on to chase the Italians to Derna, to Barce, Benina, Benghazi and Soluch where a company of the Fifth took another 7,000 Italians.

In the great 1941 German drive to the east the Fifth fought many dogged rearguard actions to cover the withdrawal of British troops When the British Army decided to hold Tobruk while the main forces retired to the Egyptian frontier, the Fifth were among those chosen to hold the port, until they broke out and carried El Duda Ridge.

By that time they had created a record for continuous service in the western desert and were moved back for a rest near Cairo.

Raised in 1674

They have been in the thick of Britain's fighting since being raised privately in 1674 to assist the Dutch against the French. The regiment became the Fifth of the line in 1685, fought in Ireland, Flanders and Spain and in 1761 were employed against the French in the Seven Years' War. At St. Lucia in 1778 they defended the island so bravely against the French they were allowed to wear in their caps the white feathers taken from the enemy. In the Peninsular war they earned the nickname of "Fighting Fifth" and in the First Great War fought in every battle area.

ALMONTE WITHOUT MAYOR

Almonte, Ont., Oct. 3 (CP).—For a week Almonte has been a town without a mayor, and civic employees are beginning to wonder who will sign their salary cheques.

W. W. Watchorn resigned as mayor last week, after holding office for six years, to accept a municipal post. Councillor James Edmonds was appointed acting mayor but declined to sit.

Clerk R. A. Jamieson has called a special town council meeting to try to solve the problem. Almonte is 35 miles southwest of Ottawa.

Capital Closeups

By JOHN DAUPHINEE

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 3 —(CP)— The next year or so is going to see a huge reduction in Canada's gold production, and George C. Bateman, Metals Controller, says he doesn't think any government action will be needed to bring it about.

The emphasis in the fourth year of the war is on the strategic minerals and gold has been pushed into a back seat. This week the Ontario Mines Department reported the industry suffered another set-back during August, with no prospect of improvement for the duration.

Aside from the order restricting new development in gold mining fields — Mr. Bateman says "it gave us a ceiling to work downward from"—there has been no action by federal authorities to curtail output.

"And I don't think there'll be any need. It's partly the manpower shortage, partly shortage of materials — most of all, probably, a feeling on the part of the miners themselves that they can be more useful elsewhere."

But while gold mining is something of a secondary industry, Mr. Bateman contends the extent of curtailment is a matter for plenty of thought.

"We have to think of the consequences to the many mining municipalities, and of the importance of gold mining in our post-war economy," he says. "Gold mining was our mainstay in the depression years—and I think we're going to need it, some day, again."

Even a restaurant-keeper can have too much of a good thing—customers.

With a change in civil service hours imminent, and the government thinking of cutting the lunch period in its offices by 30 minutes, to one hour, a check is being made on the number of civil servants who go home for lunch. If shorter lunch period means more eating downtown, restaurant keepers won't know what to do.

Said one restaurant operator, dolefully holding a chain across the entrance door at 1 p.m.:

"See, we're packed right now and I can't let any more in. Shorten lunch hours? They'll have to start 'em earlier or end 'em later if any more have to be served."

Last week we told how Resources Minister Crerar turned fiddler-for-a-night in the Northland. His companion on that trip was Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, United Kingdom high commissioner, who came back to Ottawa with an enthusiasm for the north and a sublime suntan.

Now Mr. MacDonald is visiting in Britain, if Rt. Hon. Clement Attlee, Dominions Secretary in the British government who went back with him, is a sample, Mr. Macdonald will be a good proof the story-books are wrong and Canada is more a land of sunshine than of snow.

Mr. Attlee, who came here from Newfoundland, had no tan.

• • •

Note on how the world has shrunk: Mr. Attlee commented off-the-record to reporters last Monday that he had to be back in the British House of Commons this week. The airplane made it possible for him to get there two days later.

"Old Soldiers Never Die . . . ."

Defence Department officials shook their heads like beaten men over the story of Christopher McIntosh McDonald of Calgary, veteran of the Riel Rebellion (he was born in 1863) who almost got into the Veterans' Guard because he looked like 52.

And it's pretty amazing the way Boer War medal ribbons sprout on the tunics of veterans who, if they told all to the recruiting sergeant, would have to say they were prattling at mother's knee when men went to the war singing "The Soldiers of the Queen."

Service medals of the First Great War are explicable. But then, after a while, when he has shown he can march with the best and shoot like Daniel Boone, the occasional veteran turns out with another ribbon that leads all the rest.

Only the youngsters ask questions about it. The colonels and the regimental sergeant-majors look blank and pretend they don't remember the Boer War was 40 some years ago.

GERMANS POUR RESERVES INTO STALINGRAD

Enemy Piles Over 500,000 Troops Into Battle Area

Russians Forced To Give Some Ground Under Pressure Of 35 Divisions

HOLD IN OTHER SECTORS

(By EDDY GILMORE)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Oct. 5 (AP)—The Germans poured a constant stream of reserves into Stalingrad along "The Road of Dead" today, swelling their forces in the area to more than 500,000 but they still had not achieved a break-through or material advance, Soviet dispatches said.

The mid-day Soviet communique said the Red army itself had improved its position northwest of the city but that the Nazis in a determined drive upon a Stalingrad factory settlement forced the defenders to withdraw somewhat during the night.

The government newspaper Pravda said the German command loosed the assault in this sector after bringing up two more infantry divisions and one tank division, increasing its strength to 35 divisions.

After bettering their position northwest of the city, Russian troops were reported engaged in battle with Germans clinging to a strongly fortified hill.

Wipe Out Nazi Battalion

The ferocity of the fighting within the city was indicated in the report that artillery and mortar fire wiped out a battalion of enemy infantry and destroyed 24 machine-gun posts and six gun and mortar batteries.

"The enemy is conducting fierce attacks in the direction of a factory settlement," the mid-day communique said of the fighting in Stalingrad.

"At the cost of heavy losses he succeeded in somewhat pressing back one of our units. On all other sectors the German attacks were repulsed by our troops."

A furious German infantry attack was reported from the northwestern front, but the communique said it was repulsed with heavy losses. Four hundred more Germans were killed in fighting for a populated place north of Voronezh, it added.

Repulsed at Mozdok

In the Caucasus, somewhere in the Mozdok region, the Germans attempted to fight their way thru' a mountain gorge, but retreated in the face of stubborn resistance.

But the Germans obviously were throwing their main strength into the struggle for Stalingrad where the Russians were holding fast amid the smoking ruins for the 42nd. day.

Through the line of battle Stalingrad's factories continue to operate until forced to cease by the shelling or aerial bombardment, dispatches from the city said. When they are damaged so badly they can no longer function normally, they are converted into repair shops to handle damaged tanks and guns, it was stated.

Party leaders at the Stalingrad front issued a proclamation declaring "the Fatherland demands that Stalingrad meet all tests no matter how difficult.

"Stalingrad must hold, no matter what the cost."

CLERK FORCED TO OPEN SAFE

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 5 (CP) — Search continued today for four masked and armed bandits, who late Saturday night abducted a clerk in a brewers' warehouse here and escaped with $2,085.88 after forcing him at gunpoint to open a safe in the store.

It was the latest in a series of major crimes here, climaxed Thursday by the shooting of Joe Borg, Windsor restaurant proprietor, found fatally wounded in the restaurant he had purchased a week before. Police are still searching for the gunman.

"Hurry up or you'll get the same as the fellow got in the restaurant," one of the bandits warned John Mackenzie, the beer warehouse clerk.

Mackenzie told police he was walking through a field to his home shortly before 11 o'clock when he was accosted by two masked men, who threatened him with a revolver and shotgun.

They tied his hands, blindfolded and forced him in a car where two other men were seated. He was driven to the Wyandotte Street warehouse and forced at gunpoint to open the safe.

The stolen car used by the bandits was recovered later. Under the front seat was a .38 calibre revolver, not in working condition.

Raid Axis Convoy In Ionian Sea

Cairo, Oct. 5 —(AP)— British torpedo-carrying aircraft scored a direct hit on a medium-sized merchant vessel in an attack on an Axis convoy in the Ionian Sea Saturday night, a communique said today.

The bulletin said that land activity on the Egyptian front during the weekend was limited to patrol skirmishes and that aerial operations again were curtailed by bad weather yesterday.

The torpedo-plane attack took place about 35 miles southeast of Cape Santa Maria Di Leuca at the tip of the heel of the Italian boot.

Returning fliers said their direct hit amidships set off an explosion followed by a red glow which could be seen despite poor visibility.

N.A. Newspapers Continue to Publish Complete Papers Despite Difficulties

By CLAUDE A. JAGGER
(Associated Press Financial Editor)

New York, Oct. 5 —(AP)— North America at war retains a mighty asset—the complete newspaper.

Publishers are having to cope with difficult problems of manpower, supply and delivery. But still the newspaper gets through. And there is reasonable assurance it will keep right on coming.

Even in Great Britain, with its historic traditions of freedom of speech and press, it has been necessary to trim most newspapers to a bare four pages.

It is no accident that complete newspapers are still published on this side of the Atlantic. It reflects long planning, and ingenuity in dealing with unexpected problems.

The basic physical problem is paper. In the First Great War, many newspapers were wrecked by inability to get newsprint. Since then, production in North America has been expanded and improved. By 1939 this continent was producing more than half the world's supply of newsprint. The other major producing area—the Scandinavian countries—has been isolated by the war.

While most of the world is partly or largely shut off from paper supplies, North America still can get as much as it requires over its excellent railway system. Britain can get paper only by using ships—urgently needed for munitions—to take it across the submarine-infested Atlantic. South America, too, must cope with the shipping situation, and has been forced to reduce the size of its papers.

To relieve the strain of transportation facilities, however, newspapers are keeping larger stocks of paper and arranging their deliveries of paper well ahead. Railroads have co-operated in meeting special problems, for instance in arranging the long haul from Canada to Mexico to supply Mexican newspapers.

The growing shortage of manpower both in the United States and Canada, however, is presenting new and increasingly difficult problems, both for paper making and publishing. There will be fewer workers in the woods this Winter getting out pulp wood, from which paper will be made a year or so from now. Also, more men are needed to get out wood for lumber and war use.

Rubber and gasoline shortages have greatly complicated the problem of delivery of newspapers to every cross road and hamlet.

Use of scarce metals by newspapers has not as yet presented as much difficulty as some anticipated. Most of the metal used in printing is used over and over again.

What about ink? The basic ingredient of ink is carbon black. The automobile tire makers were formerly one of the big consumers. Now with tire making stopped, there is plenty.

Costs of newspaper publishing have increased, and many operations have become more difficult, but the job is getting done. Many papers have increased subscription rates. But circulation has continued to rise.

Rumania-Hungary Dispute May Develop Into War

JOSEPH STALIN REQUESTS ALLIES TOFULFILLPLEDGES

Help Delivered To Date Comparatively Ineffective Says Blunt Statement

ANSWERS QUESTIONS

Moscow, Oct. 5 — (AP) — Oft-voiced Russian desires for speedy establishment of a second front were given new urgency today by a blunt statement from Joseph Stalin and he called on the Allies to fulfill their pledges of aid fully and without delay.

The help they have delivered to date, he declared, has been comparatively ineffective.

Stalin's statement was delivered in the form of a letter answering three questions submitted to him in writing by this correspondent, chief of the Moscow bureau of the Associated Press, and represented the Soviet Premier's first public utterance on the second front issue in more than a year.

Text of the letter, typed on a plain sheet of white notepaper and signed in a bold hand, follows:

"Dear Mr. Cassidy:

"Owing to the pressure of work and my consequent inability to grant you an interview, I shall confine myself to a brief written answer to your questions.

"One: 'What place does the possibility of a second front occupy in the Soviet estimates of the current situation?'

"Answer: A very important place—one might say a place of first-rate importance.

United Nations' Drive Against Torpedo Menace Shows Great Progress

By The Associated Press

While six more merchant ships and 75 seamen and passengers were revealed to have been lost in Western Atlantic warfare by last week's announcements, the United Nations' counter-offensive showed effective progress against the torpedo menace.

British destroyers, corvettes and Atlantic patrol planes made five attacks on German U-boats in the 24 hours ended Thursday at midnight, and in the whole of September, 145 attacks were reported in the Atlantic, the British Broadcasting corporation said last week in a program aimed at German seamen and picked up in New York by the Columbia Broadcasting system.

Meanwhile, the Royal Canadian Navy, the Brazilian Air Force, and the United States Navy pushed home their blows against the Axis threat to Allied communications lines.

The Royal Canadian Navy sank four Axis submarines and "probably destroyed" two others "this summer," Navy Minister Angus Macdonald announced, while Joaquin Ferriera, editor of Rio De Janeiro's "O Globo" newspaper, said Brazilian planes have already destroyed "at least six" enemy submarines off the Brazilian coast.

The United States Navy Tuesday will hold trials of a new anti-submarine craft which can be turned out at an estimated rate of 3,600 monthly. If it meets expectations, this craft can do much toward bringing U-boat activities to a halt.

Counter Pack Attacks

British anti-submarine defence is combining smoke screens, anti-aircraft fire and fighter plane defence from carriers in meeting the threat of pack attacks by Axis submarines and bombings by shore-based aircraft.

In addition, New York marine insurance underwriters last week reduced cargo risk rates by $2.50 for each $100 cargo value, again cutting war risk insurance on vital supplies running between the Americas.

Beside the 75 persons killed in submarine sinkings reported last week, 69 others were missing. At least 192 crewmen and passengers were rescued and brought to Allied ports.

Losses announced since Sept. 27, which boosted the Associated Press count of reported Western Atlantic sinkings to 482 craft since the United States entered the war, including two American ships, one Spanish, one Swedish and two unidentified Allied vessels.

GOV'T TO TAKE MEASURESTOMEET HOUSINGSHORTAGE

Will Try to Induce People to Share Extra Space in Their Homes

MAY BE COMPULSORY

Ottawa, Oct. 5 (CP)—A campaign to induce people with extra space in their homes to make accommodation available to those who need it was announced yesterday by Donald Gordon, Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, as a means of ensuring most effective use is made of existing living quarters in congested areas.

The statement hinted that compulsory billeting may be ordered if voluntary campaigns fail.

Mr. Gordon said the Board has been directed by the government to meet the housing shortage and added:

"The Board hopes to avoid compulsory billeting, as it is believed that properly organized local community effort can provide a great deal of additional living accommodation."

The announcement said Russel S. Smart, K.C., of Ottawa, has been appointed Real Property Administrator, and will be responsible for organizing the new measures. He also will be charged with co-ordinat-

U.S. Sub Grunion Presumed Lost

Washington, Oct. 5 (AP) — The United States Navy announced today that the submarine Grunion had been overdue in the Pacific for some time and must be presumed lost.

The brief navy communique did not say how many men were on board the submarine, but vessels of this class—1,526 tons—carry a normal complement of approximately 65 men.

This was the fifth submarine reported lost by the United States since the war began—two, the Shark and the Perch were presumed lost by enemy action when long overdue in the western and southwestern Pacific areas; the S-26 was lost in collision off Panama and the Sea Lion was demolished at Cavite in Manila Bay to prevent capture.

ALLIES ENJOY AIR SUPERIORITY IN NEW GUINEA

NEARING 'GAP'

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 5 — (CP) — In the seventh day of consistent, unopposed advance, Australian troops pushed upward yesterday over a rugged trail north of Efogi in New Guinea's Owen Stanley Mountains.

Fliers of the Allied air forces at the same time swept far beyond the advanced ground forces to harass key points on the Japanese line of retreat. In another sector bombers made a night raid on the airdrome at Buka, on the extreme northern tip of the Solomons, starting fires near the runway and in dispersal areas and destroying at least one plane.

Efogi, 64 miles by jungle trail from the Allied base at Port Moresby and about seven miles from "the gap" in the Owen Stanley range, was captured Saturday.

The Australians were believed to be either in or near the south entrance of "the gap" which is at an altitude of more than 6,000 feet.

Slight Contact with Enemy

An Allied spokesman said the Australian forward units had made only slight contact with the enemy, too light to indicate even rearguard action.

Their exact position was not given. North of Efogi there are two trails, one leading three miles to Kagi and the other six miles to Myola lakes.

Army Minister Francis Forde, returning to Canberra to report to Prime Minister John Curtin and the war cabinet on a tour of battle areas in New Guinea, expressed absolute confidence on the outcome there.

"I observed a very definite spirit of aggression in our troops," he said.

Air Minister A. S. Drakeford, who made the same tour, said Allied forces in New Guinea are enjoying air superiority for the first time in any land operation in the Pacific area.

RALSTON WATCHES CANADIAN UNITS AT EXERCISES

Assault Tactics And Artillery Work Out By Reinforcement Units Displayed

STIFF TRAINING

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in England, Oct. 5 — (CP Cable) — Col. J. L. Ralston, Canadian Minister of National Defence, paid a brisk morning visit today to Canadian reinforcement units, moving among these men of the overseas army who are taking the same stiff training as the troops in the field.

The minister was accompanied by Lt.-Gen. Kenneth Stuart, Chief of the Canadian General Staff, and Maj.-Gen. P. J. Montague, senior officer of Canadian Military Headquarters, on his tour of the units which after the Dieppe raid promptly replaced casualties among the units which participated in the raid.

He watched troops training in assault tactics and artillerymen working out with field and anti-aircraft guns. He also visited men taking specialists courses and went through the great base workshops built for the Canadian army by the Royal Canadian Engineers.

During his tour of the artillery reinforcements, Capt. T. W. Platt of Wingham, Ont., showed the minister the parts of a stripped 25-pounder.

In a blacksmith shop he talked before a glowing forge with Sgt. W. H. Potts of Port Hope, Ont., who also served in the Boer War and the First Great War.

Where local school boards approve, children will be excused to work in post offices eight hours a day.

SEGREGATES AXIS NEWS

Phonix, Ariz., Oct. 5 (AP)—The Arizona Republic's early Sunday morning edition inaugurated the use of the "double cross" on all stories originating from Axis sources. So we will mark with the double cross all news we know comes from Axis sources".

Empire's Air Lifeline to Australia, India Restored by Daring Flights

(By LOUIS V. HUNTER)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 5. (CP) —British Overseas Airways Corporation has revealed after two years how the Empire's Air lifeline to India and Australia, severed by the collapse of France and the entry of Italy into the war, was restored by a daring pioneer flight from the United Kingdom to West Africa by a merchant air service crew which included the veteran Capt. W. E. (Bill) May of Winnipeg.

The 23-day, 12,000-mile return flight was made in the flying boat Clyde, lost in a storm at Lisbon in the summer of 1941. She was a sistership of the Clare, lost recently in West Africa. Both were veterans of the North Atlantic service which air-linked Britain, Canada and the United States.

The skipper was 30-year-old Capt. A. C. Loraine, a British airman, who more recently figured in the news as second-in-command on Prime Minister Churchill's three Atlantic flights between England and the United States. He was preparing for a voyage to New York when he was instructed to proceed instead to Lagos, in West Africa, on a flight from here that had never before been made in a flying boat.

There was an air route from West Africa across to Khartoum, pioneered by Imperial Airways in 1936. It was to link up with this Service, and thus to restore air communication between the United Kingdom, Egypt, India and the Far East, that it was decided to establish an Air Service to West Africa.

Flying off almost literally into the blue, without the aid of elaborate and carefully planned organization normally essential for such a flight, Loraine started for Lisbon with May—now flying bombers from North American to Britain—as second pilot and Radio Officer C. L. Cheeseman, an Englishman, as the only other member of his crew. There were eight passengers and his orders were to get to Lagos with the utmost possible dispatch.

Ankara Dispatches Say Differences At Acute Stage

Two Countries Have Been at Loggerheads Since Transfer Of Land in 1940

ANTONESCU ILL

Ankara, Turkey, Oct. 3—(Delayed—AP)—Allied quarters received reports today that territorial differences between Rumania and Hungary over Transylvania had reached such a state that Rumanian officials in Bucharest were expecting war with their neighboring Axis satellite.

Baron Manfred Von Killinger, German minister in Bucharest, was said to have offered the services of his government early last month in mediating the dispute but Rumanian officials were pictured as pessimistic over the outcome. In return for support of Rumania's position, these accounts said, Von Killinger increased to 300,000 the number of Rumanian troops sought for the Russian front.

Hungary and Rumania have been at loggerheads since Hitler dictated the transfer of a large slice of Transylvania from Rumania to Hungary in 1940.

Marshal Ion Antonescu, the Rumanian dictator who has been pressing his government's claims for Transylvania, was reported to be sick and likely to have to resign soon.

Advices reaching here said that in addition to dissatisfaction over Transylvania, Rumanians were becoming restive over the prospects of a hard winter.

Flying Fortress, Shot to Pieces, Makes Home Base

Somewhere in England, Oct. 5 (CP)—The stirring story of one of the most remarkable flights of the war, the homeward journey of a flying fortress all but shot to pieces high over France, was unfolded today by the crew which survived the venture.

The fortress, named "Phyllis," was attacked by 40 Focke Wulf-190's during Friday's big raid on Meaulte and when Lieut. Charles Paine, 27, of Waycross, Ga., the pilot, headed home this was her condition:

Two motors were out of commission, rudder and stabilizer bore three shell holes apiece, half the controls were shot away, the landing gear was smashed, a huge hole was in one wing and there were 200 holes in the fuselage.

Details Lacking Concerning Crash

New York, Oct. 5 (AP)—Details were lacking today concerning the crash of an airplane at Botwood, Nfld., Saturday, in which 10 men were killed and at least eight persons were injured. All were Americans.

Headquarters of the United States Eastern Defence Command and the 1st Army, which announced the crash, said there were 37 persons aboard the plane, but did not say how many were passengers.

The crash occurred Saturday between 5 and 6 p.m., the army announced. Apparently the plane fell into the sea off Botwood since the army's announcement said the hull was split in the crash and subsequently was towed into shallow water to facilitate salvage operations.

Two occupants were women, but both apparently escaped injury.

Two Axis Supply Ships Sunk by Subs

London, Oct. 5—(CP) — British and Allied submarines sank at least two Axis supply ships and probably sank a third in recent operations in the Mediterranean, the Admiralty announced today.

A communique credited a Greek submarine with one of the sinkings. A British submarine torpedoed a medium size Axis vessel off the Libyan coast, it said, while the third Axis victim was hit with two torpedoes and "is considered to have been destroyed" although it was not seen to sink.

Motorists Warned To Protect Tires

With motor vehicle tires being frozen by the Government, owners of such articles are advised by police to protect their tires more rigidly. Two motorists in the Belleville area reported tires stolen from their parked motor cars over the weekend.

Leslie Lee, 294 Ann St., left his motor car parked in front of his home over the weekend with the result that tire thieves removed the spare tire, tube and rim, city police learned.

Some time Sunday night tire thieves entered the private garage of W. A. Jeffery, second concession of Sidney Township and stole two tires from his motor car. The vehicle was jacked up and the tires, tubes and rims taken, Provincial Police were informed early Monday.

Reports of tires being stolen in all parts of Ontario have prompted police in general to warn motorists to protect their tires, which cannot be readily replaced under government restrictions. Organized bands of tire thieves have been reported in and around the Toronto and Hamilton areas for some time past.

Another resident of Victoria Ave., Mr Frank T. Wilson, reported to police that several gallons of gasoline had been taken from his car either while it was parked on the parking lot at the Air Station or at his home sometime Saturday night.

New Coal Boat Arrives

The Mayfax, on her maiden voyage from the American side, carrying a cargo of coal for the B. W. Powers Co., was in dock on Sunday. She was flying a crisp new flag of the Merchant Marine.

Mrs. Mabel Gerow, R. R. No. 2, Brighton, while marketing in Trenton a week last Saturday unfortunately lost the ration books of her entire family. This Saturday police when she reported the loss to the local police she was pleased to have them turned over to her, the books having been found in a local store.

Smaller Market

The market on Saturday was much less abounding in fruits and vegetables than for several months past. Late fall is making its appearance in this regard. Some exceptionally good corn was offered, however, at 20c per dozen. Potatoes still were 45c and 50c per peck.

Several varieties of apples were offered, Talman Sweets making their first appearance and selling up to $2.00 per hamper for best grade. McIntosh also brought $2.00 and all cookers brought from 35c per basket up. Some pears sold at 75c per basket.

Grade "A" eggs held the same high as last week at 50c per dozen, others from 42c. Butter 40c, fowl plentiful bringing as much as $1.85 each. A few broilers still offered at $1.25 per pair.

Good firm tomatoes quite plentiful sold at 75c per bushel or 20c per basket and still some cucumbers from 30c per basket up graded according to size.

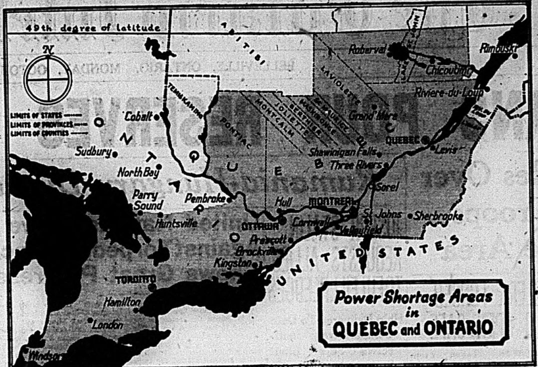
Local Ration Boards Will Handle Replacement Of Lost Ration Books

Ottawa, Oct. 5 — (CP) — Local ration boards which the Wartime Prices and Trade Board proposes to establish throughout Canada will handle replacement of lost ration books and issuance of extra rations for special purposes, officials of the prices board's ration division said today.

An announcement from the ration division said it was also planned to allot these functions to the local boards: changes of address of ration book holders, temporary cards for tourists, ration cards for soldiers on leave, and other matters where special consideration and a knowledge of local conditions are necessary.

The broad general lines along which the local units will operate under the plan were described by Donald Gordon, prices board chairman, in letters which started to go today to more than 500 mayors and reeves of Canadian centres where the new boards are to be established. The municipal heads are being asked to act as chairmen of the local ration boards and to select panels of representative citizens to serve on the boards on a voluntary basis.

Basic principles of the plan were endorsed at a meeting in Ottawa last week by the executive committee of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities after a conference with Mr. Gordon on the subject.



Power Shortage Areas in QUEBEC and ONTARIO

Man Being Held On 'Vag' Charge

Police are holding a man, whose identity has not as yet been revealed, pending investigations into the breaking of a door window at the residence of Mr. Gerald L. Jenkins, 144 Bridge Street East, early Sunday evening.

James Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Jenkins, 144 Bridge St. E., accompanied by Bruce Bishop, returned home in the family automobile shortly after eight o'clock Sunday evening and upon entering the driveway observed the shadow of a man standing at the main entrance to the residence. The Jenkins family were absent from the home at the time and the two boys hastened to the front of the home where they were confronted by a stranger, who stated he was looking for a domestic employee he was acquainted with. Upon being informed there was no person home the stranger left, but later young Jenkins and Bishop observed a door window had been broken leaving a hole sufficiently large enough to reach inside and unlock the door.

Immediately Bishop took up the chase and followed the man while young Jenkins entered the house and notified police. Later police apprehended the man on Queen St. with young Bishop still shadowing his quarry. Although the man denied any knowledge of the broken window, police held him for further investigations on a nominal charge of vagrancy, Chief Probert revealed.

Renovation Program Nearly Completed

The Y.M.C.A. gymnasium floor, swimming pool, dormitories, halls and locker rooms are taking on a brighter aspect these days with an extensive renovation program under way and well on the way toward completion.

Most striking in appearance of the now completed work is the new decoration in the "Y" gymnasium which has seen the floor resanded and varnished with a complete set of new lines painted on the floor in black and green and other contrasting colors. A prolonged period of dancing by district airmen had worn the old lines from the floor, necessitating fresh lines being painted.

The swimming pool also presents an attractive appearance in its new coats of white paint. The pool itself has been cleaned and polished, with the walls and ceiling of the room re-decorated. Locker rooms and dressing rooms are now in process of renovation.

Ceilings and walls of the dormitory, rooms and halls on the third floor of the building have been re-decorated with the floors to be sanded and polished later. The renovation also extends to the basement with the bowling alleys having been resanded and put in perfect trim for an active season of bowling.

Autumn gym classes were expected to get under way at the "Y" this week but adverse weather has caused the paint to be slow in drying and classes will not begin until the last of this week or the first of next week. The swimming pool, however, is now completed and ready for a heavy season's operation.

The course of lectures will last for one week and on her return Commandant Ketcheson will assume the supervision of the special courses in Red Cross Emergency Work which will start on Monday, Oct. 19, at the Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic.

Nephew of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Marsh Awarded M.M. for Bravery at Dieppe

Another chapter has been added to the already impressive military record of the Fred Marsh family, Benjamin Street.

The list of 178 awards made to gallant Canadians in the Dieppe raid carried the name of Sergeant John W. Marsh, the Black Watch (Royal Highland Regiment) of Canada, who was awarded the Military Medal for an "outstanding display of courage and attention to duty which inspired all ranks."

Sergeant Marsh is a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Marsh here and a son of the late Private J. Marsh, Montreal, who died shortly after the end of the last war from effects of gas received with his regiment, the 5th Royal Highlanders (13th Battalion) in France. Another son of the late ex-soldier is Private William Marsh of the Royal Canadian Engineers.

Mr. Fred Marsh has seven of his immediate family in the uniform of the King. Six daughters are with the Canadian Army, and one son Jack with the Royal Canadian Navy. The son, now an able seaman, is home from overseas where he was in an Irish Hospital for some time.

The citation accompanying Sergeant John W. Marsh's award stated "for more than half an hour while his L. C. T. was beached and landing her tanks, he went about his task with utter disregard for personal safety. Although it was impossible to bring the mortars into action because of intense enemy fire, Sergeant Marsh never desisted in his efforts to do so until it was necessary for the L. C. T. to leave. His concern at all times was for the job at hand and at no time did he spare himself in the slightest."

Householders Are Asked to Release Spare Rooms for Wartime Service

At the local office of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board it was said today that while definite plans for applying the program for relieving the housing situation announced by Donald Gordon, Chairman of the Board, had yet to be drafted, there was every reason to believe that it would include Belleville, Trenton and Picton in its scope. Other areas in which it would probably be applied in the Eastern Ontario region of the Board were Kingston, Brockville, Gananoque, Pembroke and St. Eugene. It was possible that, as need arose, additional areas would be covered.

The campaign, to be undertaken by the Consumer Branch of the Board by means of committees which have been already established in most of these areas, will supplement efforts already put forth by the municipalities to place more living-space at the disposal of people in areas where congestion exists and where housing difficulties are being experienced. It is hoped that through an intensive effort to induce householders to release their spare rooms for wartime service, it will be unnecessary to apply anything which resembles compulsion, but it is nevertheless hoped that wherever spare space of this description is available it will be registered so that it may be used as required. This has become a necessity in various areas where congestion is already marked, especially in view of the fact that existing supply and labor difficulties demand a severe curtailment of new housing construction.

Mrs. John Y. Harcourt, chairman of the Women's Regional Advisory Committee of the Board, which will have charge of the room registration program through its local committees, not only urged its widespread acceptance by householders who are able to accommodate those requiring housing-space but solicited the co-operation of women in carrying it out. She expressed the hope that by working in association with existing agencies which are endeavoring to cope with the housing situation, the committees would be able to accomplish something of real value at this time and she also hoped that householders who might not normally consider renting their spare rooms would now come forward with such offers as a patriotic gesture.

MAGISTRATE LLOYD'S FATHER DIES AT BANNOCKBURN

It was learned with regret in the city today of the death of Henry Lloyd of Bannockburn, father of His Worship Magistrate J. L. Lloyd of Northbrook. The elderly Mr. Lloyd had been in ill-health for some considerable time and only last week had been a patient in the Belleville General Hospital.

Upon learning of the death of Magistrate Lloyd's father today, police court officials here announced that all hearings scheduled in Belleville court would be postponed at least until Friday. The sympathy of local court officials and law enforcing agencies were later today extended to the bereaved family.

GOERING WARNS GERMAN PEOPLE OF COMING WINTER

Assures People Will be Fed No Matter What Happens in Europe

Berne, Switzerland, Oct. 5 — (AP) — The German people today had the warning of Reichmarshal Goering the coming winter would not be "so easy" on the fighting fronts, but they were assured they would be fed no matter how hungry the rest of Europe became.

"If there is hunger," he said, "in no event will it be in Germany. From now on it must be the unshakable fact that the German workman and those working in Germany are supplied with food the best of all."

In this connection, he said there are more than 6,000,000 foreigners working in Germany and 5,000,000 prisoners of war.

Asserting that the country had a potato crop this year unsurpassed in history, Goering advised Germans to store the potatoes in their drawing rooms rather than in wet cellars so they would not freeze.

The No. 2 Nazi spoke in the Berlin Sportspalast at the annual harvest thanksgiving festival. It was a long and rambling speech, devoted largely to the food situation, the tricky weather and the home front with all the usual flourishes.

Denies Britain's Claim

Goering denied that Britain had ever sent 1,000 planes on a bombing raid to Germany, but he asked "the poor people who are so frequently so hard-pressed at nights to hold out as marvellously as they have done in the past."

He said he had to keep his air force in the East, but when the Russian enemy "is brought to his knees . . . then we shall meet in England." Goering asserted his air fleet is bigger and better than the Allied air fleet in Britain.

"The coming winter will not be so easy, but it will not be comparable to last year," Goering said. "This time we are prepared. We know what the Russian winter is like. We will be able to stand it better. The enemy may attack all along the front, but he will be cheated at the final point."

He confirmed the reports of differences between Hitler and some of his generals.

"We have a number of the most excellent generals and leaders and such who do not live up to their task or who were not hard enough have been given other tasks or have been replaced," he said. "No one has been shot. But, if a soldier is a coward, he is shot and if a general deserts his troops because of cowardice, he too will be shot." He gave no names.

TRAFFIC CRASHES CAUSE 7 DEATHS DURING WEEKEND

Man and Woman Found Fatally Shot at Hamilton

ONE DROWNED

(By The Canadian Press)

Ten persons met violent deaths in eastern Canada during the weekend. Seven died in traffic accidents, a man and woman were found fatally shot at Hamilton, Ont., and a man was drowned at Stellarton, N.S.

In addition, ten persons were killed Saturday when an airplane crashed at Botwood, Nfld., it was announced late Sunday by the United States Eastern Defence Command and the 1st Army. The plane, with 37 aboard, apparently fell into the sea. It was not announced how many of the 27 survivors were injured.

The bodies of 46-year-old William Cumpson of Hamilton, Ont., and 38-year-old Mrs. Sarah Ellen Murray, both shot, were found early Sunday in Mrs. Murray's Hamilton home. Police said notes found in Cumpson's clothing indicated he intended "doing away" with Mrs. Murray. A .22 calibre rifle was discovered near Cumpson's body.

Seventeen-year-old Isable Murray, daughter of the slain woman, was admitted to hospital suffering serious head injuries. Police said she had been struck with a bludgeon, wielded by Cumpson.

Two months ago to the day—Aug. 4—there was a similar double fatality in Hamilton, when Annette Maley was bludgeoned to death. Shortly after her body was found, 40-year-old Mike Vargo was killed when police said he threw himself under the wheels of a street car. Police said it was murder and suicide.

Car Struck by Train

Hector Milette, 20, and Jean-Paul Dionne, 13, of Three Rivers, Que., died in hospital Sunday of injuries suffered Saturday, when their automobile was struck by a Canadian Pacific Railway train at St. Cuthbert near Three Rivers.

The body of 80-year-old Lorne Francis, Hanover district farmer, was found on the highway near Hanover early Sunday. Police said he was struck by a car whose driver did not stop.

James Cruden, 41, of Highland Creek, Ont., 15 miles east of Toronto, was killed late Saturday night when struck by a Toronto-Oshawa bus while walking with his wife. Andrea Poulin of St. Martin, Que., was fatally injured Saturday when he fell from a moving vehicle. A coroner's jury Sunday brought in a verdict of accidental death.

Reginald Boddington, 40, of Toronto, was fatally injured early Sunday when a car in which he was riding overturned after striking a raised concrete strip on the Humber bridge. Maryanne Yates, of Toronto, said by police to have been driver of the car, was arrested on a charge of manslaughter. Other passengers in the machine were only shaken up.

Sixteen-year-old Donald Douglas of Smiths Falls, Ont., was fatally injured Saturday when the car he was driving left the road and crashed into a tree near Smiths Falls.

The body of Walter McInnis, 42, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., was found Saturday floating in the Albion pond near Stellarton, N.S. An inquest will be held.

WILLKIE VISITS CHINESE SCHOOLS

Spontaneous Welcome Received Leaves Him Visibly Affected

Chungking, Oct. 5 —(AP)— Wendell Willkie mingled for more than four hours today with students and faculty members at four Chungking government educational institutions, reiterating his message of "anti-imperialism" and receiving a spontaneous welcome that left him visibly affected.

Eager, smiling Chinese students virtually overwhelmed Willkie with their manifestations of goodwill, cheering him again and again as he moved from building to building.

Later Willkie lunched with Chen Li-Fu, minister of education, and then gave a luncheon himself in honor of Brig.-Gen., Claire L. Chennault, commander of the United States army air forces in China.

Leading figures of the Chinese educational and scientific world were present at the first luncheon, where Willkie for the first time ate Chinese food with chopsticks.

It was disclosed, meanwhile, that arrangements had been made for Willkie to visit the Chinese battle-front, but the time and place were not revealed.

Yesterday he had a busy day, touring Chungking's war industries, meeting political leaders, including the Communist Gen. Chou En-Lai, and finally having a 3½hour heart-to-heart talk with Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek.

Both Chiang and Willkie refused to comment on the nature of their discussion.

Willkie said he was greatly impressed by what he saw yesterday in Chungking's humming factories, moved inland only a few years ago when the Japanese seized the Chinese seaboard.

Question Asked

"Two: 'To what extent is Allied aid to the Soviet Union proving effective and what could be done to amplify and improve this aid?'

"Answer: As compared with the aid which the Soviet Union is giving to the Allies by drawing upon itself the main force of the German Fascist, the aid of the Allies to the Soviet Union has so far been little effective. In order to amplify and improve this aid, only one thing is required: That the Allies fulfill their obligations fully and on time.

"Three: 'What remains of the Soviet capacity for resistance?'

"Answer: I think that the Soviet capacity of resisting the German brigands is in strength not less, if not greater, than the capacity of Fascist Germany or of any other aggressive power to secure for itself world domination.

"With respect,

"J. Stalin."

This communication, written in Russian and accompanied by an authorized English translation, was given to me yesterday by Nikolai Palgunov, Chief of the Foreign Office Press Department, only 24 hours after I had submitted my queries at the gate of the Kremlin.

In effect, it confirmed the report which Prime Minister Churchill carried back to Britain after his visit to Moscow in August—that Russia is not satisfied with the support she has been receiving from her Allies.

A Major Issue

Stalin himself made no statement after Mr. Churchill's visit — in fact his last public reference to the second front question was Nov. 6, 1941, when he told a meeting of Communist Party leaders celebrating the anniversary of the Bolshevist Revolution:—

"One of the reasons for the reverses of the Red Army is the absence of a second front."

The second front has been a major issue since Foreign Commissar Molotov's visit to London and Washington last May and the subsequent publication of joint British and American communiques announcing that "complete understanding was reached with regard to the urgent tasks of creating a second front in Europe in 1942."

There has been frequent reference to the question since then in the Soviet press, which has reflected the belief the main obligation of the Allies is the opening of a second front.

(Dispatches from London said that Stalin's statement had received wide attention in Britain. The BBC broadcast the letter's text.)

GOV'T TO TAKE

ing the existing regulations and control of maximum rentals and terminating of leases.

Due to wartime demands for materials and labor, new housing construction must be restricted, and building of new dwelling units "will only be possible in the most extreme cases," Mr. Gordon said.

"In effect, housing is being controlled as to supply, use and price in much the same manner as goods. The hoarding of living space may be just as undesirable and harmful to the war effort as the hoarding of scarce commodities."

Organize Voluntary Campaigns

The board will proceed as quickly as possible to organize voluntary local campaigns, through the real property administration, said Mr. Gordon. Central clearing bureaux will be set up in a large number of cities and towns, at which householders will be invited to register the rooms they have available.

This work will be carried out largely by volunteers through the Women's Regional Advisory Committees of the consumer branch, which is directed by Byrne Sanders.

The board chairman said the people participating in the plan are expected to charge "nominal rents" for their rooms.

In districts where the housing shortage is most acute, the Real Property Administration will begin a house-to-house canvass, with a view to making a comprehensive survey regarding both the supply of and demand for housing. Where it is found that existing accommodation is quite inadequate for the needs, the board will so report to the appropriate authorities with a view to having new housing construction authorized.

The statement said the board has no jurisdiction with respect to the construction of houses. To provide it with the necessary legal powers to carry on with this work, the Wartime Leasehold Regulations under which maximum rentals are fixed have been suitably amended.

Stalin Remains Leader of Army

New York, Oct. 5 — (AP) — Reports circulated in Switzerland and broadcast by Axis propagandists during the week-end that Premier Stalin had given up his post as Defence Commissar in Soviet Russia to Marshal Boris M. Shaposhnikov were explicitly discredited in Moscow today.

A message from the Moscow Bureau of The Associated Press said "Stalin remained leader of the Red Army although Shaposhnikov was praised on his birthday as an eminent leader."

Shaposhnikov, Chief of the Russian General Staff, has just turned 60.

Russians Planes Raid Bratislava

London, Oct. 5 — (CP) — Russian planes last night bombed the city of Bratislava, capital of Slovakia, the Nazi-controlled Vichy radio reported today.

The same sources said German bombers were over Dover and Canterbury during the night and also attacked military targets on the British south coast.

The ministries of air and home security, however, dismissed German aerial operations with a terse "nothing to report."

Neil Simonetti, 16, is shown with a police officer following the fatal shooting of Irwin Goodman, 40, a mathematics teacher in the William J. Gaynor high school in Brooklyn, N. Y. Goodman was slain after he had reprimanded two boys, one a former student, for smoking.

THE WAR TODAY

(By CLYDE A. FARNSWORTH)
Associated Press Staff Writer)

As if obliquely warning Japan against any back-stab to facilitate German victory, Joseph Stalin has proclaimed Russia's power to resist the efforts of Germany "or any other aggressive power to secure for itself world domination."

The Russian ordeal at Stalingrad and in the deep Caucasus, marked today by reports of defence lines rectified but unbroken, has for weeks been generally construed as a glowing temptation to the Japanese to strike at Oriental Russia.

The fact that such a blow has not fallen is not so much a credit to the neutrality pact between Russia and Japan as it is to the increasingly demonstrated capacity of the Red army to curb the German invasion.

Stalin's proud appraisal of Russia's power was expressed in a carefully phrased letter of Henry C. Cassidy, chief of the Associated Press Bureau at Moscow, after Cassidy, among other questions, had asked, "what remains of the Soviet capacity for resistance?"

Stalin replied:

"I think that the Soviet capacity of resisting the German brigands is in strength not less, if not greater, than the capacity of Fascist Germany or any other aggressive power to secure for itself world domination."

At the same time the Russian premier, defence commissar and commander-in-chief said the question of an Allied second front to help Russia is "of first rate importance" and that "as compared with the aid with which the Soviet Union is giving to the Allies by drawing upon itself the main force of the German Fascist, the aid of the Allies to the Soviet Union has so far been little effective."

"In order to amplify and improve this aid," the Stalin letter continued, "only one thing is required; that the Allies fulfil their obligations fully and on time."

More than 500,000 Axis troops, principally German, are engaged in a tremendous effort to win a local decision at Stalingrad before Germans shift to Winter strategy of holding their gains against Russian counter assaults, this is being increasingly indicated as Germany's intention.

The latest indication of Germany's intention to fight a holding campaign in Russia this Winter came yesterday in a harvest festival address by Reichsmarshal Goering, No. 2 Nazi, who declared that Germany now knows "what the Russian Winter is like. We will be able to stand it better. The enemy may attack all along the front, but he will be cheated at the final point."

The burden of Goering's harangue, obviously designed to bolster German morale, was that the German population would suffer from hunger this Winter only after the resources of German-dominated nations had been exhausted.

This categorical promise was associated with Goering's explanation of failure to shield Germany from Allied air attacks. The Allies have been bombing Germany at will despite Goering's early boast that no attacker would be able to penetrate the Reich's air defences.

The reason for this, Goering said, is that the German air force is tied up in Russia. When freed from duty there, he promised, Germany will repay the air attacks.

Murder, Suicide At Hamilton

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 5 (CP)— Police continued their investigation today into the deaths of 46-year-old William Cumpson of Hamilton and Mrs. Sarah Ellen Murray, 38, whose bullet-marked bodies were found early yesterday in Mrs. Murray's Belview Avenue home here.

Hospital officials reported improvement in the condition of Mrs. Murray's daughter, 17-year-old Isabel Murray, who suffered severe head injuries and cuts when struck with a trencheon, said by police to have been wielded by Cumpson.

Exactly two months ago to the day—Aug. 4—there was another double fatality in Hamilton. Youthful Annette Maley was bludgeoned to death and shortly after her body was found 40-year-old Mike Vargo of Hamilton was killed when police said he threw himself under the wheels of a street car.

Notes found in Cumpson's clothing indicated he intended "doing away" with Mrs. Murray. One note said "I have been watching her (Mrs. Murray) for a month night and day." Cumpson referred in another letter to a man with whom it was said Mrs. Murray was keeping company.

Police said Cumpson had known Mrs. Murray for some time and once boarded at her home. They said he had been separated from his wife for 20 years. He worked in a Hamilton industrial plant.

I NEED YOUR POWER!

HOME POWER OR WAR POWER?

"I'm making fighting equipment. We've got to turn this stuff out fast . . . and plenty of it . . . if we're going to beat that fellow Hitler.

It takes a lot of electricity to keep a plant like ours going night and day, and we're going to need still more. We're having trouble now in getting all the power we need. They tell me that Canadian homes are using power that should be flowing into our war plants . . . that there isn't enough for our homes to get all they want and for our factories to get all they must have. We've got to use less electricity in our homes from now on . . . if we are going to keep turning out war equipment in the quantities needed."

The use of electricity for commercial purposes has already been restricted. Further restrictions are planned. But we need more power than can be saved from these sources. The voluntary co-operation of the public in the conservation of power is absolutely necessary.

Unless you cut your power consumption by at least twenty per cent—you are not saving enough.

Dangers and Wastage by Fire

By Royal Proclamation the week of October 4 to 10 has been designated as fire prevention week so as to impress upon the public mind the enormous wastage to both life and property occasioned by fire and to seek co-operation of all elements in the community towards the elimination of that waste.

Fire is always a calamity for it means loss, but today in wartime when the resources of the country are being harnessed to the gigantic task of building up the war effort, fire is most serious.

Fire waste in Canada amounted in 1941 to $28,000,,000 in property loss and 323 lives lost. In 1941 of the victims 117 were children.

As has been pointed out that if we are to give of our best to the persecution of the war against Nazism, Fascism and Japanese imperialism we must reduce our fire waste by many millions of dollars. Fire is a national calamity, eating into reserves of needed material or slowing down production. Even accidental fires cause a loss which detracts something from the national war effort because they destroy materials and labor in a time when both are precious.

Carelessness is said to be the greatest destroyer in Canada. So the people must be more careful with fire in daily life. All fires are small in their beginning but they may develop into conflagrations.

Fire prevention is really applied common sense in the little details, such as being sure the cigarette is out before throwing away, examining heating appliances, and seeing there is nothing near heating stoves to catch fire. Conditions can be removed or remedied which cause fire.

This task of fire prevention is not a one-week job. It must extend throughout the entire year. The local fire chief will help with any problems that may present themselves and the people can help him and so together they can add one more to the efforts of winning the war.

Mutual Understanding

Byrone Hope Sanders, director of the Consumer Branch of the W.P.T.Board, says that persons on the home front should be willing to endure at least a measure of discomfort and inconvenience, since those who serve actively are risking life and limb in their country's cause. In a time of shortage of housing householders can render a patriotic service by renting space which is available in their homes to accommodate the population which is drawn to various centres by the proximity of military establishments or of industrial war plants.

An important problem then comes up, the relationship of owner and tenant. Both these she says "can make a very considerable contribution to our war effort by having some consideration of the other fellow's rights, and by the 'little' he gives as well as 'takes.'" In many instances no complaints exist and there is a very cordial and happy relationship. In others there may be a slight irritation which ought not to exist.

Hope Sanders advises the overlooking of any little inconveniences. Tenants should put up with some inconveniences, realizing that they have in many cases been used to larger quarters in their own homes possibly and they can hardly expect the same freedom as under former conditions.

In fact both sides should adjust themselves to a new set of living conditions. The landlord or landlady is sharing a home perhaps, for the first time with strangers and may find it a little difficult and so has a little right to consideration from those who share it.

In wartime the mood of the people is not quite the same as in other days. Life is more moving and keen and people of different temperaments are thrown into contact. Those who "get along" with all these serve best their own and their country's interest and the interests of those with whom they come in contact. The tenant naturally expects some semblance of family life in his temporary quarters and the owner should have as little annoyance or interruption as possible.

This living in harmony under new conditions is what the various elements of the nation are doing and what the United Nations are doing.

DEATH CLOCK SLAYS

How six agents of the German Gestapo were killed by the death clock of Dr. Otakar Sedlacek in Prague has been revealed in London by two men who escaped from Czechoslovakia. After the Nazis marched in, Dr. Sedlacek, famous collector of clocks, was visited by four Gestapo men. They inquired about his son, who had fled abroad. The agents said they wanted the clock collection moved to Berlin, and the collector readily consented. In the middle of his shop was a clock of Napoleon's time whose sinister mechanism was to have blown up a palace. At his invitation the agents returned that evening to inspect the collection. A few seconds after midnight a terrible explosion occurred. In the ruins were found seven bodies, Dr. Sedlacek's among them.

ABOUT TIME

A lot of local doctors, it is reported, are seeking diversion in the marshes and lakes of the district in search of the elusive duck. It's not the first time the bona fide "docs" got after the quacks, but as far as we know it is the first time they went gunning for them.

Wife: "You mean skunk! Of all the rotten, slimy snakes, I think you are the worst. You're just a low-down sneak, cheap skate!"

Her husband (noticing the people who had just arrived': "Yes, dear. And what else did you say to him?"

The President's Trip

New York, Oct 5.—In all the discussion that has raged around the President's trip and whether he should or should not have taken the press in on it, let us not fail to welcome the main fact; namely that the President did get out of Washington, did survey the major war plants of the country, and did get an impression of the country as a whole.

If it were possible to give the whole Washington bureaucracy a two weeks' vacation on condition that they would travel with open eyes and see what is happening in the nation, it would be simply wonderful.

There are advantages and disadvantages in having Washington as a capital. As far as I know there is only one other country that has not made a major metropolis into its capital. That is Australia, where they have built Canberra off the main stream of Australian life. The idea was that one great centre should not profit over other cities by the presence of the Government, and that the nations should be administered in the purity of a monastery.

Lose Contact With Life.

But by this fact, contact is lost with real life. Someone has said that Washington is the greatest company town on earth. And that is true—it is a city with just one industry, the industry of governing.

Such company towns are known to be arrogant; they are furious against any sort of outside action that might disturb them; sometimes they arrest people who come from outside to criticize, to report, or to organize workers, or otherwise to "intervene."

And at the same time, they are suspected by the rest of the towns.

There is a certain element of this about Washington. If our capital were in New York or Chicago, the one or the other would certainly be jealous. Concentrated in Washington it can command the love and respect of residents of all other cities, without envy. That was the idea.

But this has not been the actual result. The people tend to look at Washington, not as a city impartially near to everybody, but as a centre impartially far away from everybody; a city whose chief raw material is paper, whose chief products are bureaucrats, and whose bureaucratic rules and regulations are apparently made without the slightest conception of their effect upon the "outside world" into which they are issued.

Capital Isolated

A Government, placed in the middle of the life of the nation—say in Chicago—is constantly reminded of the facts of life, for the facts of life are going on all around it.

In Washington, the facts of life are the Government itself. Therefore all the struggles of life occur inside the Government.

This isolation also creates a certain society. In this it resembles a university town, where society consists of professors and instructors and their wives, where the social atmosphere—dinner parties, teas, the various functions where men and women meet each other — is permeated with the interests of a single group: university people.

In a normal city there is a constant interplay of interests and one meets, day by day, industrialists, artists, officials, teachers physicians and all sorts and conditions of men each of them with radio into different parts of the social body, each of them coming from one sphere into another and passing back into the first again, so that there is a normal social circulation of the blood, and a constant correction and adaptation of one viewpoint to another viewpoint.

In Washington, since there is no normal intercourse, the outside world enters in the form of lobbyists—ambassadors from groups in the nation to the capital; out of this a sort of diplomatic competition arises as to who is the ambassador of the strongest power. A shrewd diplomat—with a good expense account—becomes clever in establishing contacts; in learning who can be played off against whom; and eventually the domestic life of the nation becomes about as complicated as foreign policy.

Step in Right Direction

And the leading problem in foreign affairs—how to wage a war of coalition— becomes a domestic problem—how to make a domestic coalition — instead of the real problem how can we create a united nation for the purpose of waging war.

Now, in decentralizing himself for a few days, the President took a step in the right direction. In the Arabian Nights there is the story of Harun Al Rashid, the calif who went incognito among the people, encountered many adventures, came back, and knew how to govern—having cut himself off for long periods from his grand viziers.

I suspect that something of the sort impelled the President to be as incognito as possible.

As for the rest of the problem, I don't know the answer except that we should decentralize our bureaucracy—decentralize it to the point where once a clear policy has been laid down, decisions can be made all over the country and far away from Washington.

As it is, we are running the nation as though it were a great A. and P. concern in which every sales slip had to go back to the central office for confirmation before one could conclude the transaction. And the central office becomes concerned with the sales slips—with the pieces of paper—instead of with the life of the nation. The papers take on a life of their own, and the Government tends to believe that the war is waged with the papers.

BIBLES FOR SOLDIERS

Congressman Paul Cunningham of Iowa has introduced a bill that would require the war and navy departments to issue Bibles, as a part of standard equipment, to all members of the armed forces who request them.

The Congressman, who carried a Bible as a soldier during the first World War, says the bill was inspired by one of Kate Smith's broadcasts.

While driving through Ohio, declares Cunningham he heard the radio entertainer report that in a recent poll asking what soldiers and sailors preferred to have sent them, more than 50 per cent asked for Bibles.

With so many different organizations distributing Bibles free, it is hard to understand why any member of the American armed forces who desires a Bible has not been able to get one.

All or a substantial part of the Bible has been translated into more than a thousand different languages and dialects.

It is estimated that more than a billion copies of the Bible have been printed since the invention of printing with movable type.

Early this year it was announced that the chief of U. S. Army chaplains was in charge of a program to prepare and distribute to soldiers more than a million copies of a pocket-size New Testament.

These Testaments, a different type for each of the three major religious groups in the United States, are uniformly bound and have the words "Army of the United States" inscribed in gold letters on the front cover.

President Roosevelt himself wrote the following foreword for this Testament:

"Throughout the centuries men of many faiths and of diverse origins have found in the sacred book words of wisdom, counsel and inspiration. It is a fount of strength and, now, as always, an aid in attaining the highest aspirations of the human soul."

The War Department announced that every person in the army desiring one of these books could have one.

In addition the Gideons, the American Bible Society and other organizations have programs underway to supply Testaments and complete Bible free to every man in the armed forces of the United States.

These organizations are supplying millions of Bibles not only to the members of the armed forces of the United States and to the members of the armed forces of all the United Nations, but also to persons in the Axis-occupied countries.

HOPE

What would the future hold?
If it wasn't for Hope—
A simple Faith and a Trust in God,
And a tiny spark of Hope.

A tiny spark of Hope
That kindles a fire of Love,
Without them we ne'er would find the road
To that blest Abode above.

A narrow path and a road so rough,
And a hill so steep to climb,
But a worthy Trust and a bit of Hope,
And we'll reach the Heights sublime.

Trouble will come and trouble will go,
We'll have our share of sorrow,
But we'll hope and pray, we'll trust and obey,
And look for a brighter tomorrow.

And when we reach our Heavenly Home,
At the top of the long, rough slope,
When our goal is won and we hear, "Well Done",
We'll be thankful that we had Hope.

BRIDGE ST. W.M.S.

On Friday, October 2, the monthly meeting of the Bridge St. Woman's Missionary Society was held in the Church parlors.

Miss Brown presided and opened the service with the recital of the Shepherd's Psalm in unison and hymn, "Jesus, Thou joy of loving hearts" sung as a prayer.

The minutes of the September meeting and the treasurer's report were received and adopted. Mrs. Coulson reported a letter of sympathy having been sent to Miss Jack and Mrs. Harry Morgan said that she had received very appreciative messages from the recipients of flowers during the Summer months. Miss Reeve's report on Temperance and Christian Citizenship revealed some startling facts concerning the hold that the liquor interests have obtained in the Dominion, when foodstuffs and much needed clothing for overseas sufferers were held up for months because space could not be secured in ships although provision was made for the transport of tons of beer.

Mrs. Osborne reminded the members that the bale would be packed the last week in October, and she hoped that everything would be ready for the shipment.

The Autumn Thankoffering meeting as usual will be held in November and we were asked to if possible, surpass the offering of 1941.

The program was provided by Mrs. Hamm's group with Mrs. Hamm presiding. Mrs. Montgomery gave the Scripture Lesson. Mrs. O'Flynn offered prayer, and all joined in a hymn voicing our consecration to the task of making God's Will done on earth.

Mrs. Truesdale introduced the new study book "The Church in the City Streets" written by Dr. Harvay Foster, who for years has been superintendent of All People's Churches in the Niagara Peninsula with headquarters at Welland.

In his introduction, Dr. Foster claims that Christ can save the city, but the church is the agency of redemption; it is not the saviour of the city but points the city to the Saviour. The question—"How is the United Church faring in the city?" 40 per cent of its membership lives in the city. The gospel is sufficient for the city, but are the churches meeting the needs of city men and women? This study seeks to answer this question. City folk have four vital needs—for affection, for economic security, for new experiences and for self-realization as persons and not as a mere cog in a machine. These needs find satisfaction through the family, employment, recreation and education: following a preliminary survey of the city, the book devotes a chapter to each of these needs and the part played by the church in their satisfaction.

Following the introduction by Mrs. Truesdale, Miss Kirkpatrick led a discussion on methods of approach to the realization of the ideal church ministry. In this discussion Mesdames Farnsworth, Massey and Davison took part.

This is a thought provoking book and promises fine results if we measure up to our responsibilities and privileges.

RENTS ARE ROLLED BACK IN U.S. TO MARCH 1ST LEVELS

Ceilings Clamped on Wages, Salaries and Farm Prices

BOARD APPOINTED

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 5 —(CP)— A weekend series of rapid-fire moves designed to halt rises in two major cost-of-living items—food and rent—today placed the United States on the same plane of econimical control that has existed in Canada for several months.

President Roosevelt, given the "go-ahead" signal by Congress to stabilize the cost of living and forestall runaway inflation in the United States, issued an order Saturday which clamped ceilings on wages, salaries, profits, farm prices and rents. Supreme Court Justice James F. Byrnes was appointed economic czar of the United States.

The new machinery, although similar in many respects, differs in detail in the United States and Canada. The nearest approach to Byrnes' 14-man board is the Dominion's economic advisory committee made up of senior government officials.

Following Saturday's order extending price ceilings to 90 per cent of all food products, Price Administrator Leon Henderson, who will help administer the general policies formulated by Byrnes and his economic stabilization board, last night ordered all rents rolled back to their March 1 levels.

Food Prices Froze

The food-price freeze, a 60-day emergency order to be followed soon by permanent ceilings for the duration, is effective today. It enjoins all retailers, wholesalers, manufacturers and processors to charge no more than the highest price they charged between Sept. 28 and Oct. 2.

Only important foodstuffs excepted were fresh fish, most fresh fruits and vegetables, probably to be treated later on a seasonal basis.

The rent order, a further carrying out of President Roosevelt's anti-inflation directives, is to be issued today.

All landlords who have raised rents in the last seven months will be asked to reduce them to March 1 levels.

Hitler's Nephew Rejected by U.S.

New York, Oct. 3 (AP)—William Patrick Hitler, a nephew of Adolf, has been rejected by the United States army.

When William, 31 and single, answered his draft questionaire, he wrote opposite "living relatives serving or who have served in other armies":—

"1. Thomas J. Dowling, uncle, England, 1923-1926, Royal Air Force. 2. Adolf Hitler, uncle, Germany, 1914-1918, Coropral".

Tonight William said:—

"The Board told me four weeks ago that I had been reclassified 1-A and would be in the army in a month".

He is a British subject and added that he now would try to join the Royal Canadian Air Force as a bombardier.

"After all, I do know Germany", he said.

His mother was separated from Alois Hitler, the Fuehrer's half-brother, when William was two years old.

William said that he would change his name if necessary to join the R.C.A.F.

"It only costs 50 cents", he said. "Hitler is a rather uncomfortable name, you know".

Jane Randolph demonstrates upward strokes to eliminate fatigue lines.

By HELEN FOLLETT

When the career girl has finished a hectic day of hard work, and an evening party is on the calendar, she looks at her tired face, wonders if anything can be done about it. There are fatigue pouches under the eyes. Why can't she learn to take the job a bit more calmly, not rush around at lunch time, give herself a decent break? Hurry and nervous tension make her facial muscles tense and the face looks drawn.

All right. That's the way things are for the poor dear. She gets into a hot bath, has a cold shower and that helps. She gives herself a tonic rub down, using a bath lotion that smells sweet and boosts her spirits. Perhaps she'll last through the evening after all.

She gives her face and neck a brisk creaming, using upward strokes to erase the fatigue lines. She does next a five-minute tapping treatment to bring freshness and color to her cheeks. My goodness, says our heroine, I look almost human! The cream is removed with tissues, a skin tonic slapped on with bits of cotton.

She gets busy with the decorative aids, touches cheeks lightly with the drug store blush, puts on the lipstick with a tiny brush, smoothing it with her finger tip.

Now for the eye shadows, which will surely do something for her if she knows how to wrestle with them. A faint, faint film is applied to the lids, extending outward to the tip of the eyebrow. Lashes are touched with mascara.

There she is! Sweet as peaches! Rarin' to go!

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

"OFFICERS' MANUAL" FACES PROBLEM OF ETIQUETTE

Service authorities regard the correct forms of social etiquette and behaviour as just another "drill," and in "Officers' Manual" they face these correct forms with the same resolution and precision as they face any other task.

There is no pussy-footing in the answers given by the authorities to etiquette questions; no cautious "This .. or that .. may be done," no "It depends on circumstances."

With the Army and the Navy authorities there is, naturally, no such equivocation. To these strongholds of good manners, the best social forms are the best social forms because they are the most desirable practices, and the Service respects and honors desirable practices.

The "Officers' Manual," before it begins to answer questions on social etiquette and behaviour, does acknowledge that "The mere act of writing down a list of things one should or should not do in social intercourse opens the writer to a charge of superior attitude." Then, having acknowledged this fact, it faces the charge bravely and in no uncertain terms!

BRIDEGROOM IN UNIFORM

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it correct when the bridegroom is in uniform (and therefore cannot wear a boutonniere) for the best man and ushers, civilians, to wear boutonnieres.

2. When the reception is to be at the bridegroom's home where should the wedding gifts be sent?

—B. D.

1. Yes.

2. The wedding gifts should be sent before the reception (if possible, two weeks before the wedding date) and should be addressed to the bride-to-be at her own home.

This should be done, even if, under this unusual circumstance of having the reception at the bridegroom's house, it would mean that the wedding presents would not be shown at the reception. The bride-to-be might invite her relatives and friends to come to tea at her house a few days before the wedding and then show her presents to them.

BEHAVIOUR TIPS

It is good manners to keep your mouth closed when you are eating. And it is good sense to keep your mouth closed when you are tempted to repeat news you are not supposed to repeat or "rumors" that may have terrible consequences.

Swelling of Tracheal Membranes, Severe and Common in Children, Attributed to Strep Infection.

An infection of the larynx, the trachea and the bronchi, a very serious disease in children, is called laryngotracheobronchitis — a name descriptive of the parts attacked. Very common in children under two years, the disease also occurs in older children but usually not in so severe a form.

Producing severe exhaustion, the disease is due to an infection, probably a streptococcus. The infection causes swelling of the lining membrance of the windpipe (the trachea) and bronchi (small tubes in the lung) and thus interferes with breathing. In fact, the obstruction to the breathing may be so severe that an opening must be made in the windpipe to allow the patient to get enough air.

The condition often starts after a slight head cold, accompanied by a croupy, barking cough, and hoarseness. Then the child has trouble in breathing. The pulse rate and temperature increase, and the skin assumes a bluish tinge because the child is not getting enough air into the lungs. There also may be some wheezing. A thick secretion is formed which sticks to the walls of the bronchi.

In mild cases of the disease, the patient improves with such treatment as the taking of plenty of fluids, inhalation of steam and of oxygen. In other cases the blocking of the air passages may be so severe that more radical treatment is necessary.

Following an operation to open the windpipe, the room must be kept saturated with moisture at all times in order to help keep crusts from forming in the air passages. For this purpose an electric humidifier is better than a steam inhalator, since the latter may make the room too hot.

Doctors Wilson J. Troup and David F. Weaver, of Wisconsin, says that dropping a few drops of such solutions as baking soda or epinephrine into the windpipe may help to liquefy the secretions, improve the child's breathing, and overcome the obstruction in the air passages.

At times, the fluids may be withdrawn by a suction pump connected to a small rubber tube. If the germ that is causing the disease is the streptococcus, sulfanilamide may be given with benefit. For staphylococcis infections, sulfathiazole may be used. If infections are produced by the pneumococcus, sulfapyridine is employed.

Sedatives may tend to decrease the secretions or interfere with coughing. Interference with the coughing is inadvisable, since the coughing may help to get rid of thick secretions in the air passages.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

School Suggested for Lonesome Parents Whose Married Children Have Left Home.

There's no turning backward in Time's flight. We've got to go along with Time, adjust ourselves to the old man with the scythe, hold him at bay, beat him in the race as long as possible—then finally submit.

These reflections occurred to me today when I read three letters, all of them indulging in that best of indoor sports, feeling sorry for one's self. Mesdames A, B and C are all sorry for themselves because their children no longer seem to need them, have little interest in them, don't seek their advice or ask them to their parties.

We'll take the case of Mrs. A., who was left a widow at 34, with three children. She sang in the choir of a New York church, had two excellent offers of marriage, which she turned down because she felt, if she married, her children might not come first.

Apparently Mrs. A. was a splendid mother. She brought up her two sons and one daughter well. She gave all three a college education, married them off successfully, and now is broken-hearted bcause, as she says "in spite of giving up my life for them they have no further interest in me."

She writes that they never invite her to their parties, but borrow her silver and treasured china—and sometimes the china gets broken. She is never consulted about her grandchildren. Sending them out more than half-naked in sun suits, giving tomato juice to infants of a few months, and never allowing them to be picked up when they cry, seems positively wicked to her.

Perhaps all the things that Mrs. A. did for her children seemed just as foolish and radical to her parents as the things now happening to Mrs. A's grandchildren. She doesn't tell me about it, or if she invited parents to her parties when she left the parental nest.

What an excellent thing it would be if we could have a school for parents whose children have married, and teach them to adjust themselves to the ways of the new generation. Perhaps, all said and done, such ways are merely old-fashioned methods revived, such as giving babies tastes of grown-up foods. Mothers who stuck to breast-feeding and modified milk for the first eight or nine months would never have done this. We may go back to that in the next generation or the one after that.

Letters like that of Mrs. A. suggest one remedy—occupation. Apparently these women love children and miss the companionship of their own and their grandchildren. Never was there a time when that need of the maternal heart could be filled to overflowing.

There is a nation-wide demand for child care so that mothers may be released to work in defence plants. Whether a baby is your grandchild or someone else's, its smile, its endearing little proffers of affection, its dawning love for the person who cares for it is as precious almost as if it were your own flesh and blood.

These lonesome women will find plenty of happiness if they'll sign up for nursery work in order to release mothers for work in defence plants.

Fashion Flashes

FINE FEATHERS make fine hats. A smart new model is of purple felt with an eyeline ruching of violet velvet and a sweeping fancy of fuchsia colored coq.

NEW INTEREST abounds in the fur world, for designs are more interesting and varied than ever, with emphasis on original design that will always look well, no matter how long the coat is worn. A three-quarter length full coat of Persian lamb with tuxedo revers and turn-back cuffs has a swirl of black fox bordering the hemline.

A BIG HAND from the teensters for those bright fleece coats nice for day or evening. A fine model is in white fleece with red flannel collar and front facing and a lining of quilted red satin.

CLICKING all over the country is the easy, slim styled frock and matching jacket of crepe with a touch of glitter. One model has bands of sequins on its softly tailored jacket and a sequin rose on the simple little short-sleeved frock.

A SWEET SHADE is a new shade termed "sugar plum" developed for leather shoes and bags. It is a purply plum shade and it looks particularly nice for a calfskin shoe made with a high-heeled bow pump with a matching draped underarm pouch bag.

VERY PRACTICAL are those furlined casual coats. Red woolen is used for an attractive model made with tuxedo revers and lining of leopard cat. The big feature of these coats is that they are reversible.

Yankees Appear Demoralized And Out of Pitchers as Cards Gain 3-1 Edge in World Series

White Blanks Yankees on Saturday 2-0 and Cards Win Free-Hitting Contest Sunday 9-6

TERRY MOORE STARS

By GAYLE TALBOT
Associated Press Sport Writer

NEW YORK, Oct. 5 — (AP) — The mighty Yankees appear demoralized and out of pitchers as they go into the fifth game of the 1942 world series today against St. Louis Cardinals, one of the most underrated clubs ever to fight its way into the classic.

Defeated twice running in their home park by a team they had confidently expected to trounce, jittery and crippled and feuding with the umpires, the proud bombers look ready for the kill. A vast majority of those who have witnessed the series to this point expect the wild-running Cards to win again today four games to one.

When they rallied twice in the closing innings to slug out a 9-6 victory in Sunday's tussle before a record series throng of 69,902 at Yankee Stadium, the daring young men from the West left little doubt in anyone's mind that they have what it takes to humble their vaunted adversaries.

The previous day they had done it with pitching, when their Lefty Ernie White blanked the old champions 2-0 — the first whitewashing administered to a Yankee team in a world series since 1926. Yesterday the Cards said it with their bats, and for the second time in the series shook off a crushing home run by the Yankees' Charley Keller to break a resultant tie and come on to win.

Everyone Impressed

Everyone was impressed with the Cardinals. The locals had to be shown that a crowd of comparative youngsters could come in and practically run the Yankees right out of the Stadium, and the lads from Missouri obliged them the last two days. In the subways back to town from the stadium last night and in the public houses much later, men were declaring solemnly that the Cardinals might be one of baseball's truly great teams.

The experts, themselves slightly groggy at what they had seen in recent days, were not disposed to argue very much about it. Practically all of them had thought the Yankees would win the series, but they had to admit they seldom had seen such baseball played as the Cardinals had poured into the Yanks since they suddenly found themselves in the ninth inning of the opening game at St. Louis and pounded Red Ruffing from the mound.

Beazley Looks Best

They agreed that the Yankees were in semi-desperate straits for pitching when Manager Joe McCarthy was forced to call upon the 37-year-old Ruffing again today. Red has been strictly a once-a-week flinger during the last season, and he faces the Cards today with less than his normal rest. Despite the brilliance of his first-game effort, when he set a world series record by holding the Cardinals hitless for the first 7 2-3 innings, the odds appeared to be against Red's stemming the youngsters' onslaught again.

As for Manager Billy Southworth, he is in position to come back today with Johnny Beazley, the strong-armed kid from Tennessee who brazened out threat after threat to subdue the Yanks in the second game. Thus it was winner against winner, but the 23-year-old Beazley, with lightning in his fast ball and the strength to pitch all day, looks a better bet than the Ruffing who collapsed before he could finish his chore.

M. Cooper Disappoints

The only disappointing thing about the Cards up to this point had been the failure of their top pitcher, Mort Cooper, winner of 22 games in the regular season, to win either of his starts in the playoff. The Yankees licked him in the first game, when he lacked control, and they knocked him from the hill again yesterday, when they scored five runs to tie the score at 6-6 in the sixth inning.

But where Cooper fell down, his less-noted mates came through like champions many think they will be by this nightfall. Not since Pepper Martin, another wild-running Cardinal of another day, gave Philadelphia Athletics multiple abrasions in 1931 has the baseball world seen a set of hell-for-leather ball players like the present outfit from the banks of the Mississippi. This writer, among others, prophesied solemnly before the world series began that the Cardinals, for all their shenanigans in the closing stages of the National League race, would not be permitted to indulge in any dizzy base-running against the Yankees. The Yankees would mow them down. The Yankees would not stand for that sort of stuff.

Dickey Makes Foolish Throw

Yet yesterday, with 69,902 critical spectators looking on, catcher Bill Dickey, one of the noblest Yankees of them all, made perhaps the first absolutely foolish and unnecessary wild throw of his illustrious baseball career to put the winning St. Louis run on third base, when it scored a moment later. There was no accounting for it except that the Cards had upset even Dickey by their mad dashing about the paths in previous innings.

The Yankees just had tied the score in the sixth, wiping out a 6-1 St. Louis lead that had looked good enough to win a half-dozen games, and the Cards had every reason to feel like slicing their gullets. The homer by Keller, that had scored three runs and knocked Cooper from the box was enough to discourage many a team, probably any team except the present Cardinals.

Then to start the Card seventh, Atley Donald of the Yanks issued a pass to Enos Slaughter. Shaken, he also threw the fourth ball past Stan Musial. And what did Dickey do but loop a wild peg over second base in a totally meaningless effort to stop Slaughter short of second. Slaughter had the base coming to him, of course, but he was so pleased with Dickey's effort, that he raced on to third. And a moment later he scored as Walker Cooper slapped a short single to centre field.

Game's Winning Run

It was the game's winning run, as it turned out, and Slaughter could not have scored from second on the hit — not with Joe DiMaggio throwing the way he does. Perhaps it was not important, as the Cards scored again in the ninth, anyway, on solid hits by Johnny Hopp and Max Lanier and a sacrifice, but it showed what the Cardinal running had done to the Yankees' nerves.

That was what the record crowd liked best about the Cards — their running. Every time for the last two days that a Yankee dropped a ball, he looked up to see a Red Bird tearing out for the next bag. They went in head first and feet first, and almost always they made it, even when you would have sworn they would be thrown out by 20 feet. It was a breath-taking sort of baseball that no other National League club had thrown into the Yankees in other world series. It worked!

LENARD, STUKUS CANDIDATES FOR FOOTBALLHONORS

Hurricanes and Wildcats Score Second Successive Wins in League

BEACHES SWAMPED

As surely as their respective teams appear to have an edge on the rest of the clubs in the Ontario Rugby Football Union, Al Lenard of Hamilton Wildcats and Bill Stukus of Royal Canadian Air Force Hurricanes loom today as leading candidates for any individual honors the league may bestow this season.

Even at this early date, Lenard and Stukus have added quite a few clippings to their scrapbooks. Both scintillated in the O.R.F.U.'s opening games If anything, they turned on the heat a few more degrees Saturday in the second instalment of the schedule.

Lenard went into battle against Toronto Oakwood Indians Saturday wearing a bird cage mask to protect an injured nose. As far as the Indians were concerned, he should have been behind bars. The ex-Assumption College ace scored 12 of his team's points as Wildcats triumphed 13-6. He kicked a placement in the first quarter, duplicated in the second, streaked eight yards for a touchdown in the third and then converted. Bob Henry was roughed on George Slinn's kick for the odd Hamilton point. Jim Cumming saved Indians from a shutout by lancing through the Hamilton line for a touchdown in the last quarter.

Flyers Unleash Attack

Even at that, the Indians fared considerably better than Toronto Balmy Beach, who faced Hurricanes at Toronto's Varsity stadium in the first half of the first senior double-header in the history of the O.R.F.U. The fury of Flyers' attack simply cooked Beaches to a crisp. Stukus didn't explode all the Flyers' fireworks personally in the incredible 40-6 blasting of the Beaches, but his inspired field generalship kept the Air Force machine running in high gear.

Ed Poscavage and Pop Poplowsky had two touchdowns apiece for Flyers with the other two going to Jake Gaudaur and Stukus. While the rest of the embarrassed Beaches were looking for headache powders, Bob Cosgrave slipped unobtrusively into the line-up and recovered a loose ball for their only score.

The victories moved Flyers and Wildcats into joint leadership of first place. This team rivalry, and the individual argument between Stukus and Lenard, will get an airing next Saturday when the Hurricanes and Wildcats meet for the first time.

In the third game Saturday Toronto's Navy team H. M. C. S. York hammered out an unequivocal 25-1 conquest over Kitchener-Waterloo Panthers in Kitchener. Hugh Cuddie was the individual star of the matinee, scoring a touchdown in each quarter. The win moved Navy into a third-place tie with Oakwood Indians and plummeted Panthers into the cellar along with Balmy Beach.

U.S. Amateur League May Not Function

Winnipeg, Oct. 5. (CP)—Lester Patrick said in an interview here last night that the recently announced intention of calling up 19-year-olds in Canada may make it impossible for the Eastern United States amateur hockey league to function.

Patrick, head of New York Rangers of the National League, said on the eve of opening his ninth annual Ranger Hockey School that it is going to be difficult to get 14 players for his amateur team—New York Rovers.

The new call-up regulations is liable to catch most of the 35 amateurs that are enrolled in the school, he said. First scrimmages start at the amphitheatre rink today.

He expressed satisfaction with the national League outlook although he said that teams will have to use younger players to offset the loss of 19-year-olds.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

(By SCOTT YOUNG)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 5.—(CP)—War has given sport back to the amateurs, and posterity probably will record that as a long step forward.

There will be no attempt made here to tabulate the examples. But in every Canadian community where major sport flourishes, the transition has taken place.

In peacetime athletic club executives could hand out $10 to $25 to each player each day for meals and expenses on the road. They could pay bonuses or salaries to these misnamed, but not to be condemned, "amateurs". A man was lucky to be in sport.

For players and executives alike there were plenty of money, good gates, heavy publicity, travelling, no important criticism. It was the second year of war—the fall of 1940—when the pinch came.

There still was plenty of money, but executives began to wonder whether the gates would hold up. Several newspapers reduced the space allotted to sport and sports-writing staffs were hit by enlistments, so publicity slackened. A portion of the public—minor, but highly vocal—began to criticize the men who played in wartime, and the men who directed their play. The heat was on.

Many of the big fellows, the hotel -room potentates, the committee-room politicians, ran for cover. To their everlasting credit, a few of them stayed in the open. They reduced sports budgets, told the players the fun would be free in future.

Then they looked around, startled to find that their departed confreres had been replaced. These newcomers were quieter men. They were remembered as the men who ran the midget and juvenile leagues, the timekeepers at little-attended football, soccer and lacrosse matches, the scorekeepers from minor baseball circuits.

Sport always had been sport to them. It still is. Others always had the trips, the expense money, the publicity. These were the men who scrounged for lacrosse equipment to keep youngsters in the game on the Pacific Coast, who dug for $12 or $15 to send a boys' baseball or hockey team a few miles in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They ran the world's biggest sectional hockey association, the O.H.A., in Ontario, High School Football in Quebec, good minor-league baseball in the Maritimes.

This is the Canadian sports executive of the duration—or perhaps (fervently) of the future. Times will get much tougher in sport, but the country seems to need it. These men will be the good providers.

I am leaving this scene now for the CP's London Bureau. I will be seeing a lot of your friends in the services, and this is one of the many things I will be proud to tell them.

Nebraska is Cradle Of Modern Wrestling

Nebraska has long been recognized as the cradle of modern wrestling greats as Frank Gotch, Farmer Burns, Joe Stecher and Earl Craddock, all holders of the heavyweight wrestling championship at one time or another came from the great farming state of Nebraska.

Perhaps Gotch was the greatest of all Nebraska sons to hold the title, he won it from George Hackenschmidt in 1905 and retired undefeated in 1914. In 1915 Joe Stecher won the title for Nebraska and lost it to Earl Craddock, a fellow Nebraskan in 1917, but Stecher regained the crown later. Farmer Burns also held the title for a short time and was always a leading contender for many years.

Other sons of Nebraska have risen to dizzy wrestling heights, the latest being the Burns' Boys, Jake and George These boys are nephews of the great Farmer Burns and come by their muscle-bending prowess rightfully. The Burns' brothers appeared at the Hume arena here last week and immediately proved popular wrestlers, as they go about their business in true Nebraskan style. The Burns' boys are back at the local sports palace again Wednesday night to open a card that features Earl McCready and Ali Adali, the Terrible Turk.

RCAF Will Not Seek To Enter Picked Teams

Winnipeg, Oct. 5 (CP)—Sqdn. Ldr. Lionel Conacher of the Royal Canadian Air Force said in an interview here that athletic halls have been opened at Prairie schools of the British Commonwealth Air Training plan. Recreational centres will be opened at air stations in British Columbia, he added.

Conacher, sports director for the R.C.A.F., completed a western tour of air stations late yesterday and announced that air force hockey teams in the Dominion will play this winter for the recreational value the game provides. The R.C.A.F. will not seek to enter picked teams in senior leagues, he said

YANKEE STADIUM HELPS CARDINALS SAYS BABE RUTH

Former Yankee Says Three Flies Caught Would Have Been Homers in St. Louis

A BIG PASTURE

By SID FEDER
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 5—(AP)—In between bites of a sandwich, the big guy leaned up against the lunch counter underneath Yankee Stadium and explained how it's just one of life's little jokes that has the Yankees two down and one to go against the Cardinals in this World Series.

The big guy used to be a pretty fair ball player himself, and a Yankee to boot. The name is Ruth—George Herman Ruth, sometimes known as the Babe.

"Y'know," the Babe said, "it's a funny thing. For years everybody's been saying how the Yanks are good only because their ball park was built especially for them; they could hit all those homers simply because the field was laid out with the idea that they'd knock that apple into the stands.

"Well, here we've lost two games in a row in our own ballyard. And if those two games had been played in Sportsman's Park, the Cards' home grounds, we'd have won at least one of 'em, and maybe both."

Put in Right Spots

The Babe ought to know about what the folks used to say about Yankee Stadium. When he first started to rattle fences, the Yanks built the big three-decker around him, and arguments went on all the time that the fences were put up just at the right spots so fellows like Ruth and Lou Gehrig and Bob Meusel could have fun shooting at them.

"Just look at what happened," the Babe went on. Saturday the Cards won 2-0. If the game is played in St. Looee, we win 5-2. How? That's easy. Joe DiMaggio hit a 400-footer to left centre in the sixth that Terry Moore had room enough to run after and pull down. Joe Gordon sent Stan Musial up against the 350-foot sign in left for his drive in the seventh. And Slaughter had to back right up against the right field wall, 360-feet from home plate, to haul in Charley Keller's clout in the ninth. In St. Louis, all three of 'em would have been homers. And don't forget, there were fellows on base when Gordon and Keller hit those shots, too

"And take yesterday's game. The Cards won 9-6. In the fourth inning DiMaggio hit a honey. It went 420 feet into left centre, and it was just an out, because Moore had room to go back for it. In Sportsman's Park, that would have been out of the lot."

ERNIE WHITE

Brilliant lefthander of the Cardinals, who shutout the Yankees in third game of World Series 2-0, the first time the feat has been accomplished since 1926. White hurled masterfully and coolly.

MAX LANIER

Fourth pitcher to be used by Southworth in Sunday's battle with Yanks and who subdued the New York team from seventh innings to get credit for win.

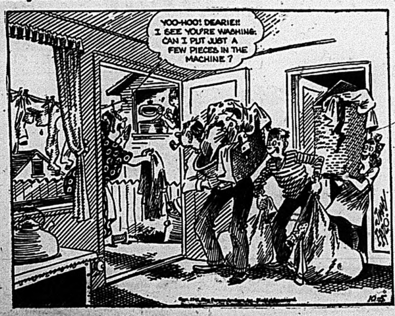
CHARLIE KELLAR

Rightfielder of Yankees, who has blasted two home runs in series, his one on Sunday putting Yankees back in ball game after St. Louis had scored six runs in the fourth frame.

TERRY MOORE

Outfielder for the Cards, who has come up with the finest defensive plays of the entire series and also one of the hitting stars. He has robbed DiMaggio of homers on two occasions with sparkling running catches.

They'll Do It Every Time— By Jimmy Hatlo



YOO-HOO! DEARIE!! I SEE YOU'RE WASHING. CAN I PUT JUST A FEW PIECES IN THE MACHINE?

Baa, baa, black sheep

Have you any wool?

Everybody should be interested in how Canada's industries are serving them as well as giving service to his Majesty's Forces in this all-out war effort. Canadians also want to know how they can make their present wearing apparel last longer and give more service.

Regarding underwear for men, women and children STANFIELD'S have this to say: "as one of the largest underwear mills in Canada we have taken the stand that the war needs must come first and our organization and facilities are co-operating with our government in supplying the critical needs of a country at war."

STANFIELD'S wish to make it clear that they are anxious to supply as much underwear as possible for civilian requirements but at the same time we ask our patrons to keep in mind that our allotment of wool is necessarily restricted and the same thing applies to cotton yarns and practically all materials entering into the manufacture of underwear. Because of the present critical situation we are quite frank in suggesting to civilians that they do not buy any more underwear than they actually need and to try and make their present underwear last as long as possible by taking proper care of it.

We recommend to civilians who are actually in need of underwear that they buy good underwear, the kind that will fit, last and give long wear.

If it is woollen underwear give it more attention than would perhaps be done in normal peace times. The war situation requires that people economize and make things last longer and go farther.

In giving this advice to our patrons we do so sincerely because we believe that the Canadian people have come to rely on STANFIELD'S UNDERWEAR as a standard of quality. STANFIELD'S brands are recognized. We wish to make "STANFIELDS" trade mark a sign and symbol of goodwill because it represents an investment of millions of dollars, not only in advertising but in research, manufacturing and marketing.

CASUAL COMMENT
by K.J.C.

THE ST. LOUIS CARDINALS, who are today playing inspired baseball in the 1942 World Series, gained their nickname in the spring of 1900, the year in which the National League reduced its membership from 12 to eight clubs, and a sports writer bestowed the moniker that has remained with the team since then.

In January, 1899, the remnants of Chris Von der Ahe's original Browns, together with the franchise, were auctioned on the courthouse steps of St. Louis. When Cleveland was dropped from the National League, along with three other cities, following the 1899 campaign, the Robison brothers—Frank deHaas and M. Stanley—brought their Cleveland Spiders to St. Louis.

The Robisons dropped the brown trimmings used on the St. Louis team's uniforms in the Von der Ahe regime, and outfitted their club in suits with cardinal trimmings.

In the spring of 1900, just before the season opened, Willie McHale, a sports writer on the old St. Louis Republic, referred to the team as the Cardinals. One by one the other St. Louis papers took up the nickname, and writers in other cities followed. The moniker has remained, down through the years until it is now one of the most famous in the game.

ON THE YOUTHFUL shoulders of Rookie Johnny Beazley, Manager Billie Southworth will pin the hopes of the St. Louis Cardinals to end the 1942 World Series today. Southworth is defying baseball tradition by sending a so-called recruit into his second world series, but if the Cardinals continue to play the sensational style of defensive ball they've been successful in for the past three games then Beazley should make world series history with two victories in the current fall classic during his freshman year. When the history of the 1942 world series has been completed, however, the name of Terry Moore will blaze across the sports pages, as the hometown St. Louis centrefielder has been a continued bane to the Yankee sluggers, especially Joe DiMaggio, who apparently can't hit one without Moore coming up with a sensational running catch. With speed, daring and the strongest defensive play produced by the National League champions in years the St. Louis Cardinals are better than favourites to breeze in today.

REMEMBER WHEN Lou Nova, of San Francisco, got up off the canvas in the third round to batter Gunner Barlund, Finnish heavyweight boxer, into submission at New York three years ago tonight? Nova was awarded a technical knockout in the seventh round of their scheduled 15-round match.

ALTHOUGH THE BROOKLYN Dodgers won more games than they lost while making the western turn around the National League circuit in 1942, "Dem Bums" fared exceedingly poorly in St. Louis.

The Dodgers won 27 games and lost 17 in the west this season, and that was an improvement over the record they compiled last year when they won 23 and lost 21. They were at their best in Cincinnati, where they won nine out of 11. They made their poorest showing in St. Louis, winning only three of the 11 played there.

WHOEVER PENNED THE phrase, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown" struck a keynote and that goes in sports as well as any other walk of life. Take John Katan for instance. Little concern was paid to the Calgary "eye-opener" until he opened a lot of wrestling fans' eyes with a surprise win over Whipper Billie Watson the other night to annex the British Empire title. Now all of the boys are after Katan's scalp. Nanjo Singh is shouting loudest, but Watson considers he is deserving of a return bout. Then there is "Big Earl" McCready, who's in the running, but Katan wants no part of the "Regina Ruffian," who meets Ali Adali, the Terrible Turk, at the Hume Arena Wednesday night. If McCready can topple over the Turk he may be able to persuade Skipper Tunney to give him a whirl at Watson here, but then Earl has to make better than a fair showing against the Turk first off.

THIS AND THAT — Big Whirlaway showed his real class Saturday when he won in a breeze over Alsab in the Belmont Gold Cup .... "Mister Big-tail" thus became the first horse in turf history to win more than $500,000., as he picked up $18,350. to run his life's earnings to $511,486. on Saturday .... The Vimy Officers beat the Vimy Barracks 10 to 9 in the opening of the Kingston Rugby Football League Saturday ..... George Campbell's Oshawa Colts won the Intermediate "A" softball championship of the province beating Guelph two straight ... The Colts won 7 to 5 in Guelph Saturday to take the O. A. S. A. top honors in straight games .... "Congrats, George" .... The Toronto Air Force and Hamilton won their second straight games in the senior O. R. F. U. over the weekend at Toronto, the former blasting Balmy Beach 40 to 6 .... "You'll be sorry" — that familiar cry may yet be heard in Montreal whenever the Toronto Maple Leafs play there next winter .... On Saturday Les Canadiens purchased Gordon Drillon, goal-producing right winger of the Leafs ... It was the public who soured on the prolific-scoring Drillon, and they may yet be sorry ... A world's record for world series attendance was established at the Yankee Stadium on Saturday and then bettered on Sunday ... On Saturday 69,123 crowded "the house that Ruth built", but on Sunday 69,902 helped to swell the beams and seams ... Sunday was the first time in the series that the Red Birds had out-hit the Yankees in any one game, turning the trick 12 to 10 ... In the composite box score for the first four games the Yankees have counted 37 hits and the Cardinals 30 ...... Three times in the past five years the Kansas City Blues have won the American Association pennant ... It's win or shovel coal all winter for the Yankees today.

World Series Notes

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR
Associated Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK, Oct. 5 — (AP) — With their tired backs against the well-known wall, the New York Yankees today are in a position as unfamiliar to them as standing on their heads ... like a man biting a dog, the Cards not only have shuffled the Yankees, but also they have trumped their aces and virtually dealt them out of the world series ... the slam-bang St. Louisians already have accomplished what everybody except the Red Birds' relatives said was impossible by winning three straight.

Two of the staunchest Yankee fans who haven't given up are Mayor LaGuardia and Babe Ruth ... "We haven't lost yet," declared the Mayor as he left his box after yesterday's game ... Ruth poked his head in the Yankee dressing room and yelled: "Keep your chins up, boys; we'll get 'em yet." ....

If the Yankees should pull the series out of the fire, they will be the first to win three games after trailing, 3-1, since the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Washington Senators by that method in the 1925 battle ... the 1922 Giants were the last team to hold a 3-1 edge over the Yankees in a post-season classic ... last team to take a world series from the bombers was the 1926 Cardinal crew, winning four games to three.

Among the Cards who have been at bat more than once in this series, there is not one .300 hitter for the classic, the highest being Terry Moore and Stan Musial, each with .286 ... on the other hand, the trailing Yankees have half a dozen who are clubbing .333 or better ... Joe DiMaggio and Phil Rizzuto have made six hits each ... Red Rolfe, Roy Cullenbine and Bill Dickey have collected five apiece.. ...no Cardinal has more than four hits for the series to date.

As if the Cards weren't giving them enough to worry about, the Yankees are concerned over the war ... Red Ruffing, Bill Dickey and Joe Gordon are among the Yanks considering seeking places in the air forces when the series is over and Phil Rizzuto has joined the navy ... Enos Slaughter, Card outfielder, has joined the air force and leaves immediately after the final game .. Johnny Beazley plans to enlist in the marines as soon as the series melon is sliced and Terry Moore, the Card field captain, expects to be in the army by the end of the year.

SALMONBELLIES MEET COMBINES IN THE FINALS

Mimico - Brampton Will Give Western Champions a Real Battle

PLAY IN TORONTO

(By HAROLD ATKINS)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Lachine, Que., Oct. 5. (CP)—A youthful New Westminster lacrosse team, possessing an abundance of ability and fired with the same fighting spirit that characterised famous Salmonbelly Clubs of other years, headed towards Toronto today confident of the outcome of the Dominion championship series against Mimico-Brampton will be a best-of-three

In quest of the historic Mann Cup they last held in 1937 by beating Orillia Terriers and won last year by St. Catharines Athletics of Ontario, the Salmonbellies planned to feature the same wide-open attack against Mimmico-Brampton as that which swept Quebec's champion Lachine-ville St. Pierre into the discard in straight games.

The series against Mimico-Brampton will be a best-of-trree affair with the first game set for Maple Leafe Gardens Wednesday night.

Salmonbellies cleared the path for their next step along the play-off trail by handing Lachine a 19-8 lacing here last night to add to Friday's 18-4 verdict.

The first period was almost even, Salmonbellies scoring five to Lachine's four, but in the second frame the New Westminster crew shot ahead 12-5. Though they let up in the third frame to permit a 3-1 count for Lachine, the coast players banged home seven goals in the final frame to fashion their 19-8 victory.

The Douglas family which took charge of scoring in the first game with four goals and an assist apiece again paced Salmonbellies. Jim Douglas came up with four goals and an assist as did Wilkes. Bryant, Raitt and Mort Davy each got two goals, while other New Westminster tallies were divided among Art Pruden, Ed Downey and Blackie Black.

Heading Lachine's scoring parade was Armand Bourdon with three goals and Frank Eddolls with two. Eddolls, former member of Toronto Maple Leafs Hockey Club, was making his first appearance in the series, obtaining leave from air force duties to get into play. Other Lachine goals were scored by Rene Couture, "Co" Blanchard and policeman Eddie Greene.

BERT PATCH WINS FREE-FOR-ALL AT PICTON FAIR

Picton, Oct. 5—Bert Patch, owned by E. Wilson, Mona Mills, and driver by Sted Craig of Kingston, made the fastest time in the horse races held in connection with Picton Fair on Saturday. His mark of 2.13 was five seconds short of a new track record for which T. W. Kinney had offered $75. Bert Patch was chased to the wire in each heat by the Kingston horse, Lastic Gratton, owned by Aylesworth and Hillock and driven by the latter.

Miss Marge Axe, owned and driven by D. Downson of Port Perry won the 2.20 class in straight heats. The 2.27 class proved the feature race with nine starters, Downson drove C. W. Hodgins' Addie Grattan to win in all heats while a local horse gave him the best opposition.

Several trophies were presented. the W. J. Carter Memorial trophy in the 2.27 class to C. W. Hodgins, the Royal Hotel trophy to D. Downson and the George Kingsley Memorial Cup to E. Wilson. Mayor McKibbon donated an award to the driver making the fastest time in each race. These were presented by George J. Tustin, M.P., and Charles Kingsley.

The last heat of the 2.27 class was marked by a spill which luckily did not seriously injure drivers or horses. Driven by Hillock, Beth Harvester fell on the first turn. Herb Payne, driving Doris West, was thrown when his sulky caught on that of Hillock's, while two other drivers were unseated. Three horses completed the mile without drivers who were also thrown. Only three finished.

In a named race, Ernest Thompson drove Shirley to three straight wins; C. Pyne's Jimmie K was 2-3-2 while Ralph Stone's Miss Carson, driven by Payne, was 3-2-3.

Sports Roundup

(By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.)
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 5. (AP)—In the middle of the Yanks' big inning Sunday the wind finally unfurled a big banner that had been draped disconsolately around the flagpole. . . . It said "New York Yankees, World Champions 1941" . . .There's your story of the series. . .The Yanks still are good, but they're not the irresistible Yanks of a year ago, and the Cards are a livelier, more dangerous club than the Dodgers were last fall. . .Those worries about getting back to St. Louis, if necessary, seems to have faded out. Somehow, the Clubs found room for all hands on a train tonight.

Serious Stuff

Maybe Mr. Thomas' apt observation (see above) explains why we didn't enjoy yesterday's game. . .

The largest crowd in world series history was there and you couldn't tell from the noise which was the home team. . . Red Rolfe did almost as much hollering as the fans in the first few innings. From the way he kept gabbing at the umps and his teammates, he must have been practising for that Yale coaching job . . Did you know this year was the first time the Yanks have lost a series game in which they outhit the opposition since way back in 1923?

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Hurricane"

Samuel Goldwyn's long-awaited film version of "The Hurricane," the famous novel from the typewriters of Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, who wrote "Mutiny on the Bounty," arrived at the Capitol Theatre Sunday midnight and proved well worth waiting for.

The high point of the picture is, of course, the amazing spectacle which gives the story its climax and its name, but the film does not depend upon this alone for its effectiveness. It has tender romance, a picturesque setting, powerful drama —in fact, every element of great motion picture entertainment.

"The Hurricane" introduces an important new star in Jon Hall, the handsome young man of the magnificent physique, whom Goldwyn selected over leading Hollywood names to play Terangi, the native hero of the story.

Dorothy Lamour, who made her screen debut a year or so ago as the native heroine of "The Jungle Princess," appears opposite him as the South Sea belle, Marama, and also scores a triumph in a difficult role.

Goldwyn has given the film a great cast, including Mary Astor, C. Aubrey Smith, Thomas Mitchell, Raymond Massey, John Carradine and Jerome Cowan. All turn in uniformly excellent performances, and John Ford more than justifies the producer's faith in entrusting him with the direction of this important production.

"The Hurricane" offers you a magnificent entertainment with an unforgettable climax. Last night's audience felt it rated cheers—and we're sure you'll add yours when you see this great motion picture.

The Universal News of the World completes the big double feature attraction.

AT THE McCARTHY

Now at the McCarthy Theatre, Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts in the Hal Roach comedy riot, "Miss Polly," the picture that has a thousand laughs. This is on the same program with George Formby in his new gloom chaser "Keep Fit."

AT THE BELLE

"Holiday Inn"

The show we've all been reading about, with the songs we've all been hearing, has come to town.

It's Irving Berlin's "Holiday Inn", the Paramount musical dance and romance picture, which made folks very happy Saturday at the Belle theatre, because it's that kind of swell entertainment.

Starring Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire, a who-could-ask-for-anything-more song and dance combination, "Holiday Inn" sparkles with eleven new Irving Berlin hit tunes warbled by the inimitable Bing and danced to by the one and only Astaire assisted by two new dancing partners, Marjorie Reynolds and Virginia Dale.

The songs were written to fit the nation's favorite holidays, which are an integral part of the story of "Holiday Inn." Bing, who has converted his Connecticut farmhouse into an inn open only on holidays, entertains patrons with a floor show appropriate to each occasion. Some of the holidays celebrated are the Fourth of July, New Year's Eve, Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, and some of the songs which Mr. Berlin wrote especially for the picture are "White Christmas," "Be Careful It's My Heart," "You're Easy to Dance With," "Abraham" and "Song of Freedom." A couple of old Berlin favorites are included too—"Lazy" and "Easter Parade."

For the Fourth of July Celebration, Astaire does a firecracker dance which rates special rockets. It's the fastest, most exciting routine Astaire has ever originated, and for the lightning, fleet-footed Astaire, that's something!

With all its many songs and dances "Holiday Inn" has plenty of time for a tightly knit comedy romance that will have you chuckling most of the time. The story has to do with Bing's efforts to keep Fred Astaire from stealing Marjorie Reynolds from him. Fred wants Marjorie, a terrific dancer, to be his partner. Marjorie sings with Bing at his Inn and Bing wants to keep her here with him permanently—and romantically Bing, alas, loses girl in spite of nefarious machinations on his part, but relax—he wins her back in the end.

It's all great fun and grand entertainment and a definite "must" on your movie list. We salute Irving Berlin and Producer-director Mark Sandrich for a bright spot in a dark world

The Belle latest news from Home and abroad, and a cartoon comedy precede the feature attraction.

AT THE McCARTHY

George Formby

The king of comedy, George Formby, is in his best form and provides the most laugh in his latest hit, "Keep Fit" than he has ever done before. "Keep Fit" is now at the McCarthy Theatre in addition to the added comedy, "Miss Polly," one of Hollywood's most delightful treats of the season.

George is seen as an assistant to a barber at the beginning of the story. Perhaps it is because his mind is on the shop's pretty manicure girl that George is so apt to administer mouthfuls of lather to his customers and is so given to cutting chins. But it is on his afternoons "off" that the main part of the action takes place. He labours under an unmerited reputation of being a crack athlete, an illusion which is shared by his inamorato Joan. So when she wants an afternoon on the river George must take her, despite the fact that he does not know the difference between a punt and a skiff. Inexpert as a swimmer he is nevertheless called upon to rescue a stranger from drowning. Under a misapprehension he enters the local Keep Fit Contest and it is there as the raw contender on parallel bars and flying trapeze that his maladroitness furnishes a great fund of laughter which is, however, copiously added to in the closing stages of the picture when he has to fight a burly opponent for the boxing championship—and, thanks to the marvellous efficacy of a mascot, emerges triumphantly. All in all "Keep Fit" is a picture not to be missed with its wealth of clean fun, hectic excitement and novelty of situations.

Co-starring Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville, Hal Roach's new stream-lined comedy riot, "Miss Polly" is the second feature attraction now on the McCarthy Theatre screen. We guarantee you will scream laughing at this one. Many patrons have come to enjoy it a second time.

CHAPTER 31.
A CHANGE OF HEART

During those last two weeks in December Judith wanted to marry Max . . . with each of his brief, loving notes, she knew how intensely she wanted to marry him. Her work, her fine ideas of independence? She could go on with her work, of course, but independence no longer mattered. Only Max mattered, the physical, tangible Max.

She wrote to him each evening and dropped the letter in the box on her way to the office in the morning. Hers were not notes but letters into which was a facility that amazed her she poured the best of her thoughts and feelings for him . . . The trained hands of the artist turned out consistently good work. The trained hands, but not the mind, nor the heart. Only Max could reach her mind and heart now. For Max had become her whole world.

"How are Ames and Phyllis?"

And Emily looked at her and shook her brown head. "Phyllis doesn't improve as a housewife. It's Ames, darling, will you put on the coffee? Ames, empty the ash trays, dear . . . Oh, did I do something wrong on the last play? I wasn't paying attention . . . Where did I put the cigarettes, Ames'. The ones who aren't married see the mistakes in the ones who are. Phyllis seems to think that marriage is one long glorious holiday and that when you marry, you get out of doing the things you like to do and that your husband should give until it hurts. Ames is a dear. He loves having a place of his own and being host. Mixing a drink is a ritual with him. Maybe I'm wrong, Judith, but Phyllis fails to do the little things I'd like to do, the little things I'd feel were my special jobs."

Judith smiled. Then she asked, "Have you made up your mind about going home for Christmas? I wish you'd go."

"No. I'm — I'm not going home and I'm not going home with you. I'M . . ." There was no happiness in her look, no enthusiasm in her voice. "I'm going to meet Tim's family on Christmas night. It's their annual open-house and the little girl from the prairies is going to see how the fashionable world lives.

"Tim doesn't understand. He takes it all for granted. So on Christmas night I'm going to see the kind of life they'll bring him back to when they think he's played around enough with girls like me. I'm waiting for the end. It's like sitting on a powder keg. I hope I can take it."

Seeing the letter addressed to Max, she smiled rather sadly. "Another letter? Are you sure of him?"

"Yes, and of myself. I want to marry him, Emily. I've known it since he left and missing him is one long continuous ache. So a man becomes all-important and I'll have to take back my very modern theories on the emancipated woman. Men have given us a vote, an education, jobs and the privilege of sitting in a bar, but they haven't changed our natures. I was thinking of that before you came in. A woman is a deep, intuitive being who looks, sometimes without being aware of looking, for a man to be all-important. Her very nature decides for her. Her heart, her body and not her mind. Even if she has a superior mind, it can't win against her body and her heart."

Emily looked at her a moment before she said, "But men are not like that. Their minds, their better judgments, rule them in most cases. They're less emotional so that their minds can rule them. How many men have given security and family for love? Not many. A lot of women have and more would if men were willing to make the sacrifice . . . I'm so tired!"

x x

The lawn before the Barth home in Clinton had been raked clean of leaves and now small patches of snow covered the brown barrenness. Seeing Max's gift on her arm, a charm bacelet, Judith pressed her finger to the bell late that Christmas Eve, and when the door opened she was greeted by shouts of Harriet's little boys and her mother's beaming face.

If she and Max were married, he would be with her, she thought, pressing her cold face against her mother's warm one as the little boys tugged at her coat. But Max here . . . It seemed foreign to visualize the suave Max in this domestic setting. Would he be bored or amused?

Walter looked up with grave brown eyes.

"Santa Claus is coming tonight!"

"Not if you and Bill don't go to bed," Mrs. Barth said. "They're so excited, Judith. Take off your things, dear. Your father and Larry and Harriet have gone out to do some last-minute shopping for the tree."

Not ever before had Judith dropped to her knees to embrace her nephews. But something in their upturned faces drew her and she put her arms around them, kissing their flushed cheeks. Sons . . . . Harriet's sons . . . Ma's sons? A miniature Max. She felt suddenly as though she were going to cry.

Mrs. Barth, said, "Now my two darlings are going to bed."

When Judith glanced somewhat guiltily at her mother, Mrs. Barth smiled as though she understood.

Not until Bessie, the aroma of her pieces permeating the house, had gone and the tree had been trimmed did the family settle down to conversation.

It was then that Harriet, her shoes kicked from her aching feet, her face shining, noticed the bracelet on her sister's arm.

"Isn't this new?"

Larry, Harriet's husband, grinned, but there was something bitter in that grin. "I've been telling you she's holding out on us."

Judith touched Max's gift lovingly, she was thinking of the wallet she had sent him.

"Yes, it is new. From a friend in New York." From Max, my dearest love. Where are you tonight? Sitting opposite Mr. So-and-So with a Scotch and soda and thinking of me, wanting me? She said, "from the most interesting man I've ever known."

They were all looking at her as if they were sadly aware that she lived in a world they could not share and one in which their love could not penetrate. She felt a mocking resentment in the expression on Larry's face and she felt suddenly as if she had hurt her parents. They were jealous of her! Anger, rather than the great fire roaring up the fireplace, warmed her. She thought, flinging them an angry glance, you would have me like Harriet, my hair in wisps, my feet aching, my hips spreading, and wearing last year's dress! But I won't be like that!"

It was the rebellious Judith who asked coldly, "Is there anything wrong with my accepting a gift from a friend in New York?"

Larry looked at her sharply. "Nothing; but you don't have to be so damned superior about what you do away from here!"

Mrs. Barth looked shocked and grieved. "Please . . . not tonight. I'm surprised at both of you. We're all very tired." She tried to smile. "Go up to bed, Larry. Coming, Nicholas?"

Larry murmured, "I'm sorry," and left the room, following Nicholas and Isobel Barth up the steps.

"I'll be up in a minute," Harriet called. Then she turned to Judith. "Don't hold it against him please. You know how fond he is of you. It's just that—that things haven't been going too well lately at the office and all the bills coming in and everything. He knew he was going to get an increase; and I've never seen anyone so hurt because it was only two dollars a week. He wants only the best for the children and me and he can't give it to us. And then you come home and I suppose it's the comparison between the way you look and the way I look. Mother and Dad are wonderful to us, but it hurts Larry's pride that they have to help us a little. You're not married, Judith?"

"And if I'm superior, I don't know it."

"I suppose I talk too much about you to him."

Judith looked into Harriet's tired, dark eyes. "Tell me, do you love Larry as much now as you did when you married him?"

"Why, I love him more! I love him in spite of the faults and weaknesses I didn't know he had when I married him." She smiled. "I've nursed him through illnesses. I've quarrelled violently with him. I've borne two children. We've seen each other at our worst—but I love him more. You don't truly love a man, Judith, until the roots of your life are growing with his."

As she pushed back her hair, she glanced at the gaily-decorated trees and at the toys beneath it. "You see, Larry thinks I envy you. But I don't. I know more than you, Judith, I'm living more than you. It's a less gracious life than yours, but I'm still living more than you. It took me a long time to see that."

"We chose different ways. We're both doing what we set out to do." She would have told her about Max then if Harriet had not looked so tired . . .

Harriet arose, and, bending down, picked up her shoes. "Oh, I forgot! Do you remember Steve Larrabee? He's gone home for Christmas, but he'll be back tomorrow night. We'd planned to go dancing if you felt like it. Not a party, just the four of us. He's asked about you several times."

"Of course, I'd love to go."

"Larry is going to be awfully ashamed of losing his temper."

"Perhaps I'll be more ashamed if ever I discover that what he said was true."

"Nonsense. Coming up? I'll put out the tree lights."

"No. Let me. I'll be up later."

This little while was time to be with Max, to bring him close, to have him share the faded green divan with her. All your best thoughts of the person you love are never told, she said to herself, for they come to you in moments like this when you are quite alone .. Oh, Max, I'm not superior or arrogant with you! You make me feel insignificant and helpless and young. The thought of you opens every door in my mind. It took Max and Judith to make — us. We'll be married. Not the usual marriage, not Harriet's kind of marriage, but one that only we could make. And we'll have a son, a miniature you.

CANADIENS BUY GORDIE DRILLON OF MAPLE LEAFS

Right-Winger of First Line Leaves Scene of Greatest Triumphs

LEAFS GET PLAYERS

Montreal, Oct. 5—(CP)—Gordie Drillon, right-winger of Toronto Maple Leafs, has become the property of Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League in a trade involving several other players, it was announced today.

No cash was involved in the deal but it was understood Canadiens would send several young players to the Maple Leafs later. One source indicated there was no immediate time limit and said it "may be a couple of years" before the trade is completed.

Drillon, league scoring leader for the 1939-1940 season, will report to Coach Dick Irvin here next week.

Drillon, a Leaf player since 1936-37, was benched in the Stanley Cup playoffs last spring and since that time his name has been frequently linked with various N.H.L. clubs.

Tabernacle Church Congregation Honors Mr. and Mrs. Lent

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Lent were honored by the congregation of Tabernacle United Church last evening at the Fireside Hour held in the Sunday School rooms following the evening service, when they were presented with gifts as a token of the regard in which they have been held in the church during their residence in Belleville. Mr. Lent has held responsible positions in the church and has given earnest and whole-hearted support to the many activities of the congregation. Mrs. Lent's leadership in the C.G.I.T. and her valuable assistance in various church organizations have been outstanding and earned for her the high esteem of her associates.

The feelings of the congregation in regretfully saying goodbye to Mr. and Mrs. Lent who are shortly leaving to take up residence in Toronto, and appreciation of the fine service they have given the church were expressed in an address read by Mr. R. Edmondson. A purse of money was then presented to Mr. Lent by Mr. R. Goodfellow, while Mr. W. Mifflin presented roses to Mrs. Lent. Both made gracious replies referring to their happy associations in Belleville and thanking the members of the congregation for their thoughtfulness and good wishes.

Yankee Stadium Fills Rapidly

Yankee Stadium, New York, Oct. 5 (AP)—Not too sure that it would be possible to play the fifth World series game today, officials waited until 10 a.m. E.D.T. before opening the gates and permitting the rush to start for the park's 28,000 unreserved seats.

Two long lines of fans extended halfway around the big arena when the doors were unlocked, and in no time at all thousands poured into the bleachers and covered upper stands, anxious to be at what might prove the series death of the Yankees.

Leading three victories to one, St. Louis Cardinals needed to win only one more to clinch the championship and make it unnecessary to return to St. Louis for a sixth contest. Red Ruffing was scheduled to hurl for the Yankees; Johnny Beazley for the Cards.

The ground appeared to be in good playing condition.

ASKED NOT TO PILE LEAVES ON STREET

Garrison Troops Attend Special Service at Salvation Army Citadel

Despite the fact that rain fell consistently during the morning, a fine representation of garrison troops of the city turned out Sunday morning to attend Divine service at the Salvation Army Citadel here.

Headed by the band of the Salvation Army under bandmaster Wardle the parade consisting of detachments of the 34th Battery, R.C.A., Captain Sword; Argyll Light Infantry, Lieut.-Colonel A. B. Gribble, and the C.W.S.F. Captain Marion Harden, swung from the armouries through a steady drizzle shortly before 11 a.m. The pipe band of the Argyll Regiment headed its unit.

The troops were received at the Citadel by Adjutant Smith, head of the Salvation Army Corps here, who expressed his appreciation of the turnout in view of existing weather conditions

The Rev. George Bennard, author of the famous hymn, "The Old Rugged Cross" who with Miss Dahlstrom, Swedish gospel singer, is spending a week here conducting special services at the Citadel, spoke to the troops during the service. Mr. Bennard —who used the story of Abraham and Isaac as the topic of his sermon, stressed the necessity of faith in God especially during the dark days of war. Possessed of a fine pulpit personality, Mr. Bennard prefaced his address with several humorous anecdotes.

The Salvation Army band provided the musical accompaniment for the hymns while the Army choristers offered an anthem. Mr. Bennard and Miss Dahlstrom added to the musical part of the service with a delightful duet.

Due to weather conditions, the city parade originally scheduled to take place after the service was cancelled. The detachments "fell in" outside the Citadel and marched directly to the armouries where the battery and the C.W.S.F. were dismissed and the Argylls continued with a pre-arranged training schedule.

Organization for Victory Loan Drive Begins With J. Barclay Directing

Organization of the various committees for the forthcoming Victory Loan Campaign in Belleville which gets under way, Oct. 19, is rapidly nearing completion.

Chairman of the Committee here is Mr. James Barclay, who is gathering an efficient organisation under his supervision. Messrs. Ted Woolley, Don Lee, Douglas Mitchell, Toronto, and Clark Kinnear, Belleville, provincial organizers are already here and are busy preparing plans for the canvass of the city and district under various committee chairmen.

Headquarters of the Victory Loan Committee here have been established in the former quarters of the Deacon Brothers Ltd., on Front Street. Here Secretary Mrs. P. Spencer has a battery of stenographers under her supervision getting out the vast amount of clerical work which must be completed prior to the official opening of the campaign.

While no quota for the city and Hastings County has been officially released as yet, it is believed it will be substantially increased over that of the last campaign, $2,100,000. The quota for the Dominion is set at 750 millions of dollars."

Advertising, publicity and other committees are in the process of appointment and general organization is expected to be completed within a few days.

Strolling Along River Bank Man Is Shot in Leg

The discharging of .22 calibre rifles in an area between Belleville and Cannifton along the banks of the Moira River, is being thoroughly probed by Provincial Police. Not only have residents of that area repeatedly complained about this practice, but Thomas Orr, Cannifton Road, was shot in the right leg on Saturday afternoon while strolling along the river bank near his home.

Mr. Orr was removed to the Belleville General Hospital where a .22 calibre bullet was removed from the rear fleshy part of his leg. Provincial Constable C. G. Hayes investigated the matter, but failed to find the person responsible for the discharging of the gun. The injured man was attended by Dr. M. E. Branscombe.

According to Mr. Orr he observed a boy on the west side of the river carrying a rifle. Later he heard a shot and felt a sting in his right leg, immediately above the ankle bone. Investigations proved he had been hit and although he shouted to the youth on the opposite side of the river for assistance, the lad disappeared in the nearby brush.

Constable Hayes revealed today that other complaints regarding the discharging of small calibre fire arms by juveniles in that sector have been received from farmers, who claim pellets have come close to striking them while in the fields. Recently a beehive was riddled with .22 calibre bullets south of Cannifton. In the event juveniles are apprehended discharging small calibre firearms in that sector the parents will be held responsible for any damage, Provincial Police added in warning today. Mr. Orr returned to his home after the pellet had been removed at the hospital.

Air Marshal Bishop Visits Training Units

By LOUIS V. HUNTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

With the R.C.A.F., Somewhere in England, Oct. 5 —(CP Cable)—Air Marshal W. A. Bishop, V.C., spent the weekend visiting officers training units where he met many recently-arrived Canadian fliers who are putting finishing touches to their training before joining battle with the Nazis.

Instructors at many stations visited by the R.C.A.F.'s director of recruiting were Canadians who have completed many hours of operational duties. These included PO. C. D. Jane of Thorold, Ont.

"Guess you're finding your work here pretty dull," the ace of the First Great War told these new aces, "and no doubt you're wanting to get back to operational work. But remember you're doing important work and every man in Canada is tearing his hair to get over to Britain and would give everything to change places with you."

Early Monday morning Thos. Thorne, city dog catcher, was called to Albert St., where a dog was causing disturbances and also reported to be destroying property. The owner of the dog was ascertained and warned either to keep the animal secured at night or dispose of it.

City police apprehended a truck driver driving a truck while his chauffeur's licence is said to have been suspended. Charges were preferred today, while Chief W. R. Probert added that the owner of the truck concerned also stood possibilities of facing H. T. A. charges.

Hedge Damaged

W. J. Sharpe, 66 Highland Ave., reported that a hedge bordering his property was being damaged by neighbours. The matter being somewhat of a domestic nature only, warnings were issued by police on this occasion.

Several inebriates were apprehended in the city over the weekend and all will appear in police court next Friday.

R. C. N. Seamen Relax After Hunting Subs By Racing Whalers with Oar and Sail

By Sub-Lieut. Peter MacRitchie, R.C.N.V.R.

An Eastern Atlantic Port—Whaler racing is the major sport at this Eastern Atlantic Naval Base. Into this port come the destroyers and corvettes, their crews, after days of stalking U-boats along Atlantic convoy lanes, eager to participate in the arduous rowing contests.

Especially are they anxious to "pull" against the crews of depot ships. And so, after a ship berths at the jetty, a signal is flashed. The challenge is flung......a challenge that is taken up quickly......and in a trice you hear the cry: "start the falls," and then "lower away."

Oarsmen in Rhythm

Away go the whalers from their davits, each of them manned by six bronzed Navymen stripped to the waist. The boats sheer away from the warships. They move to the starting point, with the oarsmen in perfect rhythm. A rifle shot cracks out and the whaler race is under way.

Rivalry is so great that the ratings spend their evenings perfecting their stroke. Even some of the men newly back from sea sacrifice their shore leave in order to practice.

The officers have entered into the spirit of the thing with great zest and some highly exciting races have taken place between the depot ship's whaler, manned by officers of the Royal Navy and of the accommodation ship, whose crew comprises officers of the Royal Canadian Navy. These two crews are evenly matched and the present standing shows they have won an equal number of heats over the mile course.

Even the officers of a Canadian regiment are to be seen stroking their way through the water in a borrowed whaler. These officers, perhaps with an eye to future commando operations, are gradually "getting the hang" of the navy way. On a recent Saturday afternoon the army officers participated in a race with the depot and accommodation ship crews, and, while they finished far up the course, they showed that with some coaching they might make it interesting for their navy rivals at some future date.

Challenge by Canadians

Two famous Canadian destroyers put into port the other day. The word went out that they had matched their whaler crews against those of the depot ship and of an R.N. destroyer. The race was set for noon of the following day and, at the appointed hour, hundreds of sailors lined the rails of the ships in harbor to watch the contest, while the cheering sections from the competing ships crowded in a variety of harbor craft and followed their factories to the starting point.

Depot Boys Win

It was a thrill-packed tussle. One of the Canadian sixes held the edge when half of the course had been traversed, but the depot boys, in razor-edge trim, were biding their time, and at the signal from the coxswain forged to the front and won going away. The Canadian crews were second and third and the R.N. sextet took up the rear.

One of the Canadian crews carried two Toronto lads, former paddlers at the Parkdale Canoe Club. Another came from Saskatoon, a tall husky, 210-pound farm boy, turned stoker, who had never handled an oar until he joined the R.C.N.V.R. two years ago. The other three members including the coxswain were R.C.N. men with a world of experience. The other Canadian destroyer crew consisted of two French-Canadians from the Gaspe Peninsula, both stout oarsmen; a former truck driver from St. Catharines, Ontario; an ex-Winnipeg policeman; a hardrock miner from Timmins, Ontario, and an R.C.N. coxswain from Vancouver.

Whaler racing is by no means the easiest form of relaxation, but it provides probably the best means of keeping the men aboard ship in good physical shape. Ratings coming ashore in this port indulge mostly in softball and soccer, and the men of the Royal Navy are becoming adept at softball, even to the extent of outscoring some of the Canadian corvette crews. But it is in whaler racing that rivalry reaches its peak.

When a crew meets its match at rowing a second challenge is sometimes sent across, this time for a race between whalers under sail. The challenge ship usually has an "ace" up its sleeve. Perhaps in its crew of six—five and a coxswain—are one or two old seadogs, men skilled in the art of sailing. Then the tables are turned.

The average whaler is 27 feet long, clinker built and constructed of wych or sand elm in England. For sailing purposes they are yawl rigged and fitted with a drop keel. In "pulling" races three of the oarsmen pull on the starboard side and two on the port, with the coxswain at the rudder. The same number of men occupy the boat while under sail.

Race In Cutters

Sometimes the cutter is used for racing purposes. It carries a crew of 13 including the coxswain and is 32 feet long. She carries a flat or square stern, unlike the whaler whose after lines are sharp.

It is an old saying in the navy that a ship is known by her boats. That is why whaler crews carry the credit of their ships with them and strive to uphold it in competition. And, anyway, whaler racing affords great exercise and the air over these waters is invigorating. That is why Jack Tar in this Eastern Atlantic port is anything but a dull boy.

A WHALEBOAT CREW PULLS TO VICTORY

"Don't ease up; they're coming on again!" cries the coxswain as his crew of officers, thinking they have the race well in hand have relaxed a bit. Their opponents, a crew from an R.C.N. destroyer, were beaten a length "for all the money" in a race between whaler boats.

Cotton Marches to War on Many Fronts

Textiles Vital at War and at Home

The great part the cotton textile industry is playing in the nation's war effort is measured in millions of yards of cloth, millions of pounds of yarns, and staggering quantities of textile items.

Canada's cotton industry was at war even before the nation. In the Spring of 1939 orders were received from the Biritsh government. Since then each passing week has witnessed an increase in production for direct or indirect war purposes, until today more than 70 per cent of its total capacity is devoted to war orders or essential production.

Cotton's part in the fighting of this war is a gigantic one. Not only does it form the basis for a great part of the work of clothing and sheltering the troops —— one Canadian company alone has produced and delivered 26 million yards of uniform fabric — but it has kept pace with the science and mechanization of modern warfare, fitting itself into countless useful spots to reinforce the general plan of battle.

Cottons "Skins" For Plans

Cotton is found in the war planes, as aircraft fabric. Of these tough fabrics, now used to replace old fashioned linen, million of yards go to make up the entire "skins" of both fuselage and wings on the trainer models and coastal patrol craft. Other huge shipments are put to work in the front line fighting planes where lightness of weight, low cost, and ease of construction and repair make it invaluable for small parts. The air force finds it useful for tow-targets on which young Commonwealth Air Training Plan students learn the rudiments of air fighting.

Cotton serves in parachutes too, not in the "umbrella" section, but in the tough harness which supports the bailed-out pilot or action-bound paratrooper Canadian cotton mills, called upon by government to produce a yarn for this purpose—another new task for cotton—found a way to make even stronger material than the specifications demanded.

These contributions by the cotton industry have been no hit-and-miss affair. They have resulted from long hours spent in the laboratory by technical experts working closely with the Department of Munitions and Supply and the National Research Council, From this experimentation has grown the discovery which keeps employees in a Quebec province textile mill working to turn out a new cloth material developed for use in the gas masks.

Camouflage cloth is another scientific development of modern war. It is a lawn type of fabric made from the finest combed Egyptian cotton, and singed to remove proturberances. Upon this is printed a technically designed camouflage pattern. It is then treated chemically to make it gas resistant. Made into loose fitting garments, it is light and flexible for action against the enemy under the most trying battle conditions, those of the gas attack. One mill in Canada has already turned out close to 6.5 million yards of this material, some of it camouflageed, some plain.

Scientific Problem

Then there are powder bags, those simple little cloth containers which hold the charge for both land and naval guns. Behind their apparent simplicity is one of the big scientific problems of warfare, for these bags must burn with the explosion of the charge, and must burn as completely as possible so that there is no hot ash left to explode the next charge prematurely. There must be no residue to clog the breech and interfere with the action of the gun. Silk waste was found to fit these rigid requirements, and in some types of shells, the finest of Egyptian cotton may be used.

Conceals Gun Outline

Mechanization of the army brings another job for the cotton industry. Special cord fabrics are required in the tires of the mechanized units' trucks, patrol cars, motorcycles, and other rolling stock, and 11 million pounds of this yarn have been produced by one mill in Quebec province since the outbreak of war. The rolling trucks of the modern army need tarpaulin covers and the guns of the artillery must be protected against the weather, so the same mill turns out half a million tarpaulin covers per year.

Here, too, are made the huge camouflage nets to hide ground artillery units. Weather-proofed and dyed in musty green and brown these nets are mounted on posts and flecked with twigs, branches, or twisted strips of cloth in order to throw a confusing shadow pattern on the ground, concealing the identifiable outline of a gun and crew from planes overhead. Some 35,000 of these nets have been made here.

Then there are the unspectacular items—unspectacular but essential. These are ducks for tents, and bandoliers and uniform linings and pockets, drills for shirtings, ground sheets and sheetings, all of which are manufactured by the millions of yards. There are seamen's oilskin coats, blankets and hammocks, airmen's holdalls, cartridge carriers, sling for rifles and machine guns, revolver holsters, and even the common threads used to stitch the tough army boots.

For United Nations

The deliveries are widespread too, The cotton mills of the Dominion serve our own fighting forces and those of the United Nations in Britain, India, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

In addition to this direct war work the cotton industry is straining every effort to meet extraordinary demands for textiles from other war producers. The regular flow of civilian cotton goods, which plays so great a part in the daily life of any average citizen, is restricted as little as possible without curtailing war production. Cotton is fighting this war at home and overseas.

THEY MAKE 10,000 YARDS OF AIRCRAFT FABRIC WEEKLY

Many an R.C.A.F. fighting plane and bomber is carrying into battle the cotton fabric turned out by these girls and their fellow workers in a Quebec textile factory. The plant turns out 10,000 yards a week. Their product is used for gas mask cloth as well, and many other war materials. The spools of cotton hanging on the warping machine (LEFT) make a pretty design, but they are part of a much larger design to defeat Hitler. Ends of threads from each of these spools is drawn together in manufacturing the fabrics. The young French-Canadian girl in other photo is "drawing in ends".

Civilians Asked To Support Army

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP).—Prime Minister Mackenzie King last night appealed to Canadians, "civilians on the home front", to support with all their power "our fighting men and women, wherever they serve."

Mr. King's speech was prepared for delivery over the national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on the program "Comrades In Arms", which was inaugurated last night.

The prime minister spoke briefly and made reference to the award of honors to Dieppe veterans announced Friday. He said that Lt.-Col. Cecil Merritt of Vancouver, who was awarded a Victoria Cross, was but expressing in action the spirit of Canada's fighting forces.

He forecast that from now on "we shall all increasingly experience anxious hours of hopes and fears," and he urged Canadians at home to make sure that no failure on their part denied the fighting forces a single need.

"From now on we shall all increasingly experience anxious hours of hopes and fears," Mr. King continued. "I ask you, my fellow-Canadians, who are civilians on the home front, to support with all your power, our fighting men and women wherever they serve. I ask you to make sure that no failure of ours denies to them a single need.

"Tonight, out upon the high seas, our Canadian sailors are carrying on their ceaseless tasks . . . our soldiers, steeled with stern resolution, are impatiently awaiting the opportunity to inflict a mortal wound upon the enemy. Our airmen are destroying his numbers and his resources from the skies on many lands.

Tremendous Air Conflicts on Tap For Winter Drive

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

British expectation of a winter shift of Nazi air power from Russia against the United Kingdom or to the Egyptian front or both seems well founded, although the date for it is not entirely in Hitler's control.

By the wording as well as the implications of his address to the Berlin relief rally he has set the general contour of a winter holding front in Southern Russia. Even more definitely "General Winter", as Hitler dubbed the advancing Russian season, sets the time for a German halt in Northern Russia Hitler admitted that. He has learned a profound respet for Russian winters.

Better Prepared

With a Nazi halt on a winter front in Russia, there is every reason to suppose that much of the air force now vital to the active campaign there can be spared. It was primarily lack of adequate air support for the Axis forces in Egypt that averted a siege of Alexandria. It is obviously inability to spare the planes from Russia that has hampered German defence in the west against British mass bombing. German return bombing has been scarcely more than a token affair.

Against that background Hitler's threat to return British bomb attacks in the kind, presumably this winter, cannot be taken lightly. But Britain is far better prepared now both to defend herself and to strike back.

That will help British morale, a morale that never wavered under far worse conditions. The tight little island will have ever-increasing American help as well as its own seasoned and still expanding air forces. This foreshadows the most tremendous air conflict of the war yet to come in the west perhaps within weeks, unless Nazi strategists turn to the Egyptian front instead.

Must Strike First

There is expectation of that voiced in London. Nazi air power released from the Russian front and massed to support Rommel's African Corps in a new drive for Alexandria would be a tremendous threat. The presence of Rommel in Berlin for the Hitler speech and the attention paid him by Hitler hints at some such development.

The obvious Allied answer is to strike first in Egypt. The Allied effort to build up adequate striking power in the Middle East has been geared up, with every indication that the odds in men and equipment are with the Allies on that front.

Despite Churchill admonitions, speculative stories as to second-front possibilities of the near future come from Britain which play the Egyptian theatre as a favorite. There seem to have been no orders to British censors to blue-pencil them.

On what authority they are based is not revealed; but with indications of an early Nazi winter halt in Russia from Hitler himself, there seems urgent reason for the Allies to take the initiative in a big way in Egypt. The defeat of Rommel's recent flanking thrust at Alexandria invited it. Every military axiom dictates an offensive as the best defence.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself behind his cigar, and ma said, Do you know what the trouble is with the Germans, William?

Do they just have one trouble? pop said, and ma said, They just have one besetting outstanding one, and that's their unfounded superiority complex. If a German is high enough to be a dictator, he wants to rule the whole world, and if he's low enough to be a mere nobody he's not satisfied unless his own family surrounds him with an atmosphere of fear and trembling as he tramps around his own home clicking his iron heel at every opportunity, she said.

By gollies that must be the psychological explanation for the Anvil Chorus being the most popular tune among German men, it's just a glorification of heel, clicks, pop said, and ma said, They're just naturally despotic and tyrannical by nature, it's their curse and it will probably be their downfall.

Well, it cant happen here, the men in this country are notoriously tied to their wives apron strings, pop said, and ma said, That's why they fondly boast, but it's very easy to fall into insidious habits that may grow all out of proportion. So if you want to be quite sure of your ground, William, you'd better let me choose the movie tonight, because you insisted on choosing the last two and they both reeked with horses and shooting and I dont know what all to bolster up a man's superior ego, she said.

It's a womans world, in other words a gigantic trap for suspecting but helpless men, pop said. Pick your picture, he said.

STALINGRAD DEFENDERS HOLD AGAINST NAZI FURY

Fight for Salient Opens With Heavy Attack by Foe

Prisoners Report Officers Fear Further Delays In Taking City

COLD WEATHER NEARS

By EDDY GILMORE
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Oct. 6 — (AP) — Defenders of Stalingrad were reported holding firm today against three Nazi divisions in a flame-laced battle for a workers' settlement and Red Army troops fighting for relief of the garrison stabbed anew into the German left flank.

German artillery and mortar barrages heralded the opening of a series of attacks by the three divisions — totalling from 30,000 to 45,000 men. Swarms of dive-bombers and 100 tanks roared into the fight for the salient. A Pravda dispatch said the flames were visible to Russian fighters in sectors many miles away.

Prisoners told Red Army commanders that their officers feared to delay any further in their overdue plans to take the city, now in its 43rd day of siege. Colder nights have arrived on the Stalingrad front.

22 Attacks Repulsed

At one place the Germans hurled 22 attacks, but all were repulsed, the Communist Party newspaper said.

German losses in the last 24 hours have been huge and the enemy failed to advance on any front, it was declared.

The army newspaper Red Star said:—

"Neither tanks, aviation nor tommy-gunners can shake the decision of our fighters and commanders to protect the Volga River stronghold and repulse the German robbers from the walls of the glorious city."

Fierce street fighting persisted.

German captives were quoted as saying that, as troops begin to shiver in the cooler temperatures, they become less satisfied with their progress.

"The Germans hurry," declared the government newspaper Izvestia. "They see time passing. They fear delay. They are fiercely pushing forward."

Premier Stalin's warning that the city's defenders were not to take one step backward was credited with helping to stiffen their resistance.

10,000-Ton Transport Sunk

Russian bombers stationed at Baltic bases were declared to have destroyed seven Junkers dive-bombers and damaged 12 others in a raid on a German airdrome. The communique said three other Nazi planes were shot down in aerial fights.

Red naval warships were credited with sinking a 10,000-ton Axis transport in the Baltic Sea, where they announced destruction of three last week.

There was nothing in Soviet dispatches from Stalingrad to indicate that Russian forces there were not ready to meet any and all assaults of the reinforced Axis divisions, but one dispatch did say the Germans were superior in number.

Russians indicated that about 2,000 Germans had been killed in renewed fighting for the workers' settlement, still in Soviet hands despite a heavy pounding.

The Nazi army northwest of Stalingrad resorted successfully to an Indian fighting trick to block one of a series or sharp Soviet attacks, dispatches said.

As the Russian troops bore down upon Nazi positions a sea of fire suddenly appeared before them, Red Star said.

Enemy Fires Dry Grass

The Germans had poured fuel over the dry steppe grass. The dispatch said the fire gave them time to regroup and they then repulsed the Russians.

German use of Red army uniforms as disguises was reported again also, this time from the Mozdok front. Red Star said a party of Nazi soldiers in Soviet garb, discovered attempting to outflank a Russian hill position, was mowed down to the last man by machine-gun fire.

Izvestia said German parachutists landed in the high Caucasian passes and the local mountaineers were helping the Red army men to deal with them.

At one place the Russians were said to have come upon a staff headquarters and captured both officers and soldiers.

From the Voronezh front on the Upper Don came a Red Star dispatch which declared the Russians had attacked a German-held settlement and fortified hill from three sides, driving into the village, taking the hill and moving more than a mile into the fortified depth.

Leaders of Communist Party in Canada Given 'Conditional Release'

Ottawa, Oct. 6. (CP) —Justice Minister St. Laurent has ordered the "conditional release" from custody of Tim Buck, secretary of the Communist Party of Canada, and 16 other persons against whom detention orders were issued in June 1940, and who surrendered to police a few days ago.

This information was made public through release to the press of a telegram sent by the Justice Minister to Premier Hepburn of Ontario.

The Premier had sent telegrams to Mr. St. Laurent and Prime Minister Mackenzie King appealing for release of Buck and his associates, and for implementations of the recommendations of a special parliamentary committee that the ban on the Communist Party be lifted.

Mr. St. Laurent's telegram to Mr. Hepburn made no mention of any action in regard to the Communist Party ban, and did not say what conditions were being imposed on the group which were to be released.

$30,000 Fire In Prison Camp

Calgary, Oct. 6. (CP)—Damage unofficially estimated at $30,000 was done last night in a spectacular blaze which razed the main mess hall at a new prisoner-of-war camp somewhere in Southern Alberta and threatened to set the whole $1,750,000 establishment ablaze. There were no prisoners in the camp.

The fire of unknown origin broke out at 10.30 p.m. M.D.T. (12.30 a.m. E.D.T. Tuesday) and was so far advanced in the frame structure by the time firemen from a nearby centre reached the location that chemical extinguishers were useless. It was reported no supply of water was available to fight the blaze.

The fireman however, stood guard over other buildings in the camp compound, stamping out menacing sparks.

NOT A SHORT-ORDER HOUSE

Buffalo, N.Y., Oct. 6—(AP) — A woman, walking into the Municipal Cafeteria (traffic) Court, asked "Is this cafeteria?" and was told it was. "Well," she said, "I'll have a roast-beef sandwich." Clerks explained the Cafeteria Court took fines from motorists and wasn't a short-order house.

SHORTAGE OF BASKETS

Stratford, Ont., Oct. 6 — (CP) — A shortage of baskets to hold the grape crop in the Niagara district resulted in a call to outside municipalities for assistance. About 1,000 fruit baskets were collected in Saturday's salvage campaign here.

Germans Speculate on Possibility Of Defeat Since Goering's Speech

Berne, Oct. 6 (AP).—The address of Reichsmarshal Herman Goering in Berlin Sunday made a deep impression on the German people, causing them to speculate on the possibility of defeat, it is reported by Berlin correspondents of Swiss newspapers.

The word defeat "strikes terror in the hearts of the German people", the correspondent of the Basler National Zeitung wrote. Goering used the word, previously avoided in utterances of an official character, in picturing what would happen to Germany as a defeated nation.

"One felt that the persons who heard him no longer believed the enemy would make a distinction between the German government and the people in the event of defeat," the dispatch said. Goering's brief speculation on what loss of the war would mean was the most discussed portion of the address, the correspondent added.

Der Bund of Berne, commenting on Goering's statement that occupied countries might have to go hungry to feed Germany this winter, said this might arouse more opposition in countries being appealed to by Germany to co-operate in establishing "European solidarity".

Virginio Gayda, writing in the Giornale d'Italia, observed that no one in Italy should "blind himself to the fact that the advantageous position of the axis in the east has been cancelled partially by the fact that behind the Russians is untouched country, while behind the axis troops are thousands of kilometres of land destroyed by the enemy."

HOUSE WILL GIVE NO STATEMENT ON STALIN LETTER

Churchill Says Statement is Not Called For at the Present Time

ANSWERS QUESTIONS

London, Oct. 6 — (CP) — Prime Minister Churchill declined today to discuss Britain's war relations with Russia, urging the House of Commons "not to press these matters unduly," after several members had brought up Joseph Stalin's letter to Henry C. Cassidy, Chief of the Associated Press Moscow Bureau, calling on the Allies to "fulfill their obligations fully and on time."

One questioner, prodding the Prime Minister for a discussion of both political and military aspects, suggested that any misunderstanding between Britain and Russia might have evil consequences on British war production.

Mr. Churchill, however, declined to speak extemporaneously, insisting he had nothing to add "to the carefully-weighed statement I have made on this matter."

This referred specifically to an inquiry on how closely Anglo-Russian staff matters were integrated, and the Prime Minister added he "would strongly advise the House not to press these matters unduly at a period which is certainly significant."

Father Not Held After Story Told

Toronto, Oct. 6 — (CP) — Gerald Pare, French-Canadian from Timmins, Ont., was located by police early today in a downtown Toronto rooming house and admitted he left his two-year-old son at the home of Mrs. Edith Cheskey of Toronto.

Police, after investigating the young father's story, did not hold him but instructed him to report today to the police station. The youngster, meanwhile, is being cared for in the infants' home.

Pare told police he and his wife arrived in Toronto a week ago. He was up against it, being out of work and without money. He was unable to obtain lodgings, he said, where a baby would be admitted.

For that reason, he said, he took the child to the home of Mrs. Cheskey and arranged to have the child boarded for one week. When he failed to put in an appearance yesterday, the woman became alarmed and called the police.

Pare said he had no intention of deserting the baby but wanted to have it provided for until such time as he could find a place where he, his wife and child could live.

American Workers Found Willing To Do More Than Their Share Says Roosevelt

Toronto, Oct. 6 (CP).—President Roosevelt told the American Federation of Labor convention in a message sent the gathering here today that the production record of American workers was "splendid".

"Everywhere during my recent inspection of war activity I found the workers doing all that was laid out for them and more," Mr. Roosevelt said. "At every turn they gave assurance that they can take whatever it takes to win this war. They are walking up to it as their duty and part in the war. They are proud of it."

The President acknowledged an invitation to attend the convention and expressed regret that the press of war affairs prevented his acceptance.

President William Green of the Federation said in reply that the A.F.L. "will respond to any request the President may make and every order which he may issue as commander-in-chief of the army and navy. We regard him as the commander of the army of production as much as he is the commander of the armed forces of the nation.

"Please note," Green added, "he stated that he found on his trip, not that he was informed, that the service of the workers of our country was splendid. That strikes me very deeply, as I know it strikes you."

NORWAY QUISLING PLANS TO STAMP OUT SABOTAGE

State of Emergency Proclaimed in Province of Trondheim

CURFEW IMPOSED

London, Oct. 6 — (CP) — The Vichy radio broadcast a report today that a state of emergency was proclaimed at 5 a.m. today throughout the province of Trondheim, Norway, because of sabotage.

The German commissar, Josef Terboven, was quoted by the radio as asserting the "many acts of sabotage committed in Trondheim were possible only because the people broke the law forbidding help to saboteurs."

Trondheim is an important port about 200 miles south of the Arctic Circle.

The Germans had compelled thousands of Norwegians and Danes to work on harbor installations, air fields and coastal defences in Trondheim province under a "work-or-starve edict." There have been many reports of sabotage there and the present measure apparently followed a new outbreak.

Curfew Imposed

The Vichy radio said a curfew was imposed on all Norwegians between 8 p.m. and 5 a.m. and public buildings, restaurants and places of entertainment were ordered closed daily at 7 p.m. Public assemblies were forbidden.

Norwegians in London were unable to confirm the order, but they said it had been expected because "Trondheim has been an area of wide unrest with repeated fights between workers and German guards and numerous arrests for sabotage."

"There have been many fires recently in buildings occupied by German officials and one large food dump was destroyed," these sources said.

It was the second state of emergency proclaimed in Norway. A similar measure was imposed in Oslo in September, 1941, after a series of fires and sabotage. More than 1,000 persons were arrested then and two Norwegians were executed. Twelve others were sentenced to life imprisonment.

Britain Produces Superior Tank

London, Oct. 6—(CP)—Sir James Grigg, War Secretary, said today that Britain has produced a new tank which a member of parliament said "is superior in performance to any other tank in use by another belligerent."

The description of the tank's quality was given by R. R. Stokes who asked the War Secretary the name of the new weapon.

A lineal descendant of the Churchill tank, it now is called simply "A27 (M)."

Sir James gave no details about the performance or armament of the tank and declined to comment on the suggestion of Emanuel Shinwell, Labor, that "serious defects were discovered in the Churchill tanks" in the August raid on Dieppe.

Prime Minister Churchill himself said last week they performed "not without distinction."

FARM MACHINERY ACROSS CANADA TO BE RATIONED

Farmers Must File Applications of Essentiality to Get New Machinery

ORDER EFFECTIVE NOW

Ottawa, Oct. 6 (CP).—Canadian farmers, under regulations announced by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, must, effective today, file applications of essentiality with their dealers and implement companies before they will be permitted to receive any new farm machinery or equipment.

The rationing order follows closely the announcement from Washington that Canada's war industries will have to get along with less strategic materials, particularly steel, because of a new system of distribution and allocation now in effect in the United States. The American plan will, it is estimated, cut by 35 per cent. the strategic materials distributed not only to Canadian but to American war plants.

Under the regulations of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, its regional offices must give final approval to applications made by farmers for machinery. Applications and permits will be required for all deliveries of such equipment as from today, notwithstanding prior contracts.

The only types of new farm machinery and equipment excepted from the rationing order are attachments, repair and spare parts, tracklaying type tractors, irrigation or drainage equipment, hand tools and milk cooler refrigeration units.

First Two Coupons To Be Used Anytime

Ottawa, Oct. 6 — (CP) — The Wartime Prices and Trade Board last night announced that the first two coupons in ration books for tea, coffee and sugar may still be used by any holder who has not already used them.

Coupons one and two were originally valid in the four-week period Sept. 7-Oct. 3.

The board said coupons three and four may be turned in at any time, starting Monday, but they are intended to cover the four weeks ending Nov. 2.

Each coupon is good for the purchase of two weeks' supply.

The Board has announced that regulations relating to institutions require staff members who regularly eat two meals a day there to surrender two of every three coupons to the institution, and one of three if they regularly eat one meal per day there.

Servicemen living out of barracks and on subsistence allowances will be provided with temporary ration cards, good for 10 weeks. These cards are to be obtained from the most convenient ration office of the board, and not from the military units.

Merchants and trading post managers supplying persons in unorganized areas in which ration books are not issued are no longer required to keep individual records of persons and amounts so supplied.

JAP FOOTHOLDS IN PACIFIC AREA BECOME TRAPS

Allied Successes In The Solomon Islands, Aleutians and New Guinea Reported

LAND AT GUADALCANAL

By JOHN W. WIGGINS
Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Oct. 6 — (AP) — Fresh evidence that Japanese footholds in New Guinea, the Solomon Islands and the Aleutians are becoming traps of destruction for the invader's troops, planes and ships emerged today out of new Allied successes in the Battle of the Pacific.

On the three strategic fronts Allied and American air forces shot down 22 Japanese planes within the last week, damaged two more, blew up a supply ship, bombed a destroyer out of commission, hit two cargo ships, strafed barges and blasted enemy camps, ground forces and installations.

The costly price of Japanese activity in the Solomons was demonstrated in a navy department report yesterday. The communique, covering four days' action to Oct. 3, reported destruction of 10 enemy planes, boosting the total shot down in this war theatre to 229 to date.

Land Small Forces

Amid frequent clashes with enemy patrols, United States marines prevented any major changes in their hard-won positions on Guadalcanal but the Japanese succeeded in landing small troop reinforcements at night. Four enemy destroyers, seeking to cover a small landing at Viru Harbor, became a target for dive-bombers and torpedo planes and one warship was left "dead in the water," the navy said. There were no American losses.

In the New Guinea theatre Allied planes yesterday shot down three Japanese planes over the Buna invasion base on the Southeast coast.

In the Aleutian Islands, the Japanese also were paying heavily for footholds. American forces which Saturday announced occupation of the Andreanof group of islands between Dutch Harbor and Kiska have smashed daily with explosives and incendiaries on the enemy's Kiska camps and hangars. Five Japanese seaplanes were reported shot down. Canadian ground and air forces are aiding in defence of the territory.

Police Seize 480 Machines

52 Decorations Awarded Canadians In RCAF and RAF During September

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 6 (CP).—A record number of 52 decorations were awarded Canadians in the R.C.A.F. and R.A.F. in September, R.C.A.F. overseas headquarters announced today.

The decorations, among them awards for gallantry in the Dieppe operation and for exceptional services shown by bomber crews, included 37 Distinguished Flying Crosses, 12 Distinguished Flying Medals and three bars to the D.F.C.

The awards raised to 202 the total given Canadian airmen since start of the war. Four have won the Distinguished Service Order, one of whom was Wing Cmdr. John Fulton of Kamloops, B.C., who already held the D.F.C. and the Air Force Cross. Now the most decorated Canadian flier in the present war, he was reported missing a few days before the award of the D.S.O. was announced.

In addition 14 have won bars to the D.F.C. Seventy-six have been awarded the D.F.M. and one has been given the bar to the D.F.M.

The Air Force Cross, awarded for distinguished flying services not on active operations against the enemy, has gone to 76 Canadian officers and the Air Force Medal, awarded non-commissioned officers and men, has gone to six.

There has been one award of Commander of the Bath—to Air Commodore Raymond Collishaw, formerly of Nanaimo, B.C.—as well as three George Medals, three officers of the Order of the British Empire and three memberships in the same order. Thirty Canadians have been mentioned in dispatches.

Crews Encounter Icing Conditions On Both Journeys

Targets in Western Germany Heavily Attacked and Ten Bombers Lost

RAID SUCCESSFUL

With the R.C.A.F., somewhere in England, Oct. 6 (CP).—The French Canadian bomber squadron of the R.C.A.F. made its first operational flight over enemy territory during the night. The target airmen of this newest unit of the expanding Canadian air force attacked was not disclosed immediately.

Led by their youthful dark-haired commanding officer, Wing Cmdr. Joe St. Pierre of St. Eustache-Sur-Le-Lac, Que., the airmen swept over Western Germany, flying through storms and icing conditions on both outward and homeward journeys.

Most of the squadron's aircraft were obliged to fly at lower altitudes than usual as a result of the unfavorable weather, except for which, crew members reported, the flight would have been little different from a routine training flight.

Described As Successful.

The squadron's first operation was described as "successful" in an R.C.A.F.'s communique which reported that squadrons of the R.C.A.F. formed part of the strong force of the bomber command which attacked targets in western Germany last night.

Thirty-year-old St. Pierre, who circled one of the targets 20 minutes to make a special low-level reconnaissance after dropping his bombs, declared himself satisfied with the performance of his crews, some of whom were making their first operational flight over enemy territory.

"For a start," St. Pierre reported briefly after his return, "it wasn't bad. I'm proud of my men. They did a good job of work."

Sqdn. Ldr. Georges Roy of Westmount, Que., son of Hon. Philippe Roy, former Canadian minister to France, who was one of St. Pierre's flight commanders, said "I'd like to make many trips like that one".

Meet Bad Weather.

"It would have been a soft assignment if we had not met with such bad weather," the tall officer said. "We had no difficulty, however, in finding the English coast on our return and still less trouble in locating the enemy's coast. The enemy were very active with their searchlights."

Roy, like his fellow flight commander, Sqdn. Ldr. Logan Savard of Montreal and Quebec, and other members of the squadron, served his "apprenticeship" with the famous Moose Squadron when led by the missing Wing Cmdr. John Fulton of Kamloops, B.C.

Roy was one of the first to reach the target and when he got there it was well alight with flares, and fires could be seen starting up.

"My bomb-aimer, Flt. Sgt. J. C. Boudreau of St. Paul Ile-Aux-Nois, Que., found a good spot to drop his bombs," the Flight Commander said. "During that time many other bombers were over the target and a considerable number of fires were going when we left."

ITALIANS CLAIM 33,000-TON U.S. BATTLESHIP SUNK

Report Sub Scores Four Torpedo Hits On Ship in Vicinity Of Freetown

NO CONFIRMATION

London, Oct. 6—(CP)—The Italian High Command in a special communique today claimed the sinking of a United States battleship of the 33,000-ton Mississippi class in the Atlantic off Freetown, West Africa.

There was no confirmation from any other source for this claim nor any indication that United States warships were operating in that area.

The communique said the Italian submarine Barbarigo scored four torpedo hits on the battleship at 2:34 a.m., Rome time, today (8:34 p.m., E.D.T., Monday.)

The Barbarigo previously had been reported by the Italians to have sunk a United States battleship of the Maryland class near Brazil last May 22. This claim, more than four months later, still has no confirmation.

The Mississippi is the oldest of three battleships grouped by the United States as the New Mexico class. They are the Idaho and New Mexico, each 33,400 tons, and the 33,000-ton Mississippi, which was completed Dec. 18, 1917. All three were modernized between 1930 and 1934.

IRAQ CABINET RESIGNS

London, Oct. 6 — (CP) — A Reuters news agency dispatch from Baghdad said the cabinet of Iraq resigned today.

The resignation was said to have resulted from a difference of opinion within the cabinet on internal economic questions of the kingdom, which provides bases for some Allied military forces.

MOTORISTS ASKED TO RECORD NUMBERS THEIR CAR TIRES

Provincial Police today issued warnings to all motorists to record the serial numbers of their automobile tires. The recent stealing of tires has become so acute that police in an effort to cope with the situation cannot co-operate in the recovery of stolen tires unless the owner can provide the serial numbers, thus giving the authorities a basis upon which to operate, stated Inspector Frank Gardner today.

Recently W. A. Jeffrey, of the 2nd concession of Sidney, reported the theft of two tires from his automobile, which was parked in his garage. Today Mr. Jeffrey informed the police that four tires had been stolen, instead of the originally two reported.

Fourteen men who previously were rejected by military authorities for medical reasons were re-examined and reports forwarded to M.D. 3 headquarters at Kingston.

The board will sit at regular periods and it is stated some four hundred rejectees of Hastings, Prince Edward and surrounding districts will be notified to report to the board in the near future.

WINNER OF D.F.C. REPORTED MISSING

Flying Officer Gilbert C. Hooey, D.F.C., formerly of Trenton, who paid his way to England to join the Royal Air Force after being rejected by the R.C.A.F., has been reported missing after operations over Frankfurt on August 24.

He is a son of Mrs. B. S. Hooey, of Oakville and formerly of Trenton where Mr. Hooey resided for some years after leaving Belleville where he operated a store for a number of years.

FO. Hooey was awarded the D.F.C. for his part in a raid on Augsburg on April 17. He went overseas in July, 1940 and spent a year instructing in England before going on operations duty. He has a daughter, Carol, 4 and a sister, Mrs. William Leachman, Pavilion, N.Y. His wife resides in Toronto.

FO. Hooey's father was well-known in Trenton and Belleville particularly for his cycling activities. At a ripe old age he travelled the distance between the two places for a number of years on the occasion of his birthday.

Kinsmen Given Permission To Continue Projects

Permission for the Belleville Kinsmen Club to continue its war project programs in the raising of finances for the club's Milk for Britain and Fag Fund to provide cigarettes for Belleville boys in active service was granted by the Department of National War Services in a letter read to the club members at their fortnightly meeting held at the Quinte Hotel Monday evening. In like manner Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance for the Dominion, sent a personal telegram to President Buster LaBarr expressing appreciation in the fact that a program outlining the forthcoming third Dominion Victory Loan would feature the meeting and have the endorsation of the club. Hon. Mr. Ilsley also congratulated the Belleville Kinsmen in his wire upon their excellent work in the continuance of their Eye Clinic and the great work being done in their 'Milk for Britain' and 'Fag Funds.' "Your patriotic actions exemplify the spirit of Kinsmen throughout Canada and our Government congratulates you," was part of the telegram read.

A Business Meeting

In a purely business meeting, in which the club members were requested to assist the forthcoming Dominion Victory Loan drive as a unit, plans for the Kinsmen's annual tag day on October 17th were launched and also for the winter's program of weekly bingos, the receipts of which both will be given directly into the Milk for Britain and Fag Funds with no administration costs. Kin. Orliff Lloyd spoke briefly on the matter of enlistment in the reserve army, urging the club members to join either the Argyll Light Infantry or the 34th Battery during the program of enlistment week.

Transferred to Toronto

The club bade fond adieu to a valued and esteemed member, when President Labarr announced that Kin Phil Huddleston, chairman of entertainment and musical director of the club, had been transferred to Toronto in line with his employment, Kin Phil being employed with the Canadian National Railways accounting department. A presentation was made suitable to the occasion when a service club loses such a valued member. A lengthy message outlining Canada's third Victory Loan was read urging the Kinsmen of Belleville to support the project to the fullest measure in assisting Canada's war effort in the maintenance of the armed forces and the defeat of the Axis powers.

Kin Bill McGee acted as song leader while Kin George Meade enriched the Fag Fund coffers by levying fines as sergeant-at-arms.

C.N.R. Veterans Hold Smoker

Over one half million cigarettes have been forwarded by the Canadian National Railways War Veterans Association to Belleville men in the armed forces overseas, it was revealed by Mr. Albert Jones at the first monthly meeting of the Association held at the Quinte Hotel on Monday evening.

The occasion marked the opening meeting of the Association for their winter activities, with meetings to be held monthly until next spring. The function was in form of a smoker and entertainment with Mr. J. T. Walden, acting as chairman for the evening.

The announcement given by Mr. Jones disclosed that the C.N.R. War Veterans' Association now has 130 men in the armed forces who regularly receive gift parcels of cigarettes from the organization in Belleville. Each soldier receives a package of 300 cigarettes each month at a cost of $1,686.

Several local musicians and singers were present at the meeting and favored with selections for the entertainment of the Association members. Corporal F. Saunders favored with two solos, while Madeleine Walden presented a series of song and dance numbers that were thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. Other entertainers were the Dickie Sisters who gave a dance number; Barbara Diment, toe dance; J. Shaddock, solo; and Mrs. Grace Calvert, piano accordian. Mrs. Calvert acted as accompanist for the dancing numbers while Corporal Joe Woodhouse was at the piano during a period of community singing.

Rotary Honors Father-in-Law Of V.C. Winner

An event unique in the history of service clubs of the city if not the Dominion took place yesterday at the weekly luncheon of the Rotary Club here, when President Lloyd Hicks, on behalf of his fellow Rotarians publicly felicitated Rotarian Jamieson Bone on the award of the Victoria Cross to his now famous son-in-law, Lieut.-Col. C.G. I. Merritt, V.C.

Col. Merritt is the only Canadian to win the coveted decoration and headed a long list of awards given to Canadians in the Dieppe Raid.

The citation accompanying the award to Col. Merritt was read to the clubmen by Rotarian J. B. Boyce while the origin and history of the Victoria Cross was explained by Past District Governor J. O. Herity.

Rotarian Bone graciously accepted the felicitations of the club, and made an appropriate reply.

Later the clubmen heard a fine address written by the Minister of Finance, J. L. Ilsley and read by Secretary Pinkston. A colorful setting for the address which had to do with the nation's war effort and the forthcoming Victory Loan, were the table decorations consisting of grouped flags in glass vases placed on bunting of red, white and blue.

POLICE COURT

There was no session of city police court today owing to the death of Henry Lloyd, father of Magistrate J. L. Lloyd. However, H. B. Wilson, local Justice of the Peace, remanded for trial Harvey Schryver and Stanley Babcock, both of Belleville, who appeared on charges of the alleged theft of brass from A. Safe and Company.

City police broke up two fistic encounters along the main street late Monday night and ultimately apprehended Pte. E. Stewart, who was found to be absent without leave from his military unit. The results of the fights saw blood drawn upon two others who were not held by police.

Community Concert Assoc. Makes Plans For Membership Drive

At a meeting held Monday evening in Bridge Street Church parlors, the Community Concert Association elected officers for the coming year and made plans for the membership campaign which is being undertaken this week with the assistance of Mr. Roger Donlon, organization director. The officers for the coming year were elected; following the report of the nomination committee which included, Mrs. R. L. Brown, Mrs. T. Dolan and Mrs. W. H. Finkle. They are:

Past President—Judge C. A. Cameron.

President—Mrs. W. J. Morrison.

Vice President—Mr. R. E. Hachborn.

Vice President—Mr. John Deacon.

Treasurer—Mr. B. C. Sisler.

General Secretary—Miss Leona Riggs.

Headquarters' Secretaries — Mrs. B. Raymer, Miss Jessie McGie.

Publicity Chairman—Mr. S. Alec Gordon.

Dinner Chairman—Mrs. H. R. Gibson.

Appointments and Transportation Chairman—Mrs. E. G. Kennedy.

Concert Presentation Committee—Mrs. R. A. Flynn, Mrs. O. Pinkston, Mrs. R. M. Anderson.

Board of Directors—Mrs. J. W. Kinnear, Mr. S. M. Anglin, Mr. Chas. T. Dolan, Mr. H. R. Moorman, Mr. W. H. Finkle, Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, Dr. A. C. Locke, Mr. R. L. Brown.

Expresses Appreciation

Mr. Morrison, president, in addressing the members thanked them on behalf of Miss Leona Riggs and himself for the wonderful co-operation shown during the past year. With other forms of entertainment still largely patronized it was fitting that this Association, whose aim was to bring good music to the community, should function. Affiliation with the Columbia Concerts, Inc., would widen the field of artists and the concerts arranged for the coming year would be well worth the fee of five dollars.

Miss Leona Riggs explained that during the coming week of campaign the headquarters would be as usual at the Chamber of Commerce from ten to five o'clock daily. On Wednesday evening workers were asked to report progress at the Chamber of Commerce between the hours of eight and ten. Miss Riggs welcomed the new workers and expressed appreciation for the support of those who were working toward realizing the Association's aim, bringing good music to Belleville.

Judge Cameron in seconding the nominations presented by Mrs. R. L. Brown paid tribute to those who had done such excellent work during the years of the Association's existence especially Miss Riggs without whose leadership the organization could not have enjoyed the success it attained each year.

The treasurer's report prepared by Mr. Sisler was read by the president, who also read a telegram of good wishes from Robert Ferguson of the Columbia Concerts, Inc.

Good For Morale

Mr. Roger Donlon gave an interesting address speaking of the amazing success of concert associations this year in Canada, even in the smaller centres. Far from being a project which should be abandoned in wartime, concerts were booming in England. In Mosoow Russians attended opera last season, even stepping over dead bodies to get there. Concerts were recognized as necessary to sustain morale and communities which had dropped out of the Association were eager to take up the program again.

With the new membership fee, three and perhaps four concerts would be available depending on the membership. Such artists as Rose Bampton, Mona Paulee, John Dudley, James Melton, Lansing Hatfield, Robert Casadesus, Albert Spalding, were among those available.

Discussion of plans for the membership campaign concluded the annual meeting.

Plane Sucked Into Uncontrolled Dive Created by an Explosion

London, Oct. 6—(CP Cable)—A giant Halifax bomber piloted by a young Canadian was brought back to Britain safely after having been sent into an uncontrolled dive from 12,500 feet over Germany, it was learned today.

PO. J. H. M. McIntosh of Lumsden, Sask., was at the controls when an atmospheric vortex created by the explosion of an anti-aircraft shell sucked the plane into the dive.

There were two other Canadians in the crew of the bomber, which was returning from Friday night's attack on Krefeld, German manufacturing centre. They were Sgt. Alec Wyatt of Cornwall, Ont., the wireless operator and Sgt. Johnny Chard of Vancouver, mid-upper gunner.

When the wild, 350-mile-an-hour dive ended with the plane only 200 feet over the ground, Wyatt said he could hear machine-guns chattering at the Halifax from the ground. The bomber's two gunners, Chard and an Ulsterman, raked the enemy searchlights with machine-guns without having to depress their guns.

"I think we got about a dozen between us," Chard said.

McIntosh modestly gave credit for the safe return to the English navigator who, though his charts were blown to bits by the rush of air through the escape hatch, steered a safe course through heavily-defended areas to the coast and to Wyatt, who uses his radio set to good advantage to get positions as they crossed the North Sea.

The Air Ministry said the dive set the plane's gyro-compasses spinning and turned the crew upside down with McIntosh held only by the foot loops on the rudder bar. The motors were roaring so that flames a foot long were shooting from one engine.

McIntosh ordered the crew to bail out. The engineer jumped. The navigator was about to follow when he saw by the reflected glare of the enemy searchlights only 200 feet below that it was too late for a jump.

Canada's Achievement in This War One To Be Proud of Says Minister Of Finance in Letter to Service Clubs

"Today Canada is producing vast and ever increasing quantities of war weapons and munitions—weapons and munitions which are being used by the armed forces of the United Nations in practically every theatre of war in the world," the Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance said in a written address to Service Clubs of Canada.

Copies of the address will be read to all service clubs in Canada. It was read here at noon Monday to the Rotary Club by its secretary Orland Pinkston, and today will be read to the Kiwanis and Kinsmen Clubs respectively by special readers.

In his address, the Minister of Finance pointed out the progress made by Canada in its contribution to the Empire war effort since war began. He stressed the tremendous strides made in the numerical and mechanical strength of the Navy, the Army and the Air Force since 1939 and pointed out the problems confronting the government in raising the finances necessary to carry on the national war effort.

Impressive Record

In three years, Canadians have turned a peaceful country towards the goal of total war. He said, "Our record is impressive, but in the light of what remains to be done, it must be bettered. Victory is still to be won."

Mr. Ilsley expressed the objective for the nation's war effort. "I think" he said, "we should aim to have a reputation for Canadian achievement in this war that will be the talk of the world for generations; that will be the pride of ourselves, our children and children's children. I want the people of the United Nations to ask themselves: 'How can 11,500,000 people in the northern part of North America do so much and do it so well?'."

In September, 1939, the Navy was mobilized on a war footing of 15 vessels, 6 of which were fighting ships. Today the Canadian Navy is maintaining nearly 500 ships with an enlisted force of 41,000 men.

350,000 In Active Army

At the outbreak of war, Canada's army numbered 4,500. Today it has an active army of 350,000 backed by a reserve force of 120,000 men.

The Royal Canadian Air Force too has a record of solid achievement. "At the beginning of the war," Mr. Ilsley wrote, "the R. C. A. F. had 4,000 men. Today we say with pride that our Air Force with a personnel of more than 125,000 is one of the world's outstanding fighting machines."

The Army is fit, willing and well-led. When the time comes for all-out attack, it will be a sharp hard-hitting spearhead of invasion.

"For three years the Canadian Navy ocean-terriers, battle-wise and tough, have hounded undersea raiders. Essentially a convoy navy it is helping in the vital task of keeping open the sea-lanes to United Nations shipping.

"All these men require to be armed, uniformed, housed, fed and paid. Their dependents must receive support. They need the support of all the machinery of war that we can supply with which to make them a fighting force to be feared. Part of your money previously loaned to the Government, has gone here."

Big War Production

Referring to industrial production, Mr. Ilsley said in his address that "during the past three years we have witnessed an industrial revolution. Today, Canada is among the large war weapon producers of the world — we are equipping not only our own forces but we are also helping to equip the Empire and the United Nations".

Three years ago, Canada had no aircraft industry. Today more than 400 planes monthly come from aircraft factories. In other spheres, practically every weapon of attack and defence is coming from Canadian production lines.

"Right now" the Finance Minister stated, "900,000 persons, including 145,000 women are directly or indirectly employed in war work over and above the armed forces, and the number is steadily growing, 900,000 pay envelopes each week —47 millions each year — take a lot of filling."

Record Farm Production

Notable achievements have been made by Canadian agriculture, he pointed out. Canadian farmers have responded with record output to the challenging quotas set for them. They have done this in spite of increasing material shortage, of machinery and manpower scarcity. There are now 1,250,000 workers on Canadian farms.

War production is now nearing one-half of Canada's total production. By way of comparison production for war in any year during the 1914-18 war did not exceed 10 per cent at any time.

Speaking of finance, the Minister said, "today Canadians have far more money to spend due to the fact that many people are working at high rates of pay. But spending," he warned, "must be held down to the level of supplies available for consumers.

To build the war effort to the present high level and to fight inflationary development, Canadians have had to bear tremendous increases in taxation, and to lend the country more dollars than ever thought possible.

Taxes and borrowings have not been able to take care of holding down inflation or of switching men, materials and machines over to war. New controls such as price ceilings, wage stabilization, rationing, foreign exchange control and direction of manpower under a selective service program have had to be introduced.

Over 3 Billion This Year

From September, 1939 to last March, war outlay totalled nearly 4 billion dollars. This year Canada will spend, at least 3 billions 300 millions on war. These expenses include the 1 billion dollar gift of war supplies to Britain.

Adding to the cost of government at home, Canada's budget this year calls for a total outlay of 3 billion 900 millions of dollars — which is equal to about $1 per day for every man, woman and child in Canada and about eight times the level of pre-war budgets.

Taxation revenue will be this year four times the level of pre-war budgets. Despite this, it will cover only one-half of the outlay. Canada therefore must borrow 1 billion, 800 millions from the Canadian people.

No Easy Way

"There is no easy way to pay for this war," the Minister said. "Saving, involving self denial, is one way all can help to win the war. Taxes are high, but we cannot win this war without pulling in our belts."

"In October we will be asked to lend our country 750 million dollars. That money must be forthcoming. I believe we all realize that."

Mr. Ilsley urged the clubmen to remember the importance of the individual as well as the family contribution; to stress the fact that with the payment of income taxes, the duty to the nation and the Empire is not concluded. He urged them to point out to employees the value of Victory Bonds.

"These are dark days they say, forgetting that darkness brings out stars that are never seen by day, that adversity brings out qualities not seen in the tranquil sunshine. These are the days in which we are learning . . . learning to strain our resources to the utmost in a common cause . . . to face the future clearly but unafraid . . . to carry on our daily work with steadfast courage . . . to give service without stint . . . to accept burdens without murmuring . . to hold fast to the supreme worth of Canadian traditions.

"Dark days? No. Say rather that these are days which shall hearten us toward a greater Canada that has yet been . . . a proud, free country at peace with all men. The bugles of war sound a clarion call to duty for each of us. Let us then seek the grace that we may not be found wanting . . . to so carry on that in the years to come we may look back on these days of testing with pride that we lived through them and had the opportunity to play a man's part."

Better Care of Farm Machinery Will Result From Rationing Order

Restrictions upon the sale of new farm machinery will possibly be a good thing in that it will compel farmers to take better care of their present equipment.

Thus was the reflection of Mr. J. V. White, local machinery dealer as this morning he studied the new order placed by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board rationing all new farm machinery and other agricultural equipment. The new order "freezes" all farm machinery as of October 6th.

According to the new order dealers will be held responsible to the administrator of farm and construction machinery and equipment in their possession on October 6th and for all new pieces arriving after that date. They will also be held responsible for obtaining from the customer a completed application form regarding the essentiality of the equipment requested.

When a trade-in is involved the dealer will be required to state how soon the old machine can be repaired if it is possible to re-condition it, or alternatively, to undertake that it will be turned in for scrap.

Restrictions have also been placed upon the sale of parts in that dealers are requested to sell only such parts as that will put the machine in good working condition.

"The order, as I see it, will compel farmers to look after their present machinery," commented Mr. White. "A great deal of farm machinery is worn out through misuse, lack of care and lack of oil."

The repair of machines will receive an added impetus as the result of the order freezing new machinery sales, was the the opinion of Mr. White.

A Reminder

FIRST INSTALMENT ON INCOME TAX DUE 15th OCTOBER, 1942

Taxpayers (other than corporations) must pay their 1942 income tax in four quarterly instalments if their income is derived from —

1. A business* (which includes farming).
2. A profession.
3. Investments.
4. Salary or wages when such is less than 75% of their total income.

The first instalment is due on or before 15th October 1942.

Payments, made payable to the Receiver General of Canada, should be sent to the District Inspector of Income Tax, accompanied either by a letter clearly written or preferably by Remittance Form T.7B Individuals. This form will be returned after each successive payment and therefore become a record between the taxpayer and the Department. This form also shows how to determine the instalment payable and may be procured from District Inspectors of Income Tax or at Post Offices.

* Where an unincorporated business is subject to Excess Profits Tax, this tax must also be paid in quarterly instalments commencing 15th October 1942 and each instalment payment should be accompanied by a letter or preferably by Form EPT-7B.

There are penalties for failure to comply with the law.

HAD TO TAKE PLANE APART

Owen Sound, Ont., Oct. 6—(CP)—A Royal Canadian Air Force plane, which made a forced landing with no injury to the pilot, had to be taken apart and loaded on a truck for the return journey to Camp Borden. When the machine ran out of gas the pilot set it down in a field that was too small for a take-off.

133,000 French Workers Leave For Germany

Vichy, Oct. 5 — (AP) — The first contingent of 133,000 French workers scheduled to be sent to Germany under the Vichy government's new compulsory labor program left by train today along with a scattering of volunteers, despatches from Paris said.

This initial trainload included complete factory crews and their foremen, picked in record time from French factories and "designated" for service in Germany. They were ready to go to work immediately as complete units in Nazi plants.

Other departures are expected to follow in quick succession as the government issues rush orders for workers in fulfilment of Pierre Laval's agreement to send three skilled Frenchmen to Germany for every one prisoner of war released by Hitler.

While the train was pulling out Minister Schleier of the German Embassy addressed French industrial heads and flayed their lukewarm attitude toward the new labor set-up.

"When German victory will have permitted unification of Europe", he went on, "every nation will have to give an accounting of the extent to which it contributed to the defeat of Bolshevism."

President Opens Labor Convention

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 5 —(CP)— President William Green opened the 62nd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor here today with the assertion that by the end of this year all the war production goals set by President Roosevelt "will be excelled by the workers of America."

The 600 delegates representing 5,500,000 trade unionists in United States and Canada also heard Canada's minister of labor, Hon. Humphrey Mitchell, warn that greater sacrifices are needed in both Canada and the U.S. before victory will be achieved — "if we wind up with our freedom and our shirts we'll be lucky."

President Green's speech emphasized the "labor for victory" keynote of the convention and declared that the "men on the production lines will win the war in that front line of battle."

Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario, in another address, assured the delegates that his government would introduce compulsory collective bargaining legislation "as soon as possible in the Ontario legislature."

Riddle of Stalin Letter Likely To Go Unsolved

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Pending some decisive turn in the battle of Stalingrad, the riddle of the Stalin letter to Henry Cassidy, Associated Press correspondent in Moscow, seems likely to go unsolved.

Neither the motive behind its preparation and publication at this time nor the specific nature of the second-front demand it makes upon the Allies is quite clear. There are several cyptic, even conflicting implications. Not the the least baffling is the Stalin observation that the "one thing" required to make Allied help to Russia effective is that the Allies should fulfil their obligations fully and "on time."

What, exactly, are those obligations or what "on time" mean? There can be no question from the context or from previous Stalin utterances that to his mind, at least, Anglo-American "obligations" to Russia include the opening of a second front in Europe, not in Africa or across the Pacific. More than a year ago, before the Japanese attack spread the war to the Pacific, Stalin told a Moscow audience that lack of a second front "in Europe" was the prime reason for Soviet reverses up to that time.

Too Much Dispersion?

He was sure even then that a second front "must unquestionably appear in the near future." Nor is it reasonable to suppose he had any advance intimation of Japanese intentions to attack in the Pacific, bringing the United States into the war.

No second front in Europe except by Anglo-American air attacks has yet developed. It is equally true, however, that no second front has been opened by Russian initiative in the Pacific, a fact which has produced no critical reaction in London or Washington. Russia and Japan nominally maintain normal relations.

If it be agreed by the Allies that Russia stand clear of the Pacific war theatre and concentrate on her defensive against Germany, however, it must also be agreed that the Allies should make such dispositions both in the Pacific and in the Near and Middle East as they deem necessary, even if it delays their second-front-in-Europe preparations.

The implication is that Stalin now feels there has been too much dispersion of Allied effort to other than the European theatre. His phrase "on time" suggests there has been mention in Allied-Russian talks of some tentative date, not yet reached, which Anglo-American forces would be prepared to strike in Europe. If that is the fact, it could be argued that the Russian leader is fearful of future delay, due to the situation in the Pacific or the Indian Ocean or in Africa, rather than complaining that the Allies have thus far failed to live up to their commitments.

Thumbs Nose at Japan

It is possible Stalin was thinking more of his own home front or of agitating German nerves than of any effect his letter might have on Allied second-front preparations. He could not expect goading by himself or any other Russian spokesman to influence Anglo-American decisions on so grave a military undertaking.

While Stalin said a second front was "of first importance," he also promptly asserted that Soviet capacity even now to resist Germany "or any other aggressive power" is unshaken. And in so saying he obviously intended to thumb his nose at Japan as well as at Hitler.

The test of that well may come at Stalingrad. If it falls eventually, unquestionably Russian ability to strike back this winter or next spring must be lessened. If it survives, Hitler's 1942 gains in Russia will be jeopardized and his means of meeting an Allied second-front effort will be restricted whenever and wherever that attempt comes.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was taking a walk with pop for his appetite, and a newsboy ran past yelling papers, and I said, Why cant I do that, pop, G wizzickers look how much money I could make after school.

I hardly think your voice is loud enough yet, but your suggestion shows the proper spirit, pop said. Parents nowadays keep their young out at pasture entirely too long. The dear little lambs turn into big hulking marriagable sheep and they're still cropping the last remnants of the old folks' clover. It wasn't like that in the old days. In the old days a penny looked as big as the moon, and a kid might get an ice cream cone on his birthday if he worked a couple of extra hours for it. So the result was, people put so much money away for a rainy day that they were able to spend their declining years rocking away comfortably in a constant drizzle. That was known as thrift, and it's one of the most significant of the one sillable words. And here's a case in point, right here, he said.

Meaning a man standing on the corner with a cigar box full of stuff to sell, saying, Pencils, shoe laces, help an old man to buy his dinner, shoe laces, pencils, help the old.

Being a man with thin legs and thick eyebrows, pop saying. The poor chap probably has eleven strapping sons all making good living for themselves in far corners of the world.

And he put a dime in the man's cigar box, saying, But say, what's all this about you being old, you're no old man, and the man said, No sir, it's my dog here.

Meaning a little brown dog sitting there half asleep, and the man said, He's 10 years old, and according to a dog's life that would make him 60 if he was a man, so he's an old man, and pop said, Well, perhaps the principle is the same, yee gods.

And we kept on walking talking about new subjects.

8571 Books Were Used At Corby Public Library During September

In the report of the librarian Miss Kathryn Gallagher at the October meeting of the Corby Public Library Board it was pointed out that 8571 books were used at the library in September, 6177 being adult, 2154 juvenile and 260 reference books consulted.

One hundred new members joined the library during the month, 52 adults and 48 boys and girls. There were 18 adult and 4 juvenile withdrawals.

Following the suggestion of the Inspector of Public Libraries in the last issue of the Ontario Library Review regarding discard of nonused and out of date material on library shelves, over 450 books were weeded out in a general stocktaking of the third floor stackroom. This will help in a small way to release the pressure on the second floor ceiling. A list of these volumes was sent to the librarian, Queen's University, who checked for any rare volumes which might be of value to students. As only six books were of use to the University the remainder were sold as discards.

Eighty discarded fiction volumes were donated to the I.O.D.E. St. Julien chapter for distribution to sailors. There have also been requests from the Navy League and the Ontario Reformatory, Guelph, for discards and some are collecting for them at present

The Boys' and Girls' Library is crowded once more with readers who in many cases are away for the summer months. The rise of 1285 over circulation for August shows that the opening of schools has brought renewed interest in books both of recreational and educational value.

Miss Delaney closed the vacation reading program, on Saturday afternoon September 5th with a party for the winners and runners-up in the Aeroplane Book Tour. About 26 children were present and the winners were awarded diplomas for their successful completion of the Reading Program. Games and contests were conducted by Miss Delaney and her assistant, Miss Mary Wright, on the back lawn.

During this month also, Miss Delaney had prepared lists of new books pertaining to the course of study and sent them to the principals of the various primary schools of the city for distribution to the teachers.

"Know Your Allies" has been the slogan for displays of non-fiction volumes and many pamphlets of the United Nations in the Adult Department. Biographies of the various leaders as well as books on the many countries at war have proven popular.

Lists of books for Collegiate students were also prepared by request to acquaint them with recent books in demand on travel and current affairs

Two classes from O.S.D. were visitors to the Boys' and Girls' Library this month and enjoyed an hour reading and looking at the picture books.

Many interesting visitors called at the library during the United Church Conference recently. Mr. Byam, a member of the Library Board in the early 1900's and now resident of New Liskeard, Ontario was interested in the progress of the library and its many improvements. A member of the Renfrew Public Library Board called to compare notes on library methods. Judge Forin, whose father built our present building was also interested in the progress.

Suppose Everybody said

"Let George do it"

How easy it is when confronted with a personal responsibility to dodge the issue with "Oh, let George do it"; to ease one's conscience with the thought that someone will do it—it will get done somehow.

Right now there is an opportunity and obligation for everyone to do his part in our supreme war effort. Many are in the armed forces, risking their all—their lives—that Canada may survive as a free land. Those at home have their responsibility—to supply everything our fighting forces need to give themselves an even break with the enemy.

Every dollar invested in Victory Bonds does its bit in the life and death struggle for Victory—and without victory nothing matters. We, on the home front, can serve by saving—by putting every possible dollar into Victory Bonds. Any self-denial we make is more than a duty—it is a privilege. People in axis and occupied countries have no choice in the matter—whereas we loan the money at a fair rate of interest and on the soundest security in the world.

WORK—SAVE and LEND to the limit of your ability. Don't wait for George to do it—he may be waiting for you. Get ready to buy the new Victory Bonds!

Meat Rationing Hinted

Donald Gordon, Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, told a conference members last Thursday that meat rationing is being considered. He said the subject was being discussed to having a plan ready should the necessity for rationing arise.

While the scarcity of meat in the stores continues it would seem that rationing is the fairest way to provide everyone with a sufficient supply according to their needs. At the present time in the large cities families have been unable to buy beef in any quantity for some time. The smaller centres are not so badly affected for many of the butchers are able to go out and buy and slaughter their own supply of beef, getting the animals from farmers who are willing to sell.

We do not think that citizens need to worry too much about getting enough for health reasons. In Britain the weekly ration of meat is limited to what can be purchased for less than a quarter of a dollar and the health of the people is not suffering. Canadians have been accustomed to consuming more meat than is required for health, particularly those in sedentary occupations. We have been very fortunate that we have not been deprived of more articles and food than we have and if we have to go on meat ration it will likely be generous enough that there will be not too much cause for complaint. There are plenty of other foods available and if our armed forces and Britain and Russian are to be supplied then it is up to civilians to take their cut without complaint.

Justice for Nazi Victims

It may be a little early to talk of what should be done after the war to prevent Germany from making another attempt at world domination but we were impressed with some observations of Lord Vansittart along this thought.

The former head of the British Secret Service advocates a prolonged military occupation of Germany after the war, together with heavy restriction of German political and military power. He admits the "existence of twenty per cent of good Germans, but the trouble is whenever you call on these they are unavailable." He added, "I don't want prayers for our enemies, so much as a great flood of sorrow for all the victims of German militarism, and a great flame of indignation against all the culprits, great and small. I want justice for German victims before justice for Germans."

We have observed that some of the United Nations leaders have promised justice after the war by means of trial but we do not think that the oppressed peoples of the conquered nations are going to wait for such niceties. Friends of innocent people, who may have been shot as hostages, of others who have been treated with unspeakable cruelties by the Germans, are burning with vengeance to get even for all that they have suffered. The only law these people understand and want now is the old Mosaic Law of an "eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth."

Many innocent Germans will suffer for the sins of their leaders and army men, and that will be regretted by all decent people. The German nation has escaped the horrors of war, both in this one and the the First Great War, except for the bombing of some of their cities by the R.A.F. Perhaps, if they had had some things to remember of what destruction means, they would not have been so ready to support the senseless ambitions of their present leaders. The Germans have always been ready to "dish it out" to others they have in their power but it will remain to be seen how good they are at "taking it." We are inclined to agree with Lord Vansittart's statement of "Justice for Germany's victims before justice for Germans."

Civil Servants Heed

The civil servants deserve commendation because they have cancelled their convention, which was to be held in Montreal next week. Following the suggestion of Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Transport, that conventions be called off for the duration, the civil servants acted to comply. That is more than a number of conventions did. — Windsor Star.

THE AUTUMN BLUES

Whatever the blues are that come in the autumn—
I've gotum!
And all of the joys that are laid to October,
Move over!
Morning already is dark as a crypt's;
From now on life runs in a partial eclipse
From now till next April the clouds will be lowering,
Gloomily, ghastly, grumpily glowering.
What stretches ahead but a world full of slush?
What's seen but a vista of damp shoes, and anklets,
Oh, why did I rail at the summertime heat?
I just didn't know when my joys were complete!
And why, 'less it's just that I'm rather refractory,
Can't I find a season that seems satisfactory.

AND THAT'S THAT

A few days ago a cocky young flock of St. Louis Cardinals fluttered out of the southwest with the taste of a Yankee defeat bitter in their beaks, but with a determination that brooked not defeat, and which eventually swept them to a brilliant series of four straight wins and the world's most coveted baseball honor.

Today the cocky young Cards are rulers of the baseball roost and over the Cardinal barnyard—pardon, baseball field—will flutter the pennant emblematic of the world's title in baseball.

Which may not prove that a good little man can lick a good big one, but it was a definite platform in the plank of those who insist that a man or a team can be beaten at their own game.

The Cards definitely proved that. They matched the Yanks strategy for strategy; laughed at the powerhouse strength of the hitherto invincible batters-box artillery and literally ran themselves to one of the biggest upsets in diamond history.

All you needed was fifty thousand bucks and the nerve to bet the Cards would win four straight games, and you could go buy yourself an island in the Arctic and live in comfort for the rest of your days.

The speedy young Cardinal club ran the Yankee stalwarts ragged. They fluttered around the bases like a wounded partridge seeking cover. They hit in the "clutches" to use sports parlance, and the defensively famed Yankee outfield and infield didn't have a chance with the cavorting Cardinals.

They were an inspired club after the first victory. Perhaps that is what did the trick. They played heads-up baseball during the next four games and by virtue of their fire, determination, fearlessness of Yankee tradition and ability to come through in the pinches, are worthy world's champions.

Defensively the Cardinals outshone the Yankees by the width of the Mississippi River. True dashing young Terry Moore neutralized what might have been triples or home runs from the war clubs of the great DiMaggio and Keller, but their infield sparkled with sprightly double plays at the same time the Bronz Bombers were kicking the ball around.

On the other hand the great Gotham team seemed demoralized by the fire and speed of the Redbird squad. Their great batting strength couldn't come through in the pinches and their pitching was equalled and bettered by the staff of the Missourians.

Young Johnny Beasley, rookie pitcher of the Cards, will likely be named the hero of the series. The youngster came through with two fine wins in his first world's series, and was the only pitcher to win a brace of games. Here again youth was served despite the fact that Rufus the Red Ruffing won the opener for the Yanks. The younger pitchers of both clubs set the pace with the veterans bowing out after failing to make the grade on various occasions.

Anyway it was a great series, especially from a St. Louis viewpoint. The Yanks have been humbled at last after being monarchs of baseballdom for years. Not that they weren't and still are a great team, but they couldn't cope with the dash and determination of the fire-eating gang of baseballers from St. Louis who knew no fear, and refused to accept defeat until they gave all they had.

PERMANENT THINGS

Said Old Crankmire to the youngsters who had gathered round his door;
"It's a changing world you're facing, as no doubt you've heard before,
But some things will never alter, and I want to make them plain.
First, the road to fame and fortune long and toilsome will remain.

"There will come no change in honor. Stern and strict will stay the code.
No change in perseverance and no shortening of the road.
Forms of government may alter, but wherever change may run,
Still by use of skill and muscle will the work of life be done.

"There will be no change in conduct. Under any scheme or plan
There'll be standards of deportment which will mark the gentleman.
And whatever methods follow here's one law they'll never drop:
Only boys with real ambition will get somewhere near the top."

NORTHERN IRELAND

Now that American troops are stationed in Ireland, many people are having trouble keeping the two parts of Ireland straight in their minds.

The island popularly known as Ireland is divided into two separate political and governmental entities.

That part of the island is for all practical purposes a part of the United Kingdom or Great Britain. It is at war with the Axis powers and that is where the American troops are stationed.

Northern Ireland is only a little larger in area than Connecticut and has a population of about 1,300,000. Belfast is the capital.

Northern Ireland comprises the six northeastern Irish counties of Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry and Tyrone.

It is often referred to as "Ulster" and the inhabitants as "Orangemen."

The rest of the island of Ireland is now an independent country and is neutral as between the United Nations and the Axis powers.

It is popularly referred to as "Southern Ireland" or "The Irish Free State," but the official name of the country is now "Eire."

Eire is roughly about the size of Maine and has nearly 3,000,000 inhabitants. Dublin is the capital.

The county of "Donegal" in "Southern Ireland" extends farther north than any part of "Northern Ireland."

Although Northern Ireland is for all practical purposes a part of the United Kingdom and sends 13 members to the House of Commons in London, it enjoys a limited self-government exercised by a Northern Irish Parliament of two houses and a separate government at Belfast.

A majority of the people of Northern Ireland are pro-British and desire to continue their present relations with Great Britain, but there is a strong pro-Eire minority, chiefly in the southern counties of Fermanagh and Tyrone, who desire the union of all Northern Ireland with Eire.

Douglas Hyde is president of Eire and Eamon de Valera is prime minister.

FARM MACHINERY

Must Prove Need

Farmers will be required to prove their need for new equipment by filing statements showing the number of acres in crop and in summer fallow, the number of cattle, horses, hogs and sheep owned, and descriptions of similar usable equipment already on the farms.

Trade-ins are also covered by the rationing order, which requires farmers to describe the machines traded in and state whether or not they can be repaired. If such equipment can be repaired, farmers will be asked why they are making trade-ins.

Where farmers contemplate switching to power equipment from machinery suitable for horses, mules or oxen, they will also be asked to give reasons for the change.

The order is designed to obtain equitable distribution of farm machinery of all types, and it provides that no farmer may apply more than once for any equipment by filing application through another dealer.

Dealers Must Account

Dealers must account to the Administrator of Farm and Construction Machinery and Municipal Services Equipment for all equipment in their possession as of today, and for any new machinery arriving later.

Dealers must also undertake to turn in for scrap any old machine which cannot be reconditioned. If it can be repaired, dealers must state how soon the work can be completed.

A further check upon the essentiality of any article applied for is contained in the provision that manufacturers, before sending application forms to the nearest regional office of the board for approval, must state whether or not they can supply the article offered and pass upon its essentiality from their knowledge of the requirements of their territories. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board, through its regional offices, will finally approve or reject applications for equipment.

harassing their unsheltered camps in the westernmost Aleutians, American army bombers said an unusual period of good weather aided their raids Thursday and Friday from the newly-established bases less than 400 miles from Kiska.

Bomber crews also noted that the cargo ships had been damaged in earlier attacks in which results were not observed immediately because of the high altitude from which the bombs were dropped. The ships, which were beached, pushed the total of enemy vessels sunk or damaged by air and submarine attack to 38 in the Aleutians.

Chief Japanese offensive efforts were confined to the Solomons where nocturnal landings of small detachments were made.

A small force of Japanese bombers attempted a raid Tuesday on the marine Guadalcanal positions but interceptors shot down four of a large escort of fighter planes and the bombers jettisoned their explosives before reaching the target.

Jap Positions Raked

Japanese positions at Rekata Bay, about 120 miles north of Guadalcanal, were bombed and strafed the same day by planes. Two enemy seaplanes were destroyed and installations set on fire. At the same time, a force of navy and marine dive-bombers accompanied by army pursuit ships raked the enemy on Guadalcanal and raided supply ships.

Two more enemy aircraft were damaged at Rekata Bay the following day and a munitions dump left in flames by navy dive-bombers. The attacks were continued throughout the week with damage to one of four destroyers found off Viru Harbor and a small boat set on fire near the Greenwich Islands about 45 miles from Guadalcanal.

Another Japanese air attack on Guadalcanal brought destruction of four enemy fighter planes and the bombers were turned back without dropping a bomb.

FORTY MORE NETHERLANDERS ESCAPE; NOW IN STRATFORD, ONT.

AXIS CARGO VESSEL AFIRE

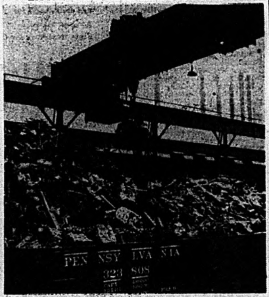
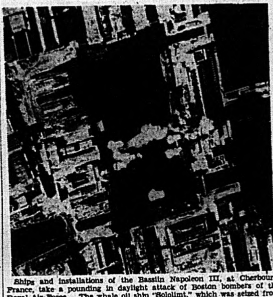
LITTLE SCRAP GOES INTO BIG SCRAP



Many are interested in how the metal from scrap collections is retrieved and made into guns and shells. This picture gives part of the answer. Shown here is a steel mill scrap yard, the overhead magnet is taking scrap from the train car and depositing it in a loader which carries it to the open-hearth furnace. About 50 per cent. of the scrap steel is used in open-hearth production.

R.A.F. SINK NAZI WHALER



Ships and installations of the Bassin Napoleon III, at Cherbourg, France, take a pounding in daylight attack of Boston bombers of the Royal Air Force. The whale oil ship "Sololimt," which was seized from the Norwegians by the Nazis, catches this particular salvo. Bombs burst fair on board, and in the water on the dock close by. This was the finish of the precious sea-going whale-processing factory — no more will it furnish vitamins for the hard-pressed Nazis. When next seen the "Sololimt" was resting on her side on the bottom.

HEALTH CHATS

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

ADVISES ISOLATION TREATMENT WHEN COLDS, INFLUENZA STRIKE

During the other great war, influenza was an enemy as powerful as bombs and bullets in dealing out death. There is reason to believe that this enemy will not return again with the same power; by the use of newly-discovered vaccines and the use of the sulfonamide drugs, we appear to have prepared at least a successful defence against mass influenza attacks.

Doctor Russel L. Cecil of Columbia University, is of the opinion that a good method to prevent the spread of colds and influenza is to completely isolate the patient until all infectious discharges from the nose and throat have cleared up.

Sometimes it is difficult, if not impossible, so carry out this isolation, particularly with men in army barracks and with nurses working in a hospital. However, such isolation could be carried out in the armed forces if circumstances made it essential.

Germ vaccines, such as streptococcus and Staphylococcus, have been used in an effort to prevent colds and their complications, but this type of vaccine has not been found of any great value. On the other hand, vaccines made of viruses, which apparently produce the original infection in colds and influenza, may be of some benefit. Such vaccines are not available for sale, although a great deal of work is being done with them to develop on which can be safely used in large groups of people.

Dr. Cecil also says that the use of ultraviolet treatment and sprays and gargles has given outstanding results. Conversely, painting the throat with antiseptic solutions seems to interfere with the natural protection of the body against infection.

The most important thing to do in caring for a cold and influenza is to prevent complications. The affected person must not be allowed to return to his usual activities until he has completely recovered from the infection. Those who are sick must not be exposed to infection carried by the family or visiting friends. The physician will decide when the sulfonamide drugs should be given to keep complications from occurring.

The best treatment for a cold, according to Dr. Cecil, is rest in bed, and an effective gargle. In influenza, also, complete rest in bed is essential. The person should drink about three or four quarts of fluid daily, should use a light diet and should be given such drugs as are needed to relieve headache, cough and sleeplessness.

Inset into the bodice was a deep yoke of sheer net encrusted with appliques of heirloom guipure lace which had been in the groom's family for many years. Her full length veil of sheerest ivory illusion was created with a coronet of matching lace and her bouquet was of Queen Mary roses, swansonia and bouvardia. The bride's attendants, Mrs. James B. Hardy, Miss Betty Paton and Miss Helen Edwards, wore frocks of cream faille. Their wide brimmed halo hats were of brown velvet and they carried bouquets of English ivy, bronze 'mums and bullrushes.

Later the bride and groom left on a trip to the Laurentians. For travelling the bride chose a sheer wool ensemble of gobelin green collared with beige fox. Upon their return they will make their home in Toronto.

Belleville Presbyterial of United Church W. M. S. Holds Workers' Conference

On Tuesday, Sept. 29th, the executive of the Belleville Presbyterial of the Woman's Missionary Society of the United Church, met with the Presidents in a workers' Conference, in Tabernacle United Church, Mrs. Stanley Spafford, Presbyterial President, presiding.

The morning session opened with a worship service, led by Miss Ruth Wallbridge, who spoke on "What have we to inspire us Towards the Good Life?" We have our religion-Christianity; the beauty and glory of our earth; and the rich heritage of the lives of many great, good and simple folk. Following this, Mrs. Way offered prayer.

Officers Introduced

New officers in the Presbyterial were then introduced and welcomed by Mrs. F. L. Hooper, immediate Past President.

After routine business the Recording Secretary, Miss Malta Mellow, proceeded with the Roll Call of the executive.

Mrs. E. L. Fraser, Treasurer, reported having remitted to Conference Branch Treasurer $5,350, a gratifying increase of $350 for the first half of the year.

Mrs. H. L. Morrison, Secretary of Christian Stewardship, drew attention to the stewardship of prayer. Because of the vital force of prayer, the Dominion Board has requested that each society be given the name of one or two missionaries whom they will remember regularly in prayer.

Mrs. McCreary presented Mission Band work and stressed the need of more workers.

The Associate Members' Secretary, Mrs. Doggett, urged that the women of the church, not already members of the W.M.S. be brought into Associate Membership.

From a letter from Miss Hawley, the Supply Secretary, read by Mrs. Hooper, it was learned that bales sent from this Presbyterial go to Newfoundland; Westminster, Quebec; charges in North Hastings and North Frontenac; and two Indian Missions.

Make Influence Felt

Mrs. Osborne, Community Friendship Secretary, said we should aim to give help and make our influence felt, wherever need arises. "Go Ye Into All the World," may mean for some auxiliary member just to go across the road to help a neighbor in her hour of need, and so show her God's love.

Mrs. W. S. Gordon spoke of the Literature Department and particularly of our study book "The Church in the City Streets," by Dr. Harvey G. Forster, which deals with the problems of our own community. It was urged that there be broader and increased reading of missionary literature.

The Missionary Monthly Secretary, Mrs. F. J. Nichol, said invaluable help in preparing programs is to be found in this magazine, supplementing the study book. Let us crusade for a better community, a better Canada and a better world.

Temperance Secretary

The Secretary of Temperance and Christian Citizenship, Mrs. Arnold Way said that Christian women in these dark days should have strong faith in God, that Christian mothers should early instil in the minds of their children the evils of intemperance, that homes must be made safe. Mrs. Way asked the women to co-operate with other organizations, such as the W.C.T.U., to vote temperance, and always to remember to pray.

The morning session closed with this thought: The building of a fine Canada must begin in the home, from there to the community and then on to the whole of Canada.

After an enjoyable dinner served by the ladies of the Tabernacle Auxiliary, the afternoon session met at 2 o'clock.

Worship Service

Mrs. George Finlay led in the service of worship, reading and commenting on Ephesians 6:10-17, suggesting that this chapter be read and thought upon, for strength to carry on this so necessary work. Mrs. Herrington led in prayer.

Mrs T. C. Armstrong, Moscow, sent in her resignation as Press Secretary Mrs. Thompson of Napanee section accepted this office till the end of the year. Mrs. Geo. Finlay was appointed on the nominating committee to replace Mrs. Armstrong.

A C.G.I.T. rally was planned for the near future, to be addressed by Miss Pearson, missionary from India, place of rally to be Belleville, and details to be arranged by leaders in the city

Mrs. McCreary, Secretary of Mission Bands explained to Mission Band leaders, that the "Standard of Recognition" was based on their answers to the questions asked in the annual report.

Plans For Rally

The 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th Vice-Presidents reported plans going forward for rallies in October to be addressed by Miss Pearson. The 5th Vice-President reported the rally for Prince Edward section, held in June, addressed by Mrs. Crookes, the former Margaret Mustard who told of her work at Gypsumville.

Mrs. Hooper, Past President summed up a short message in these words "Be Thou Faithful."

Reports were brought from the School of Missions, Whitby.

Miss Lazelle Brown reported on the financial "set up" of the school—the largest attendance ever 190 this year. At $4.50 board, 50 cents registration the year closed with a small balance on hand $24.69. The new fees are to be $6.00 board, $1.00 registration.

Mrs. Westover reported the periods taken by Miss Gollan, Church of All Nations, Toronto, and Mrs. Longley, West China. "The Church of All Nations, tries in every way to tell the foreign born of God's love." "China will need us to stand behind her after the war".

The following leaders led in group discussions, Mrs. McCreary, Mission Bands; Mrs. Hooper, Supply; Mrs. Geo. Finlay C.G.I.T.

Mrs Hooper dismissed the council with prayer.

Fashion Flashes

INVESTIGATE the new fur-lined overcoats. A good buy, since the majority of them have button-in fur linings, making them virtually a year-round good tweed casual. Muskrat and coney are favorite linings.

JUST PERFECT for a furlough wedding and making the train is a slim two-piece dress in blue, pink, beige or pale gray crepe, with lace frills edging the "jacket-top neckline, front and hem, as well as the sleeves.

SMALL FRY just love this plaid jumper dress. Sheer woolen in a bright red, black and white plaid makes a nice little jumper frock with deep neckline and set-in midriff waistband that ties in a spanking bow in back. Worn with a separate blouse of white cotton broadcloth with ruffled collar and red embroidery.

PERK UP old wardrobe standbys with a bit of color such as the muffin hat with big bows and a big squashy bag, both made of velveteen in such luscious colors as fire red, jungle green, sable brown.

DRESS UP a simple frock with glowing touches, such as a stone-studded leather belt and clip or pin of matching stones.

Rommel's drive in North Africa is just part of plans Nazis prepared long ago to grab the Dark Continent and its stepping stones to America Vitally located Trans-Saharan R. R., now being rushed to completion across Vichy French territory under German direction. Note the comparative nearness of the railway's southern terminus, Dakar, to Brazil. Dakar, already surrounded by Axis-staffed and equipped air fields, is a stepping stone to the Americas, only half the distance from Natal that German bases in France are from N. Y.

Mussolini's "Hands Across the Sea"—Actual picture (above) of Il Duce, the Axis stooge, shaking hands with Hitler's master mind, von Epp, in Munich.

Gen. von Epp lecturing in the Nazis' School of Colonial Administration from which he sent thousands of Germans to Africa as "farmers" and "merchants."

By Pierre J. Huss

Author of the Best Seller, "The Foe We Face," Distinguished Journalist who was the last U. S. Correspondent to Interview Hitler.

AFRICA is the most glittering potential jewel in the diadem of Nazi world rule that the one-time housepainter of Vienna has sketched upon a drawing-board for his sometime wearing. Like the football quarterback who sneaks under the opposing line, most of the Nazi scheming there has been overlooked until lately.

This might well have proved fatal to a United Nations High Command less appreciative of the fact that the hysterical little man with the unruly forelock is an entirely too able bidder for Napoleonic glory to overlook this great and teeming continent and its stepping stones to America. In his map, Africa and India hold between them the key to world empire. Long years ago he laid his plans to place his hands upon them.

Virtually a decade of half-starved and Gestapo-hounded work as an American correspondent in the streamlined, suspicious and shifty-eyed Berlin that Hitler calls his capital but avoids as much as is expedient, placed me in a position to study at first hand Hitler's blueprint for hoped-for victory against the decent world. I saw and studied the schools of colonial development and administration, which the party opened before the Nazi government had any colonies. Conversations with many persons high in the councils of the Nazi overlord, and covert glimpses into the secret books of the German long-range planners made it obvious to me long ago that Africa was of primary interest to them.

Col. Gen. Franz Ritter von Epp, who was such a good Nazi that even his old-school aristocratic background was not a handicap in the Party, became the coach and quarterback of Hitler's African team. Von Epp was a rapidly-rising official in Africa at the time of the last war and probably would have become governor-general of all Kaiser Wilhelm's colonies had not the Germans lost. As it worked out, his years there only prepared him to be an instrument in more grandiose German schemes in Africa.

Von Epp, who has been called the "uncrowned king of Bavaria"—a highly-esteemed title when it is considered that Nazidom grew to power in Munich and Nuremburg—framed the plea with which Nazi Germany first endeavored to regain her African colonies lost in the last war.

The German system is nothing if not thorough. Just as there were schools for future "Gauleiters" actually trained for governmental duties over such far-flung objectives as Glasgow, Scotland, and Dallas, Texas, and schooled in the idiom as well as the geography of their selected domains for the future, a university of African administration operated from the first days of Hitler's power.

Young men selected for their administrative abilities were put through the difficult curriculum of dealing with aboriginal natives, of training them in German ways and drilling them in subservience to Hitler's creed. The young men were taught the languages of the African veldts and jungles. They were inoculated against tropical diseases and hardened to equatorial existence.

They were told, these earnest students of Hitler's school for conquest, to insure that there would be local assistance wherever Hitler's armies sought to plant the swastika in the Dark Continent. The German Fifth Column has long been active in South Africa, where the Swastika was raised in some small villages as the symbol of the "great liberator."

The Nazis placed their hopes and emphasis upon the mysticism and superstition of the African natives. In many remote outposts where no written word is ever read and no sound heard save native mumbo-jumbo and the pulsating beat of jungle drums, the Germans have transmuted the crooked cross of Hitlerism into the advance agent of a white voodoo god who someday will appear to cure their ills, solve all their troubles and lift them at last from the "yoke of bondage."

The Kaiser's Reich habitually sent its least favored sons out to Africa to undertake the task of government. Titled, ne'er-do-wells, aristocrats in disfavor, courtiers who should have been in jail for manslaughter or seduction, or mere high-born misfits who were in the way were given jobs as administrators in German East or Southwest Africa or the Cameroons. It was one of this breed, the infamous Dr. Hermann Klaatsch, who came up with the idea that forever more will make the mere name of German colonials stink in the nostrils of natives the world around.

He adduced the proposal, unparalleled before or since, that male gorillas be mated with native African women to produce a race of half-human slaves, psuedo-men that would work uncomplainingly by the hour, untiring, unrewarded, just as the Nazis of today wish their vanquished to be.

The Germans of today are a good deal more practical. And there is one thing to remember. Hitler is out for all or nothing. Africa can well be a great big trump in his grand-slam bid for all.

Hollywood notebook

By Ann Marsters

Hollywood's current selection as No. 1 up-and-coming star is vivacious Mona Maris above, who portrays an Axis agent in MGM's spy thriller, "Pacific Rendezvous." Mona is one of few in Hollywood today who fits the term "exotic."

- Not long ago, Ruth Hussey's bridegroom, Robert Longenecker, clipped a picture out of a magazine and wrote under it: "Here's the girl I'd like to marry." The picture was of Ruth Hussey, whom, at that time, he had never met. The date was February 6, 1942. The other day he added another line to the clipping: "Here's the girl I DID marry—August 9, 1942."

- Want to know the difference between a sarong and a lurong? Well, a sarong starts about here and goes around to here, and then over to about there. A lurong starts away back here and swirls over and around to there—and it has Hedy Lamarr inside it. It has, anyway, in "White Cargo."

- Director Mal St. Clair had a chauffeur-butler named Wonderful Smith. Now Wonderful is an actor. St. Clair gave him a major comedy role in "Over My Dead Body." He also gave his blonde and vivacious secretary, Jill Warren, a role in the same picture.
- They are saying that Jimmy Ritz, recently divorced, will soon marry young Vivian Blaine, a 20th Century-Fox starlet.
- Sue Carol says the reason she sold husband Alan Ladd's contract to another agent (for $10,000) was that she didn't think domestic bliss would go hand-in-hand with an actor-agent relationship.
- Well, well! Kay Kyser still has his glasses trained on Linda Darnell.
- Remember Bobby Breen, the singing wonder, who lost his movie career when his voice changed? Bobby, now sixteen, will make a brief comeback in Republic's "Johnny Doughboy," Jane Wither's starer, in which he will play himself.
- All the studios are building up their feminine talent roster, preparing for the expected war-time demand for "girl shows." Never before have there been so many lovely young damsels on the contract lists.
- Did you know that Olivia de Havilland can bark like a dog? What's more, she can chirp like a canary! Maybe you have heard her animal imitations on the radio. She does them for the screen in "Princess O'Rourke."

- After 12 years away from pictures, Abdullah is making a comeback. He is a camel, with two humps. Marlene Dietrich rode him in "Morocco." Now, Irene Manning rides him in the "Desert Song." Between appearances, he has been grazing peacefully in the Griffith Park Zoo.
- A tall, handsome young man named Bruce Edwards was an actor's agent until a few days ago. He dropped into RKO with a starlet. They signed Bruce instead.
- Guess what's the number one song hit in England? "Deep in the Heart of Texas!"
- "Twitterpated" is a new adjective. It means lovesick, and you hear it in "Bambi." In one sequence, the entire cast becomes twitterpated.
- Junior Romance Dept.—Charles Chaplin, Jr., and Patricia Tierney, 16-year-old sister of Gene Tierney. They've gone dancing together three times in a row.
- Dorothy Lamour took a short vacation at the beach—and she was armed with a color chart supplied by her studio. The chart fixed the shade of sunburn beyond which she was ordered not to go.
- Jack Dempsey, Gene Tunney and Joe Louis will appear together in a short subject for the Army entitled, "Champions Train Champions."
- With Oleg Cassini in the Coast Guard, Gene Tierney is going around with sister Patricia and her 16-year-old friends.
- On the set of "Flesh and Fantasy," Charles Boyer celebrated his birthday by lifting an extra from the ranks and spotting him in a choice scene with himself and Barbara Stanwyck. Boyer, you should know, is co-producer of the picture, which is why he happened to have sufficient authority to extend the helping hand.
- Brian Donlevy is riding high, these days, what with "Wake Island," "The Glass Key" and "Clear for Action" under his belt. He finds himself in more demand by the studios than at any other time in his career.
- In order to deliver Henry Fonda to the Navy on time, 20th Century-Fox had to move up the production schedule of "The Immortal Sergeant" by several weeks. Fonda goes on active duty Nov. 1.

Ida Lupino

★Ida Lupino has interested her studio in a story written by her father, Stanley Lupino, just before his death. It's a tale of father and daughter and their adventures on the stage. Ida hopes that she and Monte Woolley will appear in it. Right now, she is co-starring with Woolley in "Life Begins at 8:30."

Kurowski's Homer in Ninth With Mate on Gives Cards World Series Title Over Yanks

Johnny Beazley Wins Second Game of Series Holding Yanks to Seven Hits

SCORE IS 4-2

(By GAYLE TALBOT)
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 6. (AP)—If it were not for the probability that the war will break it up, the St. Louis Cardinals Club that wrecked the Yankees might within the next few years go tearing on to win ranking with the greatest teams in baseball history.

It is a son-of-a-gun of a baseball club—much better than anyone suspected even when it was running wild in the closing stages of the National League race. There is no team in either league at this time with anything approaching the all-around punch, pitching and polish of the New World Champions.

On the off chance that somebody might think we are going overboard on the bold young men of Manager Billy Southworth, a few figures might be in order:

Through yesterday's deciding game at the stadium, which was won by 4-2 on a two-run homer by George Kurowski, Rookie third baseman, in the ninth inning, the Cardinals won 47 of their last 57 contests in the 1942 season. That comes to an altudinous winning average of .824 down the stretch.

They slugged and slashed their way to victory in their last six straight games in the league race, paused only to drop the opening World Series game in St. Louis, and then battered the Yankees into submission in four straight. Sometime, some team might have set a record that looks comparable in print, but forgive us if we doubt that the competition was as tough as that bowled over by the Cardinals in their amazing drive to the top.

A Baseball Treat

With all due respect for Brooklyn Dodgers it would have been a shame if the Cards' sensational charge had fallen short of the National League pennant and they had not played in the series. Two capacity crowds in St. Louis and three vast gatherings of nearly 70,000 here would have been deprived of a baseball treat to be treasured.

It is doubtful the Dodgers could have beaten the Yankees. They lacked pitching. As the series unfolded it became obvious that the Cardinals not only had all the dash and color which had become their hallmark, but that they also possessed great pitching in quantity. Mort Cooper, their biggest winner, was slugged from the box twice by the Yanks, yet they had the men who could take up the slack in Johnny Beazley, Ernie White and Max Lanier.

Beazley, the solemn 23-year-old rookie from Nashville, who defeated the Yankees in the second game to square the series and then came back to clinch the championship yesterday, probably deserved to be called the series hero. He pitched two great games and showed an astonishing store of poise for a youngster. Men in his league who declared all season that he was the finest first-year pitcher since Grover Cleveland Alexander were not far wrong.

Studded with Heroes

But the Cardinals' line-up was studded with heroes. It strictly was a team victory they scored over the Yankees. Take Kurowski, the rookie third sacker from Reading, Pa. His game-winning blow yesterday was little more important than the triple he smacked in the second game to drive in a run and throw the Yankees into a tantrum of umpire-baiting from which they never recovered.

Or Terry Moore, the team's great captain and centre-fielder. In the course of the series he made two of the most spectacular catches ever seen on any field to stifle Yankee rallies and generally lent support to the claim of his admirers that he is the equal of Joe DiMaggio. He at least wrestled DiMaggio to a clean draw in the play-off. He singled and later scored the sixth-inning run that tied the count at 2-2 yesterday and set the stage for Kurowski's winning wallop.

Or Enos Slaughter, who saved two games with marvellous plays, one a dead-eye Dick peg to third base from right field and the other a leaping catch of what should have been a home run by Charley Keller.

Yesterday, to top off his fine performance, he slugged a fourth-inning home run into the deep right field stands off Red Ruffing to equalize a four-bagger with which little Phil Rizzuto had greeted Beazley in the opening round.

Cooper Outstars Dickey

And then there was White, the southpaw, who blanked the Yankees 2-0 in the third game; and Walker Cooper, who outstarred Bill Dickey behind the plate throughout the series, climaxing his efforts with a snap peg that caught Joe Gordon off second base and choked of a threatening Yankee rally in the ninth inning yesterday.

And Marty Marion, the towering Cardinal shortstop who was brilliant in every game, and Jimmy Brown and Johnny Hopp and Stan Musial. Each contributed exactly the right amount to the triumph. For the most part, they did not display the distance hitting qualities of the Yankees, but each of them seemed to hit or come up with a great play when it was needed most. Collectively they gave an exhibition to be remembered.

As for the Yankees, they simply ran into a bunch of game, hard-fighting, hungry youngsters who had their number. After they won the second game at St. Louis, the Cardinals actually believed they would take three straight at the stadium here, and said so. Those of us who heard them thought it merely was youthful exuberance. We didn't quite know the Cardinals—then.

The most inexplicable collapse of the classic was contributed by Joe Gordon, the Yank second baseman. Hero of the '41 series, when he practically beat Brooklyn single-handed, Gordon made only two hits in 21 times at bat against Cardinal pitching and didn't shine particularly in the field. He and Phil Rizzuto did not make their first double play until the final game, whereas they stymied Brooklyn with seven a year ago.

Rizzuto Yankee Hero

Little Rizzuto played the best all-around game for the Yanks, hammering eight hits in the five games and fielding cleverly all the way.

A world series always has to provide one good opportunity for the second-guessers to ply their trade and this was no exception. Last night and today the men who have had years of experience in managing from the grand stand were demanding to know why Joe McCarthy, the Yankees' pilot, permitted Ruffing to pitch to Kurowski in yesterday's ninth inning. They would have walked him without a second thought.

The situation was this: Cooper had opened the inning with a single and had been sacrificed to second by Hopp. Coming up was Kurowski, who earlier in the game had slammed a long one into the left field stands that sailed foul only by a few feet. In other words, Kurowski was in a nasty mood.

Following Kurowski was Marty Marion, a very inconspicuous hitter, and the pitcher, Beazley. By walking Kurowski, the Yanks would have set up the making of a double play, insisted the men who have made a study of such situations. But what, they moaned, did McCarthy do but pitch to Kurowski, with the results aforementioned.

Incidentally, after Kurowski's looper had disappeared into the haze and fallen among the fans in the left field stands, Marion and Beazley both popped out.

JOHNNY BEAZLEY READY TO QUIT TWO YEARS AGO

Had Sore Back but After Tonsils Removed He Became Great Hurler

23 YEARS OLD

By JUDSON O'QUINN
Associated Press Sports Writer

New Orleans, Oct. 6 — (AP) — Johnny Beazley was about ready to quit baseball two years ago after three seasons as a bush leaguer whose back hurt every time he cut loose with his fast one.

"I took him to a doctor," Charles A. Kurth, business manager of New Orleans' Southern Association club related today, "and the Doc said if he would have his tonsils out, he'd be fit as a fiddle."

That's just what he did, and the Doc was right.

"I got my biggest baseball thrill," said ex-boss Kurth, "as I sat in St. Louis and watched the rookie beat the Yankees in the second game of the world series. When in trouble, ice water really flowed in his veins.

"Then I got my second biggest thrill yesterday as he polished off New York again to clinch the world series for the Cardinals. It was some performance for a major league freshman."

Beazley, now 23, started with Lexington in the Kitty League in 1937, but was unimpressive in two victories and five defeats. The next year he went to Greenville, Miss., in the Cotton States loop where he won two and lost four before finishing at Abbeville, La., in the class D Evangeline circuit.

The big right hander lost six and won eight at Abbeville and then was taken on by New Orleans in 1939, but went back to his Nashville, Tenn., home with a sore back—out all season. The next year he was optioned to Columbus, Ga., and won five and lost three before packing again for home with his back ailment.

The latter part of 1940 he hurled four victories and lost two for Mobile, Ala., but he still complained of his back.

This is where Kurth, who had picked him up for a song, stepped in. Beazley came back from his operation to win 16 and lose 12 for New Orleans, with an earned run average of 3.61 last season.

The Cardinals grabbed him. And they were right, too.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By CHARLES EDWARDS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Oct. 6 — (CP) — When Torchy Peden and Cy Bergna, his Paterson, N. J. partner, won the six-day cycle grind at Montreal Saturday night the average sports page reader probably passed over the item with a casual, "I see Peden won another."

The big Victoria redhead has been the man to beat in bike races for so long that even some Canadian fans, who should be mighty proud of him, had taken to sighs of satisfaction when a darkhorse rider led the field. Now Torchy is a shipyards worker with the war effort on his mind and may race no more. Who knows, there may be no more six-day grinds for the duration. At any rate Torchy is getting on and the bike marathoner can't last forever.

Peden made himself an internationally famous figure. Fifteen years ago he was an enthusiastic kid pushing his racing bike over Vancouver Island roads in early mornings. He went to the 1928 Olympic games at Amsterdam and, although he wasn't on hand when they passed out the medals, he determined to plant his name on the sports records as a champion and he did.

Torchy stopped off at many Canadian cities en route back to Victoria from the Olympics. He wasn't brazen about it but he made sure that sports editors in leading newspapers saw his press clippings. Torchy was going places and he wanted to be sure they had his background straight. Then he went back to Victoria and resumed training.

When big Red was ready he moved to the professional circuit and was a sensation almost from the start. He left many of the big names in a trail of burning rubber and Victoria suddenly realized it had given forth a champion. Victoria, all Canada in fact, became six-day conscious. If the enthusiasm waned a bit it was not Peden's fault for, witness last week's grind, he is still tops. And when he decides permanently to do his sleeping other than in trackside bunks, Canada may well spare a thought for the man who put her on wheels and carried her to the sport centres of the world.

World Series Notes

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 6—(AP)—Wrapping up the World Series for another year, and possibly longer: It was a long time coming, but the world champion St. Louis Cardinals finally accomplished what many were advocating years ago—"Break up the Yankees."

If you're wondering why manager Joe McCarthy didn't order Whitey Kurowski passed intentionally in the ninth inning yesterday, with only one out, a man on second and two weak hitters coming up, remember that this same Kurowski fanned the first three times he faced Red Ruffing in the opening game. . . . When Kurowski socked his game—winning homer, McCarthy probably was wondering the same thing. . . . The bat he used to sew up the series was the only one Kurowski brought from St. Louis, his others having been broken in the regular season. . . He wouldn't let any of his mates use it in batting practice and after the game he refused to let it out of his sight.

The Yankees relied entirely on right-handed pitching, marking the first time since 1922, when they also did it, that a team has gone through a world series without pitching a left-hander.

Long after the mighty throng had poured from the stadium following yesterday's final contest, a lone figure emerged and trudged slowly along the steet, tired and forlorn in the gathering dusk. . . . A small boy ran up to him, holding out a program. . . . The man stopped and autographed it for the lad. . . . "Who's that?" inquired another youngster who had watched the procedure. . . . "Joe McCarthy," replied the young autograph seeker. . . McCarthy smiled as the sports writers walked up to extend their condolences. . . . "It ain't so bad," said the manager of the beaten Yankees; "they still want my autograph."

MAXIE BERGER WINS DECISION

Montreal Welterweight Shows Some of Old-Time Skill

New York, Oct. 6 —(CP)— Maxie Berger, 148¾, Montreal, won an eight-round decision over Gene Johnson, 144¼, in the main event in a boxing show at St. Nicholas Palace last night.

Berger, staging a ring comeback, showed little of his old boxing form but still piled up enough points to take the decision by winning five of the eight rounds. The New Yorker lost the fourth round for a low blow. A crowd of 2,500 witnessed the bouts.

Johnny Beazley started out as an amateur boxer and won three fights in a Nashville Golden Gloves tournament before his mother made him quit. . . . He's still a pretty good fighter on the mound.

One of The Burns Boys

Jake Burns, the 238 pound-Omaha, Neb., wrestler and nephew of the once famous "Farmer" Burns, who also came out of the farm districts of Nebraska. Burns, and his brother George, both recently were introduced to Canadian wrestling audiences for the first time and neither has been defeated since entering the Dominion. There are five brothers, all wrestlers of note, in the present-day Burns' wrestling troupe.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 6—You'd be surprised at how many folks hereabouts think they won't have another chance to see a World Series for a long time. . . . Maybe that explains those tremendous crowds at the Stadium—and the polite handclapping that greeted each Yank as he made his first appearance at the plate yesterday. . . . The fans seemed to be saying: "Well, we won't be seeing you again, but you were good guys when you had it." . . . Probably half of each squad will be in the armed forces before another season, but Whitey Kurowski's trick arm likely will keep him out. . . It won't make the Yankees any happier if they have to meet him another time. . . . Come to think perts polled by the A. P. before kids ought to make ball players when they grow up.

Expert opinion:

Looks as if old Mike Gonzales was the champion series forecaster. . . . He said: "Maybe we lose one, maybe two, but no more." . . . This department hit the number of games right on the nose—but had the wrong team and plenty of company in picking the Yanks. . . . Only five of the ex- of it, those 23-year-old Cardinal the series named the Cards and no one said fewer than six games for them.

TORONTO SECURES CASH FOR DRILLON

Coach "Hap" Day Says There Were No Players Involved in Deal

Toronto, Oct. 6—(CP) — Coach Clarence (Happy) Day of Toronto Maple Leafs announced here today that Gord Drillon, the club's high-scoring right winger, had been sold to Montreal Canadiens "in a straight cash deal involving no other players."

Day, who negotiated the deal, would give no indication of the amount of money Leafs got for their one-time star, who fell into disfavor with the Leaf management during the Stanley Cup final against Detroit Red Wings last spring.

GORDON DRILLON

"I don't know where that yarn started," Day commented on a report that Canadiens would send several young players to the Leafs in exchange for Drillon, 27-year-old veteran of five seasons with the Leafs.

Drillon led the league in scoring in the 1939-1940 season and formed one of the most productive goal-getting duos in the league along with centre Syl Apps. But he was put on the market immediately after the Stanley Cup final and it had been known Canadiens had the inside track on the deal.

EACH CARDINAL GETS $6,192 AS WINNING SHARE

Team Leaving Stadium Takes Subway Instead of Taxis

REALLY HAPPY

(By SID FEDER)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Oct. 6. (AP) — A bunch of St. Louis Cardinals came bustling out of Yankee stadium, still boisterous at winning the World Series, brushed off the cab drivers and headed for the subway and the nickel ride back to their hotel.

That is as good a way as any of leading into the possibility that all that "gallantry" and "gameness" of the crashhouse gang came from that $6,192.50 waiting for each player at the finish of the 1942 series— and the Cards are a lean, hungry team.

This, incidentally, is not trying to take a thing away from the running Redbirds. They hit when they had to. They ran when it counted.

Reports are that the top-priced player on the young St. Louis outfit draws down in the neighborhood of $10,000. This would be Terry Moore, the ghost of centre field, who not only can—but does—catch everything within nine miles of him.

On the other hand, the Yankees are the highest priced club in baseball, with a payroll estimated at $600,000 a year. Their average salary is somewhere near $10,000.

Of course, it's true that at contract time last Spring there were only two or three really established stars on the Cardinal roster and Lone Warneke, who was one of them, was sold during the year.

But there was more than $6,000 waiting for each winner in this series and around $4,000 for the loser. The Cardinals absolutely burst into flame for that kind of money.

When you come right down to it the Yankees outhit the Cards for the five game set, the Bombers' pitching wasn't so bad although they had no left hander and defensively the Yanks committed only five errors to ten for the Cards.

Where was the difference? You might ask the guys who make up the payrolls on the two clubs about that.

CASUAL COMMENT
by K.J.C.

Truer words were never uttered—"Youth will be served" and that's why the St. Louis Cardinals are world's baseball champions today. The team, inspired by their manager Billie Southworth, started a drive for that covetted honor on Aug. 4th last and they weren't to be denied or defeated as the youthful Cardinals displayed courage and actually beat the great Yankees at their own game and at every turn. After losing the first game the fighting Cardinals came back to win four in a row and yesterday's heroes were 22-year-old Pitcher Johnny Beazley, who chalked up his second win over the Yankees, being the first rookie pitcher to win two series games since the day of Grover Alexander, while to share the limelight was "Whitey" Kurowski, the Cards' third sacker, who came through with a ninth inning two-run circuit blow that proved the million-dollar hit of the series. The 1942 St. Louis Cardinals will go down in history as one of the greatest fighting teams in baseball, equalling, if not surpassing, the efforts of the 1914 Boston Braves. However, much credit must go to Manager Billie Southworth for the confidence in his players and his ability to impart that confidence and instill it into his St. Louis Cardinals — 1942 world champions.

When the St. Louis Cardinals clinched the National League pennant on the final day of the 1942 season by beating the Chicago Cubs, it was the second time in their six flag victories that they copped the flag on the closing day. They also won in 1934, when Dizzy Dean blanked the Reds to assure victory, while the New York Giants lost to Brooklyn.

There have been other memorable first-place clinchers on the last day of the season. In 1904, a wild pitch by Happy Jack Cheshro, 41-game winner of the New York Highlanders, sent across a run in the ninth inning of the first game of the October 10 twin-bill, giving Boston a 3 to 2 victory and the American League flag.

In 1908, on the final day in the west, Detroit defeated Chicago to capture the flag by four points over Cleveland, which was two points ahead of the White Sox. Had the Sox won from Detroit, they would have taken the pennant.

In the same year, the New York Giants tied the Chicago Cubs for the National League pennant by defeating the Boston Braves on the final day of the regular season, October 7, and the playoff of the famous Merkle tie of September 23 was staged on October 8, the Cubs winning to clinch the championship.

Remember when the old adage—"they don't come back" proved right once more at New York ten years ago tonight when Jimmy McLarnin, the Vancouver Irishman, scored a six-round technical knockout over aged Benny Leonard, ruler of the lightweight division in the early 20's and one of the greatest boxers of all time? Leonard absorbed a terrific beating before the bout was finally halted by the referee.

Belleville rugby football fans may yet see the odd game of their favorite sports diversion. F/O Alex Munro, in charge of sports at No. 5 ITS., has organized a football squad and the Flyers will get their initial gridiron test at Port Hope on Saturday when they play an exhibition game versus the Trinity College seniors. However, the local "Flyers" are in need of football pants and pads and any persons desiring to loan such equipment to the No. 5 ITS. squad for the fall period should contact F/O Munro, phone 2680. If the future looks at all brilliant for football at the Initial Training School here, exhibition games may be played at the Exhibition Park and the district fans treated to the odd gridiron tussle.

Most wrestling fans have heard of the Dusek brothers, four in all, collectively known as Iowa Wildcats. It has long been a wrestling promoter's dream to get the four Duseks into the same ring versus four opponents on the same card, but to date it has only been wishful thinking and ballyhoo for publicity. Another family name has recently been introduced to Canadian wrestling fans in the persons of Jake and George Burns, nephews of the great "Farmer" Burns, world's heavyweight wrestling champion of another era. The Burns brothers have already shown their ring wares at the Hume Arena and proved highly popular grapplers. However, now we hear there are five Burns boys, all natives of Nebraska, the state where wrestlers are born and the cradle of modern grappling. The Burns boys appear here tomorrow night on a three-bout all-star Queensbury A. C. card headed by a bout between Earl McCready and Ali Adali, the Terrible Turk, for the only sports program of the week.

THIS AND THAT—HERE'S A case where figures don't exactly reveal the truth....and there's no attempt to alibi for the Yankees at any stage....In the complete composite box score of the world series the Yankees collected 44 base knocks to the Cardinals 39....The Yankees had six two base knocks to the Cards' three, but Billie Southworth's champions banged out two three base hits while the dethroned Yanks failed to register even one—that's a figure to remember—....when it came to circuit blows the Yanks bested the 1942 champs three to two....However, when the chips were down the Cardinals showed the way in runs batted in—and they really count in the final analysis—These figures show the Cards' batters knocked in 23 runs, while the Yankees only registered 14 runs batted in....The Cards had a series batting average of .239, while the Yanks whacked the ball for a composite average of .247....Despite the superb fielding of the new champs., the Yankees outfielded the Cards....Well, at least they had less errors and the fielding percentages were Cards .947; Yanks .973....Now for the pay off—The Cardinals collected $6,192.50 each and they won't have to worry about shovelling coal this winter with such hay ....The Yankees took $3,351.76 each and a crying towel....When Rizzuto belted his first inning homer yesterday it was one-fourth of his entire four-bagger production of the entire 1942 season.....Hitting home runs in the clutch is nothing to "Whitey" Kurowski.....After all he hit a round-tripper on Sept. 12th to help put the Cards into a tie with the Dodgers in the National League race. ..Hats off to rookie Johnny Beazley, after all freshmen hurlers don't like that too often....Ask any of 'em, except Grover Cleveland Alexander...Next year?—watch St Louis, but in another league.

A complete steel plant that eventually will have an annual output of 2,000,000 tons is being constructed in the Union of South Africa.

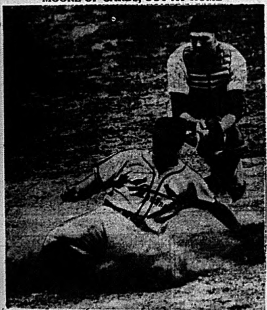
MAYBE THIS HELPED

Johnny Beasley freshman pitching phenom of the National league, gets mother Sue Beazley's best wishes and a kiss before taking the mound for the St. Louis Cardinals to pitch against the New York Yankees in second game of the World Series at St. Louis, Mo. Maybe this helped — at any rate, Johnny pitched the Cardinals to 4 to 3 victory over the Yankees, the Cards' first win of the World Series.

FIRST BLOOD FOR THE RED BIRDS

Whitey Kurowski of the St. Louis Cardinals is shown crossing home plate in the third inning of the third World Series game with the first run of the game. Whitey had walked, advanced to second on Marion's bunt single, was sacrificed to third by Pitcher White, and scored while Gordon was throwing out Brown The Cards won 2-0.

MOORE OF CARDS, OUT AT HOME



Terry Moore, sterling outfielder of the St. Louis Cardinals, is shown sliding across home plate in the ninth inning of the third game of the World Series in New York Moore was on third base when Hopp hit a fly ball to Keller. He broke home as Keller made the catch but Keller then whipped the ball to Dickey who tagged the sliding Moore on the arm. It looks as though Moore is safe but the umpire said Dickey had put the ball on him in time. The speed boys from St. Louis ran the bases in true Redbird fashion and eked out a 2-0 victory over the Yankees behind the six-hit pitching of Ernie White.

"The Hurricane"

Acting in a South Sea Island picture is no job for a "softie," Dorothy Lamour and Jon Hall will testify.

Even before the big climax which gives its name to Samuel Goldwyn's production of "The Hurricane," was reached, Dorothy and Jon, who are playing the native heroine and hero of the film at the Capital theatre, took plenty of physical punishment.

Walking barefoot over pebbly beaches and jagged rocks, being drenched by cold water from dawn till dusk and having 80 mile an hour gales whipped into their faces by batteries of wind machines were just their routine hardships. Each day brought some special ordeal as a torturing under-water swim in a Mediterranean cavern or a fall from a cocanut palm tree.

"The First Commando"

One of the best war films to come out of England is "The First Commando" which opens next at the McCarthy theatre.

The story of "The First Commando" opens in England just previous to the fall of France. In a large English factory the foreman is getting worried because there are three very vital and secret machines on loan to a factory in a small French town, and he thinks they are in danger.

His fears are not shared by his superiors, and he becomes tangled in endless government red tape when he attempts to do something through those channels. However, he is so convinced that he is right that he takes matters into his own hands, crosses to France and starts for the town where the precious machines are. By now the Germans are sweeping across demoralized Northern France. His train is stopped at a station and abandoned. He seeks aid from the station master, takes a bicycle and continues on his way. The station agent is a fifth columnist and telephones ahead to another traitor, the mayor of the town where the machinery is, in an effort to thwart the Englishman. Arriving at the town, the foreman discovers it has been evacuated, except—for a young American girl, secretary at the factory, who is busy destroying documents. The mayor arrives to grab the machine for the oncoming Nazis, but the foreman and the girl succeed in rescuing them with the help of two soldiers who are lost with a military lorry. The quartette start across France, soon become involved with hordes of refugees who choke the roads leading south. Low-flying planes machine-gun the refugees. A number is killed, leaving several orphans behind, so they are added to the passengers of the truck.

From then on the film tells of the wild ride across France, dodging the invading Germans, until the little group reaches the coast. All of which makes a moving and thrilling adventure.

You are urged to see "The First Commando" because, first of all, it's a swell adventure story and secondly, because it is a very sincere story which never reverts to sensationalism. The story, by the way, is true, being based on just such a venture undertaken by an English foreman named Melbourne Johns. J. B. Priestly wrote the story after the exploits of Mr. Johns had brought him considerable fame in the British press.

The above review on "The First Commando" was written by Roly Young, and he rates the picture five stars.

In addition to "The First Commando" the laugh hit "Dudes Are Pretty People" staring Jimmy Rogers (son of Will Rogers), Noah Beery, Jr., Marjorie Woodworth, Russell Gleason and Marjorie Gateson, will be presented at the McCarthy.

AT THE BELLE

"Holiday Inn"

A combination of talent to tickle the entertainment palate of any and every movie-goer is now offered by the Belle theatre where Irving Berlin's "Holiday Inn" is the outstanding feature attraction.

Produced and directed by Mark Sandrich for Paramount, "Holiday Inn" features eleven brand new Irving Berlin tunes, sung and danced by Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire, the two top song-and-dance men of our times. For the first time Astaire has two dancing partners in one picture—beauteous Marjorie Reynolds and Virginia Dale, both of whom Astaire claims are "Easy to Dance With." ("You're Easy to Dance With" is one of the eleven songs in the picture.)

The story is something entirely off the beaten musical track. Crosby converts his farmhouse into an inn which is open only on holidays when he puts on shows to entertain patrons. He is assisted by lovely Marjorie Reynolds whom Astaire is anxious to acquire for his dancing partner. Between shows Bing indulges in some hilariously tricky attempts to keep Marjorie and Fred from each other.

Many of the nation's favorite holidays are celebrated at "Holiday Inn" with Bing singing and Astaire dancing in musical production numbers that are a delight to eye and ear. It's an entertainment bull's-eye from start to finish! Walter Abel is also in the cast.

The Belle Latest News from home and abroad and a clever cartoon precede the feature attraction.

CHAPTER 12

MISFORTUNE

Stephen Larrabee was still a good-looking young man, obviously unaware of his good looks, who crossed meticulously and who was charmingly shy with Judith. While Max made her feel young and inexperienced, Stephen, by his self-consciousness he tried to hide along with his touchingly apparent wish to be liked, made her feel older and self-assured.

By his sweet agreeableness he misrepresented himself she thought dancing with him on the crowded floor of one of Clinton's few night clubs that Christmas night with Harriet and Larry, too exhausted to dance after a strenuous day with their children, sat at a table and pretended they were enjoying themselves.

For Stephen's sweet agreeableness masked the real Stephen who was ambitious and smart in business and unusually well informed on current affairs. Talking to Larry on the latter as they had ridden to the club, a conversation which temporarily excluded the sisters, Judith had found him a young man who could see an idea thru' to its destination, that he was intensely interested in the worlds of politics and business and that he was, strangely enough, rather a hard-bitten realist on the outcome of what was then called the international situation.

Larry had nodded his acquiescence and Harriet, impressed, had ceased to talk about her boys. To Judith it seemed a pity that Stephehn Larrabee, when he was with a girl, preferred the comfortable role of the rubber-stamp.

Frowning, Stephen glanced at his watch. "Have to keep your train time in mind," and glanced quickly down at her. "Not that I want you to do . . . I wish you didn't live so far away. I was in New York a couple of weeks ago and I got as far as looking you up in the telephone directory. But I thought probably you were busy and—"

"And what did you do instead of calling me?"

He laughed. "I walked from my hotel to Times Square and somehow lost my sense of direction and had to ask a cop how to get back to my hotel . . ."

"Was that all?"

"All. I had to have a clear head for Philadelphia the next day." Then he said, "Here goes my elbow out so that some of these dopes will run into it instead of you . . ."

"I ride on the subway, remember."

"And Clinton is a small, one-horse town to you, isn't it? You wouldn't ever be satisfied to live here again, would you?"

"I doubt it. I—I don't know where I'm going from New York, Stephen." Wherever Max goes if that's the end of the world. "My hat is jabbing your chin."

"I don't mind."

"But I do. Let's go back to the table."

x x

The station in Clinton was old an drab and cold. A few nondescript persons waited patiently and silently for the train that would arrive with the next minute, their weary eyes turning occasionally to the four young people, their ears gladly picking up their youthful talk and laughter.

"Come home soon," Harriet said. Her voice was hoarse, her eye-lids heavy as she stood shivering in the thin black cloth coat that had not stretched with her maturing figure. The veil of her small, made-over hat was awry. "See what you can do about bringing her home more often, Steve. You're on our side, aren't you?"

"Now you've put me on the spot." He towered above the others, the color rising in his smooth cheeks. But his eyes were for Judith alone, seeing no fault in the slim-clad figure and the smart little black hat that had jabbed him uncomfortably in the chin while they had danced.

Larry, very solicitous after his angry outburst of last night, said, "Thanks for the swell gifts, Judith. Gosh, the children were crazy about theirs."

Outside beside the tracks she embraced Harriet and Larry, and when she turned to Stephen, Larry said "haven't you a kiss for him, too."

Why not? She felt reckless, festive, happy, thinking of Mav. As the train stopped and the nondescript persons moved towards it, she turned, smiling, to Stephen. But his arms inside his great brown coat did not receive her. They took her with strength and with eagerness. The kiss was his also, brief, hard on her mouth, a little awkward. A moment, only a moment while Harriet and Larry laughed and she pulled herself away from that strong, possessive embrace and ran.

How silly, how perfectly absurd, kissing Stephen Larrabee good-bye .. she thought, "he kissed me. He didn't want me to go. He's sweet. Another Christmas .. where shall I be next Christmas? With Max .. oh, I'm so happy and fortunate."

Emily had not come home. No doubt she had stayed in Connecticut and would go directly to the office this morning, without first coming home. Judith went quickly about the business of unpacking her bag, taking a shower, preparing breakfast and making plans for the week. Would there be a letter from Max when she came home tonight? Would he say when he was returning? The office, her office, would be hectic after the Christmas mess. But the cruise season would begin soon, and it would be a relief to draw slim, abbreviated bathing suits and tailored slack suits after months of afternoon frocks.

The ringing of the telephone took her quickly to the bedroom. Max? The phone had not rung since a night in October that she had not first asked herself if it could be he.

"Judith?" It was Tim.

"Yes, Tim . . ."

"Lord, I'm glad you're back. I hate to shock you but—but Emily's in the hospital. We rushed her in last night and they operated immediately. Appendix. I've been here all night. She's asleep. Still knocked out, in fact. The doctor said it was a pretty nasty case. Poor kid. She was a lot more worried about breaking up the family party than about herself. But she was awfully game. There's nothing you can do. She has a special, but if you could come up on your lunch hour, maybe she'll be awake by then."

Judith felt genuinely shocked and unnerved as a score of thoughts flew through her mind. Emily's mother must be notified. How loyal Tim was to a girl who had never wanted to give him a moment's concern! She saw them riding through the night, Emily brave despite the pain, perhaps joking, but all the while suffering a mental anguish greater than her physical pain because she has disrupted the Stevens' family party. And Emily had no money, she was certain. Emily, always thrifty until she met Tim, had had to buy too many dresses and hats.

"I'll go at noon, of course, Tim. I'm awfully glad you were with her when it happened. I'll wire her mother . . . call her office."

"Thanks. I'm leaving now. I've got to grab some breakfast and a shave and get some sleep." He gave a brief chuckle. "I think I know what it means to be a father now. You know, pacing up and down the hospital corridor. Don't worry. She'll be okay."

"I'll take charge. I'll call Phyllis, too. Good-bye, Tim."

Phyllis' phone rang several minutes before she said a lazy, scarcely audible, "Hello . . ."

Judith told her quickly.

Phyllis yawned. "Oh, isn't it dreadful! Poor Emily."

"I'd like you to stay with her today, Phyllis."

"Today? Oh, Judith, I can't! I I don't see how I possibly can. Not today! I'd love to but . . . I'll go tomorrow."

Why couldn't she go today? What was more important than Emily's knowing she was not alone?

"Ames and I will go tonight, Judith."

"All right. Tonight then."

"I'll send her some flowers."

"Not yet. She's too sick to notice them. Good-bye, Phyllis." She put down the phone vigorously. Phyllis couldn't be bothered! How Emily would hurry to her under similar circumstances! But what now for Emily and Tim?

Emily could not give love and laughter or dance in expensive clothes she had not paid for now. What now when Tim, spoiled, restless, must be the "giver" to a pale, large-eyed girl confined to a hospital bed?

Little Benny's Note Book

It got dark earlier than I expected, making me late for supper again, and I was quick hurrying up home and the clock in the jewelry store said half passed six, and I thought, Gosh shang the luck, this makes the 3rd time this week, heck.

And I stopped walking fast and started to run, and the bank clock said 20 minutes to seven, and I thought, Good night how can I help being late when even the clocks cant make up their mind? Good night I bet I'll get heck, I thought.

And I got home out of breath, and pop and ma were half way through already, and they both started to say something at the same time and I quick said, Aw heck what's a use, now everything's probably cold and I'm all hot hurrying.

Well naturally, what do you expect for land sakes? ma said. If you'd only start home in plenty of time like a normal boy you'd be nice and cool and your —dinner would be nice and warm, so whose fault is it for land sakes? she said, and I said, Mine, but good night what good is it knowing that, I mean it only makes my conscience feel worse so all the stuff will probably taste fierce, what there is left of it, all cold and everything, so the big result will be I'll probably get the indigestion so holey smokes what's a use?

Well, there's no dire necessity of sounding so completely overwhelmed and frustrated, I mean after all, ma said, and pop said, Yes, for Peet sake dont take it so hard. With any luck you'll still have 70 or 80 more years before the end of the world as far as you are concerned. The world is full of people who haven't got anything at all to eat at any temperature whatsoever, so sit down and calm yourself and eat your dinner he said.

Allied Bombers Pounce on Convoy

By MURLIN SPENCER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 6 —(AP)— American long-range B-25 bombers heavily attacked a Japanese convoy heading north from Buna yesterday, a headquarters announcement said today, raising the question whether the enemy had attempted to withdraw part of his forces or to land reinforcements for his hard-pressed troops falling back in the Owen Stanley mountains.

The convoy included two destroyers and a large transport. The Japanese vessels apparently had slipped into Buna under cover of darkness and results of the air attack were not observed.

Two formations of B-25's—the type which raided Tokyo—pounced on the convoy. They were met by a flight of six to 12 Japanese Zeroes, three of which were shot down against the loss of one of the attacking bombers.

No Confirmation From Any Source

London, Oct. 6—(CP)—The Rome radio broadcast a special communique today reporting that an Italian submarine put four torpedoes into the bow of a United States battleship of the 33,000-ton Mississippi class in the Atlantic 330 miles off Freetown, West Africa, and that the battleship "was seen sinking."

There was no confirmation from any other source for this claim nor any indication that United States warships were operating in that area. (In Washington, the Navy Department said it had no comment to make on the claim.)

Air Marshal Bishop Returns Home To 'Dawn Patrol' of First Great War

(By LOUIS V. HUNTER)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

With the R. A. F. Somewhere in England, Oct. 6 (C.P. Cable) — Air Marshal W. A. Bishop, V.C., returned home yesterday—home to the old "Dawn Patrol" squadron the Canadian ace formed in the First Great War—and found it "doesn't seem to have changed much" since he last saw it in 1918.

Visibly affected as he stood before a group of young, eager pilots and observers who gathered in the crew room to greet him, Air Marshal Bishop told them: "You don't know what a thrill it gives me to visit this squadron again."

He recalled that Lord Trenchard, who was Chief of Air Staff when he took over in the last war, told him to found the squadron and gave him a free hand in selecting pilots and ground crew.

By coincidence the squadron — an R.A.F. night fighter outfit which has one of the best records of the Fighter Command—is commanded by a Canadian serving in the R.A.F., young Wing Commander Gordon L. Raphael, D. F. C., of Quebec City.

The squadron has destroyed more than 40 enemy aircraft at night in addition to more than 100 it knocked down during the battles of Britain and France when it was flying Hurricane day fighters.

It forms a complete contrast to the old days of SE-5's in the last war when it was world famous under Bishop's leadership as the "Dawn Patrol" squadron.

When the crews asked him if he had any advice to offer, Bishop replied: "All I can say is, and I have said this countless times before but it is still true: get good and close before you open fire. Then let him have it."

From somewhere among the cluster of air crews came the voice of a young red-headed English flight sergeant: "That's right, Sir, but for the love of Mike send us some Huns to shoot at."

"Now I know the squadron's just the same as ever," the Air Marshal smiled.

He inspected the aircraft the squadron now is using and, looking at the multiple cannon and machine-guns said, "My God, I'd like to have a Hun in front of me with that lot."

During the Air Marshal's tour of squadron quarters he found a picture—a copy of a famous oil painting—of himself, hanging over a chair in the wing commander's room.

Souvenirs of the squadron's long and glorious history covered the walls of the adjutant's office where the Air Marshal saw newspaper clippings and pictures of the last war. He saw a picture of his own machine and framed combat reports he had turned in after some of his great victories.

According to an announcement made here yesterday, Flight Lieutenant A. MacLean Haig, has been promoted to the rank of Squadron Leader in the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Squadron Leader Haig is the adjutant of the Trenton Station of the R.C.A.F., and has had considerable experience in administrative work with the air force since his enlistment. He is a former alderman of the city and past-president of the Belleville Rotary Club. Announcement of the promotion was received with acclaim at the meeting of the service club yesterday.

Miss Cora Hind, 81, Newswoman Of Winnipeg, Dies

Winnipeg, Oct. 6 (CP)—Miss Cora Hind, dean of newspaperwomen in Canada and world authority on agriculture and livestock, died today. She suffered a stroke last night.

Miss Hind, who came to Winnipeg in 1882, joined the staff of the Winnipeg Free Press in 1901 as market and agricultural reporter. Within a short time she was named agriculture and commercial editor, a position she held for many years.

She became famous internationally through her accuracy in forecasting Canada's grain crops.

Retired in 1935

Miss Hind, who retired as Free Press agriculture editor in 1935, continued to write a weekly column on western agricultural developments, while she also was active in war work, providing comforts for many newspapermen now overseas with Canada's armed forces.

Born in Toronto, she had been active in newspaper work until her death.

While in Geneva she was called home to write special articles for the Free Press, following the death of King George V. she continued her trip later, visiting South Africa, India, Australia, New Zealand and South America. Miss Hind later visited London during and following the Coronation of King George VI and attended the International Institute of Agriculture in Rome.

Wrote Two Books

On her return from the tour, she again continued her daily office routine. She wrote two books about her tour and it wasn't until 1939, at the age of 79, that she began to show signs of failing health.

Always an active worker with the Canadian Red Cross Society, fellow workers said her thoughts were continually with the organization and with members of the Free Press now serving overseas. She was active —also with Red Cross work during the First Great War.

Miss Hind was the first woman to be given the privilege to enter the trading floor of Winnipeg Grain Exchange during trading sessions and she moved with ease among traders during many hectic hours.

Miss Hind lived for many years in an apartment in the West End of Winnipeg and had no immediate relatives here.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later today.

DEADLINE SET

Toronto, Oct. 6 — (CP) — November 10 has been set by the postal department as the last day for receiving Christmas parcels to soldiers overseas with any hope of delivery by Christmas, officials of the post office here said today.

Aussies Scale Last Steep Grades Leading to Gap

Sydney, Australia, Oct. 7 (Wednesday)—(CP) — Australian troops have scaled the last steep grades leading to the gap through the rugged Owen Stanley mountains in southern New Guinea and there still is no sign of Japanese forces retreating toward their base at Buna, on the island's northeast coast, dispatches from the battlefront said today.

The flight of the Japanese, plus the appearance yesterday of a convoy heading northward from Buna, deepened the mystery over the enemy activity. It still was not clear here whether the convoy, which was attacked by American bombers, had attempted to land reinforcements or was withdrawing enemy forces from southern New Guinea.

It was recalled, however, that the Japanese withdrew from Milne Bay, farther down the southeast New Guinea coast, when they were confronted by overwhelming Allied odds.

Squadron Officers Desire More Recruits For Air Cadet Corps

While the response to the appeal for recruits in the Belleville Squadron of Air Cadets has been more or less satisfactory, there is still plenty of room for more youths between the ages of 15 and 17, Cadet Officers said today.

The squadron is training faithfully every Monday and Thursday evenings at the Collegiate Institute under the expert supervision of R. S. M. Sam Johnson, and his superior officers.

Officers and committee officials feel, that the squadron presents an excellent opportunity for fliers of the future to obtain some very useful training prior to enlistment in the RCAF, although joining the air service at the completion of cadet training is not compulsory.

Many beneficial effects can be obtained through the syllabus of training provided by the Cadets, and officers appeal to all youths who are airminded to any sort of degree to get in touch with them at once.

All information can be received from R. S. M. Johnson, or cadet officers at the Collegiate Institute on the nights mentioned.

HOW TO RELIEVE PILE TORTURE
QUICKLY AND EASILY

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once.

For this purpose get a package of Hem-Roid from J. S. McKeown or any I.D.A or other drug store and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small, easy to take tablet, will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use, is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost.

If you try Hem-Roid and are not entirely pleased with the results your druggist will gladly return your money.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Holds Special Anniversary Services

Stirling, Oct. 6—Keen interest was shown in the special services at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Stirling, as friends from near and far joined with them in marking the 86th anniversary of the founding of the church. Rev. F. A. Robinson, M.A., Ph. D., Superintendent of Canadian Missions of Biblical Education and former minister of the Stirling church was guest speaker and was heartily welcomed by a host of friends after an absence of more than thirty years. His fine messages augmented by fine music by the full choir under the able direction of Miss Grace Pitman, A.T. C.M., completed the order of two of the most interesting services in many months.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Stirling, observes 86th anniversary.

Rev. F. A. Robinson, M.A., Ph. D., guest speaker at 86th anniversary services at Stirling.

Ordained at Stirling

Dr. Robinson first came to Stirling about thirty-three years ago, having just graduated in theology and was ordained to the Presbyterian Church ministry in his first and only pastoral charge, St. Andrew's Church, Stirling, and West Huntingdon. A few years later he left Stirling for a wider field of activity in the work he is now engaged. Continuing his studies and travelling to all parts of the world, he has since become famous as lecturer and minister and also a successful author having several books to his credit. His travelling has included forty ocean crossings and transcontinental tours numbering more than thirty. So in addition to a personal interest in his return a wealth of instructive thought gleaned from his wide and varied experience and presented in a brilliant fashion was keenly appreciated by the large congregations.

Within the scope of his two fine addresses Dr. Robinson pointed out that in the face of all discouragement people of the church face, it must be remembered that all the highest qualities of life had their beginning with the church of God.

"As we observe the millions of starving souls because of the ambition for world domination by two or three maniacs that hold sway over groups of humanity, we are prone to give up and say "What is the use?" but we must remember that even in 1942 we are in the midst of a great pilgrimage with a higher scale of civilization and brotherhood as the ultimate goal. No such pilgrimage can be void of sacrifice and turmoils, he said, but based on righteousness it cannot fail and above all we have the promise of Him that is supreme over all, My Presence shall go with thee. To stand firm by the things we know to be Christian is the duty of everyone not only in seeking victory over the apparent common enemy but over all evils that mark the pathway to real world brotherhood and contentment.

Fine Musical Numbers

A full choir under the direction of Miss Grace Pitman climaxed a long series of strenuous rehearsals with the faultless presentation of special numbers of inspiring quality. At the morning service and in the evening the work of the choir was exceptionally well done, their numbers including the anthems, "Take It to the Lord in Prayer" and "God is Our Refuge." A trio composed of Mrs. Charles Fargey, Mrs. Black and Mrs. Roy Eggleton offered a number at each service and a quartette composed of Mrs. R. Eggleton, Mrs. Fargey, Mr. Roy Eggleton and Mr. Arthur Duncan offered "Coming Home to Thee." Miss Pitman's organ numbers throughout the day included works of Schubert, Mozart, Brahm and each rendition added to the services in prelude and offertory and postlude. The selections chosen by Miss Pitman were in keeping with the spirit of worship and solemnity.

The first meeting to secure religious services in connection with the Presyterian Church of Canada was held in 1851 and the project was furthered by the first minister, Rev. Robt. Neil, D.D., of Seymour. The next year a student, Mr. Lindsay of Queens University, Kingston, was secured to carry on the work with service held in the school house. In 1856 Rev. Alex Buchan was inducted as the first minister and the first church was erected in 1857 and the first manse in 1862. Rev. WENDELL WILLKIE MEETS KAI-SHEK

Possibility Status of India Discussed at Conference

Chungking, Oct. 6 — (AP) — Wendell Willkie talked long and late with Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek last night in the fourth of an unprecedented series of conferences with the Chinese leader and tirelessly headed into a new round of plant inspections and social activities today.

President Roosevelt's special representative paused in his fact-finding schedule long enough to express the hope that Premier Stalin's letter to Henry Cassidy of the Associated Press in Moscow would "bring Russia's imperative needs forcefully to the attention of the peoples of the United Nations."

He made the terse comment in response to a request for his views on Stalin's statement that a second front is of "first rate importance" and that the Allies can best help Russia by fulfilling "their obligations fully and on time."

At last night's conference it was believed Chiang took Willkie into his confidence on matters of common concern to the United Nations, including the war with Japan and methods of speeding an Allied victory.

It was considered likely the Chinese leader repeated his view the Pacific front should be regarded as equally as important as the European front.

The question of India's status probably came in for discussion, observers said.

Willkie, who is planning to visit some sectors of the Chinese battlefront now comparatively quiet, arranged to visit a number of government plants today.

Six Hour Conference

Willkie spent six hours in conference with Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek last night.

His talks with Chiang was the fourth in an unprecedented series and was the longest ever granted to a foreign personage by the Chinese leader.

The Chinese press continued to feature Willkie's visit with long accounts of his activities and editorial comment. Ta Kung Pao reported that a plan was underway to rename one of Chungking's main street "Willkie Street."

"Willkie brought sunshine to foggy Chungking," the paper said.

After an early breakfast, Willkie visited a number of war plants and then returned to his quarters for a rest before lunch.

Strong Editorial

Ta Kung Pao, in a strongly-worded editorial, expressed the hope that Willkie would inform President Roosevelt and the American people of China's plea for the abrogation of extra-territoriality and foreign concessions.

"Willkie is a straightforward, sincere man who has won the friendship of everyone," the editorial said, "but when we shake his hand there is still the pain hidden deep in our hearts. Here we are a member of the anti-aggression front and we have been taking a beating longer than anybody else. Yet while fighting for a common cause our hands are still shackled by chains imposed by our friends in the last 100 years.

"It is very difficult to understand why the Allies still give us unequal treatment. While Mr. Willkie is here he would like to make known this feeling on the part of the entire nation, its people, the army and the government.'

THE WAR TODAY

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

London, Oct. 6—Premier Stalin's statement that Allied aid to Russia "has so far been little effective," as compared with the Soviet contribution to the cause of the United Nations, is being received in Britain in the spirit in which it apparently was offered—without rancor and with a desire to get ahead with the job of hanging Hitler.

Indeed, well qualified observers point out that obviously there can be no dispute with Stalin's estimate insofar as it concerns aid in the nature of action by combat forces. It is assumed this is what he referred to, not to equipment and supplies which Britain and America have been delivering with such difficulty and danger especially via that hell-fire corner the Nazis established in northern Norway.

The striking thing to my mind is that this triple alliance, which in many respects represents a strange assortment of bed-fellows, should have reached a point of understanding where rebukes can be exchanged without causing friction. Certainly the same could not have been said not so long ago.

Now this is of vast importance, for upon the solidarity of the triple alliance depends the future of Europe.

There is no doubt Stalin will get his second front at the first feasible moment. To any trained observer it is wholly clear that Britain is a perfect beehive of preparation by both British and American forces for offensive operations.

As I've already reported, Britain is being swept by the hunch that preparations are reaching the stage which will permit an offensive or offensives at almost any time. I find this feeling growing strongly daily though officialdom is sitting tight and not talking excepting to reaffirm that medicine is being prepared for the Nazi all-highest and will be administered by force as soon as possible while he holds his own nose.

The British public, like the American, lives for the day when a major offensive can be undertaken. However, the man in the street who not so long ago was loud in demands that a second front be opened immediately now has reached the conclusion after all it must be for the high command to say when and where offensive shall be undertaken.

To the average person the term "second front" seems to mean only one thing—invasion of the continent through France.

Apparently that is what Moscow has in mind, too.

However, I believe the Anglo-American command places a wider interpretation on the phrase and a goo dmany military experts hold there are several theatres which would provide very useful "second fronts."

What Stalin wants, of course, is an action that will draw a great number of Germn troops way from the estern front in the quickest possible time and thus relieve the terrific pressure on his armies. Probably the only operation which would achieve this would be an invasion htrough France. There is no other zone which would force Hitler to withdraw many divisions of great air strength from the siege of Stalingrad.

HOUSE WILL GIVE

Authoritative sources, meanwhile, said no official news had been received in London that the British and American ambassadors in Moscow had met to consider Stalin's letter but that such a discussion was quite possible.

Mr. Churchill's statement was greeted by cries of "hear hear."

His suggestion "not to press these matters unduly" was in line with his warning last week against speculation on the possible time and place of Allied offensive action.

Labor Member Asks Question

The first question was asked by Arthur Greenwood, labor, and this was Mr. Churchill's complete answer:

"I have, of course, read and considered the statement referred to and we are quite clear that no statement from His Majesty's Government is called for at the present time further than those that have been already given on this subject."

Then Aneurin Bevan, another Labor member, inquired:

"Is it not a fact that factory workers and groups of workers in institutions all over the country are discussing the implications of Mr. Stalin's statement. Is it the House of Commons only which is not to have the opportunity of considering it? Does the Prime Minister realize the very serious effect on war production that may happen if a feeling grows that there is any misunderstanding between the Soviet Union and ourselves? Will there not be an early opportunity of clearing the public mind in this matter?"

Churchill's Reply

Mr. Churchill responded:

"I have nothing to add to the statement I have just made."

Saying that Stalin's letter seemed to indicate that "there are not the closest relations in co-ordinating staff work for political purposes," a third Labor questioner, Frederick Bellenger, asked for assurance that "there is the closest integration in staff matters between Russia and this country."

It was to this that the Prime Minister gave the answer which brought the House's shouts of "Hear! Hear!" — warning the House to avoid pressing "these matters unduly at a period which is certainly significant."

The discussion soon was cut off, however, after Clement Davies, Liberal member for Montgomery, had repeated that there was "a tremendous amount of discussion" over the Stalin statement and asked the Prime Minister "to consider an early opportunity of discussing it" in the House.

PUNISHMENT PROMISED AXIS WAR CRIMINALS

Guilty Individuals Will Be Given Trial After War

Roosevelt Announces Plans for Dealing With Ringleaders Of Organized Murder

SET UP COMMISSION

Washington Oct. 7. (AP)—President Roosevelt said today the United States was prepared to co-operate in establishing a United Nations Commission, after the war, for the investigation of war crimes of the Axis and said it was the intention to mete out just and sure punishment to "ringleaders responsible for the organized murder of thousands of innocent persons and the commission of atrocities".

It is the intention of the United States, he said in a formal statement, that "the successful close of the war shall include provision for the surrender of the United Nations of war criminals".

Collect Evidence

With a view to establishing the responsibility of the guilty individuals through the collection and assessment of all available evidence, Mr. Roosevelt said, the United States government is prepared to cooperate with the British and other governments in establishing a United Nations Investigating Committee

Declaring that it was not the intention to resort to mass reprisals, the President predicted the number of persons eventually found guilty undoubtedly would be extremely small compared to the total enemy populations.

Question Unanswered

Presidential Secretary Stephen Early, who distributed Mr. Roosevelt's statement, did not answer a question as to whether Hitler and Mussolini were two of the ringleaders whose surrender would be required.

Mr. Roosevelt recalled that he had said last Aug. 21 that the government was constantly receiving information about "barbaric crimes" being committed by the enemy against civilians in occupied lands, especially on the European continent.

The commission of these crimes continues, the President declared in today's statement, the text of which follows:

"On Aug. 21 I said that this government was constantly receiving information concerning the barbaric crimes being committed by the enemy aganst civilian populations in occupied countries, particularly on the continent of Europe. I said it was the purpose of this government, as I knew it to be the purpose of the other United Nations, to see that when victory is won the perpetrators of these crimes shall answer for them before courts of law.

"The commission of these laws continues.

Must Be Surrendered

"I now declare it to be the intention of this government that the successful close of the war shall include provision for the surrender to the United Nations of war criminals.

"With a view to establishing responsibility of the guilty individuals through the collection and assessment of all available evidence this government is prepared to cooperate with the British and other governments in establishing a United Nations commission for the investigation of war crimes.

"The numbers of persons eventually found guilty will undoubtedly be extremely small compared to the total enemy populations. It is not the intention of this government or of the governments associated with us to resort to mass reprisals.

"It is our intention that just and sure punishment shall be meted out to the ring leaders responsible for the organized murder of thousands of innocent persons and the commission of atrocities which have violated every tenet of the Christian faith."

British Proposal

London, (AP)—The British Government has proposed creation of a United Nations Commission for the investigation of war crimes, Viscount Simon, the Lord Chancellor, disclosed today in the House of Lords.

Lord Simon said the proposal had been communicated to several other nations, including Russia, China, the Dominions, India and the fighting French, with a view to obtaining their concurrence and it was pointed out that President Roosevelt had announced in Washington that the United States is ready to co-operate.

Allied Pilots At Aleutians Set Record

Headquarters Alaska Defence Command, Oct. 6—(Delayed)—(AP) — American and Canadian fighter pilots who never saw Japanese planes in the air before Sept. 1 have finished their first month of combat against the Nipponese invaders with the remarkable average of 22 enemy planes downed for every one lost.

This figure was revealed today by Col. Phineas K. Merrill, commanding all fighter units in the Aleutian area.

Details of the 30 days of combat strengthen the theory that pilots when given any kind of a Canadian and United States break are more than a match for the Japanese.

The Canadians are under the command of Wing Sqdn. Ldr. Ken Boomer of Ottawa who has one enemy plane to his credit.

Haugland is recovering in a hospital here.

Changes in Party Standing Result From Cabinet Changes

Ottawa, Oct. 7 (CP)—Cabinet changes announced Tuesday night by Prime Minister Mackenzie King will mean changes in the party standing in both the House of Commons and the Senate.

Appointment of Thomas Vien Deputy Speaker of the House and Liberal member for Montreal Outremont, will mean a by-election in that riding. By-elections also are pending in the other two vacant House seats, Winnipeg North Centre and Charlevoix-Saguenay. Voting has been fixed for Nov. 30 in all three.

The House standing with Mr. Vien's transfer to the Senate will be as follows:

Liberal 175; Conservative 38; New Democracy 10; C.C.F. 8; Inependent-Liberal 3; Liberal-Progressive 3; Independent Conservative 1; Unity 1; Independent 2; Canadian 1; Vacant 3.

Mr. Vien's move to the Senate also will change the Senate standing and reduce the number of vacancies in the Upper Chamber from 15 to 14.

History Will Show Russian Invasion Greatest Mistake Made by Hitler

Toronto, Oct. 7 — (CP) — Robert P. Patterson, United States Undersecretary of War, predicted today that Hitler will redouble his propaganda efforts to divide the Allied nations and called upon the public to beware of rumor mongers.

"Careless criticism does not advance our cause," he said in a speech prepared for the American Federation of Labor Convention. "It serves Hitler's. Even though false stories are eventually shown to be untrue, they may have the harmful effect of shaking the confidence of our soldiers in the effectiveness of their weapons."

Citing rumors assailing the quality and effectiveness of weapons made by American labor, he said that criticism of the Garand rifle, United States tanks and P-40 planes as inferior, "died away in the face of actual performance."

"In the days to come," he said, "Hitler will redouble his efforts to divide the nations now united against him and in this he will make use of the rumor mongers among us.

"His agents will spread stories in the United States and in Canada that will reflect on Britain. We will hear more of the old yarn that the British are trying to get others to do the fighting. The story is contradicted by the casualty list but Nazi agents will concoct figures of their own.

"In Britain, his agents will spread the story that the Americans are not doing their part in fighting but are interested only in making money out of the war. And he will try to alienate us from Russia. He wrote his methods out in his book; how he would spread distrust and confusion from within."

Instead of taking such rumors seriously, Patterson urged remembrance of Britain's heroism at Dunkerque, aid of Greece against "almost hopeless" odds, and the facing of Germany for a year while "virtually unarmed."

"When we turn to Russia," he added, "we will not forget the heroic defence of Stalingrad, and we will not forget that the Russians have killed more Germans than Hitler can afford to lose. When the history of this war is written in years to come, it will be set down that the invasion of Russia was Hitler's great mistake."

4 Canadian Squadrons Take Part in Osnabrueck Raid

MILE-HIGH GAP IN MOUNTAINS HELD BY AUSSIES

Pushing Toward Japanese Base Of Kokoda on Other Side of Mt. Range

NO RESISTANCE

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 7 (CP)—The mile-high gap in the Owen Stanley range apparently was firmly back in Allied hands today with Australian advance forces, still on the offensive, pushing on toward the downslope to the Japanese base at Kokoda across the mountains from Port Moresby.

The chance of a Japanese stand in the high ridges seemed hourly more remote as dispatches from the inland New Guinea battlefront reported the Australians continuing their cautious, steady advance on the trail of the Japanese who once pushed within 32 miles air line of Port Moresby before being outflanked and hurled back.

By yesterday the Australians were moving up the last mountain grade north of Kagi, within four miles of the gap through the highest ridges. A report to the Melbourne Herald estimated that by early today they had pushed through within two miles of the end of the pass—headed for the downslope, still without resistance.

The Australian advance forces were reported to have found a number of enemy dead whose bodies bore no gunfire wounds.

It was theorized they died either from illness or starvation after being cut off by the Allied advance which now is in its 10th day.

There was no indication that the entire Japanese forces in the area were suffering from illness, however, and the success of their withdrawals was interpreted to mean that while they might be on reduced rations they still are able to move in fair order.

Today's communique noted again, as in past days, that there was no Japanese resistance to the Australians pushing into the steaming jungles in the Owen Stanley range.

Yesterday the Australians were north of Kagi, itself only a scant leading through the mountains to the north.

Moving at Slower Pace

Forward patrols were moving ahead at a slower pace than in past days, however, possibly due to their lengthening supply lines, a major problem in that area.

A war correspondent of the Melbourne Herald said it was estimated today the most advanced Australian troops were within a couple of miles of the end of "the gap" and the start of the steep fall of the northern slopes of the mountains toward the Japanese base at Kokoda.

He said a significant point was

Wendell Willkie Calls Upon United Nations For All-Out Offensive

Chungking, Oct. 7. (AP) — Wendell Willkie called upon the United Nations today for an "all-out armed offensive everywhere" and said he expected to dedicate his life to urging a post-war world "where all men can be free and with governments of their own choosing".

"It is my personal opinion that the time has come for an all-out armed offensive everywhere by all United Nations", Willkie said in a statement on his tour of 13 nations. "We are ready to deliver some knockout punches if I can believe what I have seen with my own eyes".

At the Press Conference Willkie said "This is my own statement, my own personal statement".

"That goes for all my public statements", he continued. "I speak for no one else and no one else ever speaks for me".

In answer to questions he said he had been commissioned by President Roosevelt to do certain things and that in anything connected with them he was the President's representative and acted accordingly.

"But when I speak for myself", he said, "I'm Wendell Willkie and say what I damn please".

In his plain-spoken statement, Willkie added: "In the United States we have talked a lot to the world about our production figures." He added that "some of our Allies have seen very little of our actual arms".

Only Natural to Wonder

It is only natural for them to wonder where our boasted production has gone. . . .

"Some of the countries I have visited look on the map like the last stop on the line. But in terms of the blows they are delivering to our enemies they should be the first stops".

Willkie issued his statement a few hours after a six-hour conference with Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek, his fourth meeting with the Chinese leader.

China and Russia, his statement declared, have each 'contributed to the defeat of the Axis aggressors some 5,000,000 of their finest men in casualties."

"It is both just and wise for us to see to it that they secure an equitable share of our arms production".

Willkie said a clear and simple statement should be made assuring the people of Asia that the present war means 'an end to the empire of nations over other nations".

It is the world's job, he said, to help colonial peoples who join the United Nations' cause "to become free and independent nations" and he asked for "firm timetables" under which they could work out the governments of their choosing.

TEN NORWEGIANS SHOT IN REPRISAL FOR SABOTAGE

Reign of Terror Enforced in Trondheim in Effort to Stop Unrest

CONFISCATE PROPERTY

London, Oct. 7 —(CP)— Nazi Commissioner Josef Terboven and new contingents of the German Secret Police enforced a reign of terror in the Norwegian province of Trondheim after executing 10 prominent Norwegians and arresting an estimated 700 more in an effort to stem a rising tide of sabotage, reports to Scandinavian circles here said.

A state of emergency has been proclaimed in Trondheim and a coastal strip 400 miles long. Terboven announced severe punishment would follow the slightest insubordination. Terboven had been in Trondheim only a few hours yesterday when a Nazi firing squad claimed the lives of the first 10 victims.

Among those executed, Stockholm dispatches said, were Henry Greditsch, well-known theatre manager; Harald Langhelle, city councilman and Social Democratic editor and Per Lykke, shipowner.

Norwegian circles here said a bank director, two lawyers, a civil engineer and a building contractor also were among those executed. The property of all the victims was confiscated. All were said to be from Trondheim, Roeros and Orkanger.

Announcing the new measures were instituted to "break the sabotage threatening the country's supply system," Terboven was reported to have declared:—

3 QUEBEC MEN APPOINTED TO KING CABINET

LaFleche Becomes Minister of War Service Dept. in Place of Thorson

THORSON NOW JUDGE

Ottawa, Oct. 7 —(CP)— Three new ministers, all representing French-speaking Quebec, are to be sworn into office today as part of a substantial cabinet reorganization announced late last night by Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

The new ministers are:

Maj. Gen. Leo Richer LaFleche, 54-year-old Associate Deputy Minister of National War Services who becomes minister of that department, succeeding Hon. Joseph Thorson who becomes President of the Exchequer Court of Canada;

Ernest Bertrand, 54, a Montreal lawyer and member of the House of Commons for Montreal Laurier since 1935, who becomes Minister of Fisheries succeeding Hon. J. E. Michaud, who takes the portfolio of Transport;

Alphonse Fourner, 49-year-old lawyer, Hull, a member of Parliament for Hull since 1930, who becomes Minister of Public Works.

At the same time Mr. King announced that Thomas Vien, 61, member for Montreal Outremont and Deputy Speaker of the House of Common, had been appointed to one of the 15 Senate vacancies and a by-election in Outremont fixed for Nov. 30.

It is generally assumed that Gen. LaFleche will become the Liberal candidate in Outremont, one of the few Quebec ridings that gave a "Yes" vote in the plebiscite last April when the people were asked if they approved the government being released from pledges not to enforce conscription for service overseas.

Other Appointments

Mr. King also announced that Emmett Murphy, director of construction in the Department of Munitions and Supply and since 1907 an engineering officer in the government service, had been appointed Deputy Minister of Public Works, a post vacated many months ago by the death of J. B. Hunter.

The announcements were made at a press conference late last evening, the first formal press conference Mr. King has held since last winter.

SOVIET TROOPS BETTER POSITIONS IN RELIEF DRIVE

Nazis Hurled Into Battle After Forced Marches Heavily Repulsed by Reds

DRIVEN FROM HOUSES

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Oct. 7 (AP)—Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's counter-drive between the Don and the Volga bit deeper today into the north flank of the German wedge into Stalingrad and Russian dispatches said the Germans were falling back desperately upon trench warfare in an attempt to halt the onslaught and save their positions.

At Stalingrad the Germans hurled whole new divisions, fresh from the march, into the bitter street fighting against outnumbered defenders who sagged before the impact but surged back and held through the 44th day of siege.

Offensive In Russian Hands

Dispatches from the battlefront said that across the steppes northwest of Stalingrad the offensive was firmly in Russian hands in a relief attack of increasing scope against hastily-dug German trench lines studded with half-sunken tanks as strong points.

The army newspaper Red Star said a dangerous situation developed as the Germans reached the depth of an industrial settlement, but heavy Soviet counter-attacks cleared much of the area. Red army men were reinforced by night and new fighter planes flew to their aid.

The Germans were declared hurled from the streets, houses, gardens and orchards by garrison forces led by Elite Guards. Explosive and incendiary bombs caused considerable damage to houses of the settlement and many civilians were among the casualties.

Location Not Announced

Location of the settlement was not announced, but many Soviet factories in that area are several miles from the city. It is obvious it is not any of the workers' communities along the Volga, because no dispatches mentioned the river.

218 Nazi Merchant Vessels Sunk Or Seized Since Outbreak of War

By JERRY YALE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 7 (AP)—The United Nations have sunk or seized no less than 218 Nazi merchant vessels—more than 1,000,000 tons—since the war burst over Europe three years ago, a review of official announcements showed today.

These losses apparently have sent the German march of war into a heavy limp, and the Nazis have begun a drive to salvage ships sunk along the coast of Europe, it was reported recently in addition they have started a program to build standardized merchantmen, probably along the lines of the American "Liberty ship" plan.

Perhaps the Nazis' greatest single shipping losses were the 21,131-ton Hansa and the 9,400-ton Steiermark, former passenger liners which had earned the reputation of notorious raiders.

The Hansa was sunk in the Indian Ocean by the British cruiser Cornwall, the Steiermark off Australia by the British cruiser Sydney. A Nazi claim that the Steiermark renamed the Kormoran, still operates in the Atlantic has not been confirmed.

merchant marine were the torpedoing by a British submarine of the Bahia Laura and the Donau, merchantmen which were carrying Nazi troops.

Nearly 3,000 German soldiers lost their lives when depth bombs from their own torpedo boats, trying to get the English submarine, exploded as they swam from their sinking craft.

Crewmen of the 32,581-ton liner Columbus, once a West Indies cruise ship, scuttled the vessel off Virginia to avoid capture by the British destroyer Hyperion, robbing the Reich of its third biggest cargo ship and destroying $2,000,000 worth of goods

The two latest seizures of German merchantmen—the Uruguayan capture of the Tacoma, once fueler for the Graf Spee, and the British interception of the Wartenfels at Diego Suarez after her crew tried to dynamite her—raised to 56 the announced number of captured Nazi ships, a total of 316,420 tons.

Aside from seizures, Hitler lost 42 merchantmen by scuttling; 35 to surface warships; 32 to submarines; 15 to aircraft; 14 in explosions of mines; and 24 under varied circumstances, including blackout crashes

German Industrial And Railway Town Heavily Attacked

One Bomber Forced To Return to Base After Hitting A Flock of Birds

6 BOMBERS MISSING

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—A strong force of R.A.F. bombers made a concentrated attack last night on the German industrial and railway town of Osnabrueck, the Air Ministry said today.

"Six of our aircraft are missing," the Air Ministry said.

It is understood that at least four Canadian squadrons, including the new French-Canadian squadron which made its first operational sortie yesterday, were in the raiding force.

Osnabrueck, a Hanover Province city, was last attacked by British bombers Aug. 17.

The raid was the second upon Germany in as many nights and the fourth night raid in six nights this month.

Loss of six planes indicated a force of about 120 bombers made the attack, under the normal five-per-cent casualty ration.

The Berlin radio broadcast a DNB report the attack was directed at northwest Germany and some damage resulted from high-explosive and incendiary bombs.

No Indication of Size

There was no indication of the size of the attacking force.

The operations followed daylight solo attacks upon points in western Germany by Britain's new mosquito bombers and a raid at dusk by a concentration of these swift craft which fired a factory and a power station near Hengelo, the Netherlands.

Wing Cmdr. H. I. Edwards, who was awarded the Victoria Cross for slipping under high-tension wires to bomb Bremen by daylight from an altitude of 50 feet, directed the Hengelo thrust.

The mosquito bombers, still on the secret list, flew low for 100 miles inland to reach their targets. The Air Ministry news service said they encountered neither fighters nor anti-aircraft fire.

Fire Gives Way to Smoke

Sqdn. Ldr. D. A. G. Parry, whose command was assignd to attack the power station, said a great sheet of flame rose when the explosives burst and then the fire gave way to a dense cloud of smoke.

Debris was reported flung high when bombs struck the factory, which was near the power plant.

A flock of birds proved the major hazard to the expedition. Windows of one bomber were smashed and flying glass cut the faces of the crew, forcing the pilot to return to the base.

R.A.F fighters on offensive patrol were reported to have set fire to a German minesweeper off the French coast and caused it to run aground.

Hint of Heavy Air Smashes Given French

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—The BBC broadcast a United States warning today that French people should evacuate places where work is being done for the Germans because of increasing American air attacks on France.

This hint of more United States air smashes on occupied France came as the House of Commons was looking into a comparison of losses for the R.A.F. and the United States Flying Fortresses, of which but two have been lost in more than a dozen daylight raids.

JAPANESE TRY TO REGAIN BASE AT GUADALCANAL

Mounting and Costly Losses Inflicted on Enemy by U.S. From Base

LANDINGS REPORTED

By JOHN H. WIGGINS
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 7—(AP)—Apparent Japanese desperation to regain—seemingly at any cost — the Guadalcanal air base in the Solomons from which they were driven by United States Marines portended today a new struggle for control of the strategic island.

Striving to halt mounting and costly losses inflicted on their air and navy strength by American planes operating from the base, the Japanese under cover of darkness have enlarged their Guadalcanal forces but at the further expense of 11 planes and a damaged heavy cruiser.

The landing of enemy reinforcements was reported by the Navy yesterday to have been accomplished Oct. 3 and 4. In doing so they raised their total losses in the two-months'-old battle of the Solomons to 230 aircraft destroyed and 30 vessels sunk or damaged.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

BOYS' INJURIES OF MINOR NATURE

While riding on the same bicycle at the intersection of Pinnacle and Station Streets on Tuesday afternoon Badlay Hutchinson and Wayne Fox, both Belleville boys, escaped serious injury, when the bicycle upon which they were both riding collided with a motor car, driven by John A. Shannon, 12 Ashley Street. Police were informed of the accident and were told by eye-witnesses, that the boys on the bicycle rode directly into the path of the motor car giving Mr. Shannon no opportunity to avoid the collision or protect the boys. Dr. J. J. Robertson later examined the lads and reported their injuries were only of a minor nature.

SNEAK THIEF FAILS TO GAIN ENTRANCE

A sneak thief failed to gain entrance at 58 Hillcrest Ave., early Wednesday morning, but escaped under the cover of darkness. The occupant of the house heard disturbances about one-thirty o'clock, Wednesday morning, and immediately telephoned police. Later the authorities found the screen on a rear door had been broken loose indicating that the night prowler had intended to attempt to force the door. Police scoured the district but no signs of the would-be thief were in evidence. Later the occupant was taken by police to relatives in the city for the remainder of the night.

KINSMEN FAG FUND BOX IS STOLEN

One of the meanest sneak thieves on record was reported in Belleville recently when it was learned that a Kinsmen Fag Fund collection box had been stolen. These collection boxes are placed at strategic points in city stores and factories in which citizens can place contributions to help provide cigarettes for Belleville boys serving overseas. The Kinsmen club utilize every penny received in this manner directly towards the purchase of "smokes" for our fighting forces as all administration costs are paid by the Kinsmen. Sneak thieves taking such boxes merely deprived soldiers of cigarettes and it is perhaps one of the meanest tricks reported in quite some time.

Simpson, 33 degrees, of Hamilton, Deputy for Ontario.

Death Sentence Given Airman

St. Andrew's, N.B., Oct. 7 (CP).—Tom Roland Hutchings, 21, today faced death on the gallows.

Convicted of murdering Bernice Connors, 19, the young Air Force sergeant was sentenced to be hanged Dec. 16.

A verdict of "guilty, with a recommendation that mercy be shown", was reached in the Charlotte Circuit Court late last night almost three hours after Mr. Justice C. D. Richards concluded a lengthy charge to the jury.

The youthful airman, who came to Canada last spring from Peterborough, England, heard the verdict without showing emotion.

Asked if he had anything to say before passing of sentence, he spoke in court for the first time since the trial opened Sept. 29.

"My Lord, I have been asked by defence counsel not to make any remark at all."

His counsel B. R. Guss, Saint John, referred to the recommendation for mercy and asked the court to hear Flt.-Lt. W. T. Elverston. The R.A.F. officer said Hutchings had enlisted in May, 1939, and had 'a clear conduct sheet since that time".

Mr. Guss asked that consideration be given to Hutchings' previous record, his youth and his family, including a brother who was a Wing Commander in the R.A.F. with the Distinguished Flying Cross.

One witness at the trial said the accused had a wife and young child in England.

In long addresses to the jury yesterday Mr. Guss attacked the Crown's case of circumstantial evidence. The Crown claimed the testimony showed that Hutchings had committed rape and murder.

The girl's cut, battered and almost naked body was found in a field at Black's Harbor June 7.

Poultry Project Of Kiwanis Club Nearly Completed

The agricultural committee of the local Kiwanis Club will commence picking up chickens let out to district school children last spring on Tuesday, October 13th, it was announced by Mr. J. Cowan, chairman for the committee. He made the announcement at the regular luncheon meeting of the Kiwanis Club at the Quinte Hotel on Tuesday.

Annually the local Kiwanians create much good will between service club members in the city and rural children with their poultry project. Chickens are distributed among district school children in the spring with prizes being awarded to those who have the best showing in percentage of birds raised. The children contest closely for the prizes which are given out by the Kiwanis Club at a banquet during the autumn.

President Jack Trudeau congratulated the club members on the number of magazines brought to the luncheon for distribution among the members of the armed services, and also moved that the club express their well-wishes to Mr. P. C. MacLaurin through his wife, who is now living in Fort William. Mrs. MacLaurin will shortly be returning to the city to live, it was announced by Mr. Gordon Barclay.

The only other matter of business brought up before the members at the luncheon meeting was the discussion of the club's chicken bingo which will be held during the latter part of this week.

Mr. J. Owen Herity, manager of the Chamber of Commerce, read before the club members a message from Hon. J. L. Ilsley, "Canada at War" pertaining to Canada's war effort and the need for the prompt realization of the objective of $750,000,000 in the forthcoming Victory Loan Campaign.

Mr. Herity referred briefly to the organization for the local campaign and stated he felt that in Mr. James Barclay as chairman, the committee would be capably handled. Mr. Gordon Barclay introduced Mr. Herity to the members with President Jack Trudeau expressing the appreciation of the club. Following the reading of the address Mr. Jack McIntosh moved that a letter be forwarded by the club to Mr. Ilsley expressing the willingness of the local Kiwanis Club to cooperate in the forthcoming campaign Mr. Clifford Baragar seconded the motion. Albert Jones was sergeant-at-arms and Harold Carruthers as song leader.

THE WAR TODAY

By DON GILBERT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The statement by Admiral Thomas Hart, United States Navy, that Royal Air Force fighter aircraft only "half an hour away" did not go to the aid of the battleships Repulse and Prince of Wales when they were sunk by Japanese bombers off Malaya must be judged against the background of the long-standing feud among American military experts on the question of a separate air force.

The Admiral, who was in command of Allied naval forces in the southwest Pacific area shortly after the entry of Japan into the war, is making an argument in favor of the navy keeping control of its own aviation rather than an attack on the R.A.F.

In his magazine article he says, "The R.A.F. had a considerable force on Malaya, within easy flying range," and "the British battleships received no aid from the R.A.F., either in reconnaissance or in defence by fighter planes." He also states that "the British way (of giving air protection to the fleet) does not look good for our purposes."

The Admiral overlooks the point, however, that at the time of the sinking of the battleships last December the Japanese landing campaign in Malaya was just developing into a full offensive, and the meagre British air strength was employed to the full in supporting the land forces. Reconnaissance planes were needed to scout the course being taken by the enemy spearheads and fighters to challenge the Japanese bid for superiority in the air.

Britain has made few excuses for the loss of the Repulse and the Prince of Wales. It was frankly conceded at the time by Prime Minister Churchill that the lack of air protection for the ships was lamentable. He told parliament it had been impossible at the time the battle-wagons were dispatched to the Far East to spare one of Britain's small fleet of aircraft carriers to accompany them.

Admiral Hart is using this incident to keep the United States Navy's case for its own Air Force well to the front, because, although the war has stilled the controversy to some extent, there are still influential circles which continue urging an American Air Force on the R.A.F. model and attribute every setback to lack of such a separate organization.

Unlike the independent R.A.F., the air strength of the United States is divided between the army and navy and under direct control of the commanders of the respective services. The supporters of this system contend that direct control of air support by commanders in the field or admirals directing action at sea is essential if full use is to be made of available air cover.

This theory of warfare has not been without its advocates in Britain, and a few years before the outbreak of war the Royal Navy obtained full control of the fleet air arm, which previously had been shared to some extent with the R.A.F. Even today an occasional voice is raised in favor of the plan.

U. S. Plans Great Boost in Food And Livestock Production for 1943

By OVID A. MARTIN
Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Oct. 7 — (AP) — Faced with increasing war demands for food, the United States Agriculture department has drawn up tentative production goals for the 1943 crop season calling for even greater acreages and output of most farm products than was requested under the record 1942 production program.

Officials who preferred not to be named said increases would be asked for despite prospects that farmers would have to get along with less manpower, machinery, fertilizer and other facilities. Needs of the armed forces and the Allies, particularly Russia, were said to be much greater than had been expected a few weeks ago.

As a hedge against the possibility farmers might be unable to meet the 1943 goals, the department is working on plans to reduce civilian consumption of a number of essential foods.

Preparatory to consumer rationing to be inaugurated the first of the year, the government acting upon the department's recommendations, has asked civilians to limit meat consumption to 2 1-2 pounds a week. Butter, cheese, cooking fats, vegetable oils, eggs, poultry and canned fruits and vegetables may be placed in the same class with meat.

The tentative goals included:

Cattle—For slaughter, more than the 1942 goal of 28,000,000 head. Slaughter in 1941 totalled 25,905,000.

Hogs—For slaughter, "lots more" than the 1942 goal of 83,000,000 head. Slaughter in 1941 totalled 72,500,000.

Milk—For all dairy products, more than this year's goal of 125,000,000,000 pounds. Production in 1941 totalled 115,770,000,000 pounds.

Eggs—More than 1942 goal of 4,200,000,000 dozen. Production in 1941 was 3,728,000,000. Poultry for slaughter, more than 1942 goal of 644,000,000 head. In 1941 production totalled 585,000,000.

Sugar beets—More than 1942 goal which allowed growers to plant all they could with facilities then available. In previous years, acreages were limited under provisions of the Sugar Control Act.

GERMANS PROMISE TO FETTER ALL DIEPPE PRISONERS

Nazis Annoyed by Reports Prisoners, Taken on Island of Stark, Bound

COMMANDO RAID

New York, Oct. 7 (AP). — A Commando-type British raid Sunday on the island of Sark, 23 miles off the Normandy coast, was announced today by the German high command in a report which indicated that only a single German escaped the swoop.

The small channel island was one of those the Germans seized from Britain at the end of June, 1940.

The disclosure was made in a section of the daily Berlin war bulletin which made a lengthy complaint of the treatment of German soldiers in British hands and repeated previous assertions that sometimes the Germans were handcuffed or bound.

No mention was made of raids on nearby Guernsey or Jersey, principal islands of the channel group where the Nazis gained their first foothold on British soil quickly after the fall of France.

Complaining of the alleged British treatment of Germans captured at Dieppe Aug. 19, the high command said:

"A similar incident occurred on the Channel Island of Sark on Oct. 4 when during the early morning hours sixteen British soldiers assaulted a German working party consisting of one non-commissioned officer and four men, who were fettered with a thin but strong-woven cord."

Nazis Caught By Surprise.

The Germans apparently were caught by surprise because the Berlin account said they were herded to the beach wearing nothing but their trousers and shirts.

One of the Germans was killed and another wounded, the German high command complained.

"These facts," it added, "have been confirmed by an engineer who succeeded in escaping."

That would indicate that the others rounded up by the raiders were taken back to England as prisoners.

The Germans charged shortly after the Dieppe raid that Germans who were taken prisoner there were ordered handcuffed or tied but the British authorities denied the allegation officially.

Command Issued.

Today the high command, reviving the complaint, asserted:

"From Oct. 8 at 12 noon all British officers and men captured at Dieppe will be fettered, and this measure will remain in force until the British war office proves that it intends in the future to issue true statements regarding the fettering of German prisoners of war."

(Canadians made up the bulk of the Dieppe raiding forces and it is believed those taken prisoner are included by the Germans in the generality "British").

British Patrols Raid Axis Strong Point

Cairo, Oct. 7 (AP)—British patrols raided and destroyed the garrison of an Axis strong point Monday night while R.A.F. bombers maintained attacks on the shipping and port facilities at Tobruk and Bengasi, a communique said.

(The site of the strong point raided was not announced, but it presumably was in the German-Italian front west of El Alamein.)

"In the battle area yesterday our fighter-bombers, fighters and light bombers were active, attacking enemy transport vehicles and camps in all sectors," said the communique, issued jointly by the R.A.F. and British Middle East headquarters.

"Vehicles were set on fire during low-level machine-gunning attacks. The fighter-bombers also started fires. Long-range fighters successfully attacked the enemy seaplane base at Bomba (Libya), setting one three-engined seaplane on fire and severely damaging others."

Other aircraft attacked an Axis convoy southwest of Crete and shot down one of its aerial escort and damaged two others.

These and other operations were said to have cost four planes.

THESE DISHWASHERS DIDN'T GET A CENT

No less a dishwashing duet than Donald Nelson, LEFT, chief of the U.S. war production board, and Paul V. McNutt, chief of the U.S. war manpower commission, are drying dishes here. To those with lifted eyebrows who might wonder why such important officials are doing such a menial job, we might add that it was for a good cause. It marked the opening of the Washington, D.C., stage door canteen.

Fire Drill in Belleville Schools Near Perfection Says Asst. Chief

Fire drill in Belleville schools has just about reached perfection with little possibility of improvement being shown in the future, it was stated this morning by Assistant Fire Chief Gerald Lynch, following fire drill inspection at all Belleville schools.

The inspection was carried out in conjunction with Fire Prevention Week, which is being observed throughout Canada this week.

During the fire drill inspection which was carried out by members of the local fire department, King George Public School cleared class rooms and halls the quickest, the 352 pupils being clear of the building only 50 seconds following the sounding of the alarm. The three other local public schools and St. Michael's Academy were tied in the matter of the buildings being cleared of pupils, 55 seconds elapsing from the gong until the "all clear".

Taking into consideration the number of pupils in each school, however, St. Michael's possibly showed to a small advantage over the other schools in the city. Total number of pupils here was 502, as compared with the 475 for Queen Alexandra; 452 for Queen Victoria and 375 for Queen Mary School.

Time for the Collegiate Institute was one minute and 55 seconds. This is considered excellent taking into consideration the three-storey building and the number of pupils which now totals 725.

To help bring the lesson of Fire Prevention Week more vividly before the populace of the city, the local fire department is staging demonstration runs from the fire hall every day of the week with different routes being chosen each day. One vehicle is taken each day, the choice alternating with the pumper, the hook and ladder truck, and the hose truck.

A complete inspection of all business places, public buildings and industrial buildings in the city will be made before Saturday which climaxes Fire Prevention Week, it was stated by fire officials.

Former Coach At Albert College Killed in Britain

News was received in Belleville today by Albert College officials, that Lieut. Colin S. Macdonald, R.C.A., had been killed accidentally in the explosion of a land mine in Britain.

Lieut. Macdonald was attached to the Albert College faculty in 1939 and '40 and enlisted in 1941, receiving his commission in Brockville. While attached to the teaching staff at Albert College, Lieut. Macdonald also assisted in the coaching of hockey and school basketball teams. He received his early education in Ottawa, the home of his parents. After graduation from the Ottawa Normal School he studied for a Dominion Land Surveyor before coming to Belleville.

It was with regret that Principal Dr. Howard and others of the college learned of the death of Lieut. Macdonald today, as he was always held in esteem by those who knew him.

POLICE BLOTTER

Peterborough Police reported the theft of a Chevrolet roadster from that city Tuesday night. The vehicle was equipped with Ontario Licence plates number 173-S-4 when taken.

At the request of Royal Canadian Navy officials Belleville police apprehended two sailor boys, who were reported absent from their unit without leave.

SOVIET TROOPS

Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's shock divisions maintained ground-gaining pressure against the strongly-entrenched Germans northwest of the city, dispatches said. This area likewise has never been specifically defined, other than as embracing a region of the steppes between the Don and the Volga.

Numerous tanks are operating in this area and small detachments are playing an ever bigger role in the fighting, Red Star said.

Crammed into Trenches

Nazi infantrymen were reported crammed into trenches dug in the steppes. The government newspaper Izvestia said the Germans had buried literally hundreds of burned-out tanks for use as pill-boxes.

The Germans were reported to have strong air forces in the area. Izvestia said Red Army anti-aircraft batteries accounted for 10 in one day.

The noon communique said fierce fighting continued in the Stalingrad area in this 44th day of the siege.

"The enemy is drawing up fresh forces and hurling them into battle immediately after marching," it said.

Red Army forces improved their positions again in offensive operations on one sector northwest of the battered city and repulsed German counter-attacks elsewhere, it was announced.

Height Attacked Ten Times

"A height defended by Red Army men of one unit was attacked ten times by the Hitlerites", the communique said. "In this fighting the enemy lost more than 800 in killed alone".

A similar action southeast of Novorossisk was declared to have cost a newly-arrived Axis infantry division about 400 dead in two vain assaults. The Soviet troops held to the height, described as "of great tactical importance".

"Our troops captured five mortars, 11 machine-guns and ammunition", the communique said. "Prisoners were taken".

Firming of Soviet lines in the Central Caucasus apparently followed a withdrawal from one community in the Mozdok area, a retreat announced at midnight.

The noon communique spoke only of the repulse of tank and infantry attacks, in that area before the Caucasus Mountains and Grozny oil area, saying that "in 24 hours our men disabled or set on fire seven German tanks and wiped out about a company of Hitlerites".

Red Star said the Germans penetrated mountain passes a few days ago and tried to get across a Caucasian chain, but furious blows by the waiting Red Army detachments repelled them.

All the approaches are again in Soviet hands, the newspaper said. Captives were quoted as saying that Axis losses in the mountains were unusually heavy, one regiment getting reinforcements four times in six days.

Diplomatic developments accompanied the fighting.

U.S. Ambassador Received

The United States Ambassador, William H. Standley, planning to leave soon for Washington to confer with President Roosevelt on co-ordination of American and Soviet war efforts to the utmost, was received by Premier Stalin last night.

Presumably they discussed Russian expressions of dissatisfaction with the assistance received from Britain and the United States and Stalin's written suggestion the Allies fulfill their obligations fully and on time.

Standley indicated sympathy for the Russian viewpoint.

Reports indicated at least 1,200 German troops were killed in the Stalingrad area yesterday. Constant attacks by large tank and infantry forces finally developed a minor wedge in a factory settlement, it was announced.

"In the middle of the day 12 German tanks broke into one block of the settlement," the communique said. "Our units fought to annihilate these tanks and, toward the end of the day, 12 out of the 12 were destroyed." (The fate of the 13th was not set forth, but the implication was that it fled.)

Other defence forces wiped out about a battalion of enemy infantry, immobilised 17 tanks and shot down three Nazi planes with rifle and machine-gun fire, it was declared.

Les paused in the act of running the clipper up the back of his customer's neck.

"Seems bigger," observed he.

3 QUEBEC MEN

The Prime Minister said these appointments restore Quebec's traditional representation in the cabinet.

For a long time Quebec has had but two ministers in the government due to deaths and resignations.

All the appointments had been generally forecast at one time or another but it had been felt in some quarters that Mr. Fournier had endangered his chances because of his vote against the government on the conscription issue.

The actual cabinet vacancies were public works and transport, both of which were held by Hon. P. J. A. Cardin who resigned early in the summer as a protest against the government's conscription policy.

Started to Dwindle Last Year

Quebec's representation started to dwindle late last year when Justice Minister Lapointe died. Hon. Raoul Dandurand, government leader in the Senate and Minister without portfolio, died last March.

About the same time Hon. Pierre Casgrain resigned as Secretary of State to become a judge of the Quebec Superior Court. Mr. Cardin's resignation completed the list of Quebec vacancies.

For some weeks before Parliament adjourned last August 1, Mr. King was repeatedly asked when Quebec's representation would be restored.

He said last night that the problem was one that had required a great deal of consideration and final arrangements were completed at a four-hour Cabinet Council yesterday.

No reason was given by the Prime Minister for the transfer of Mr. Michaud to the Transport Portfolio and the appointment of Mr. Bertrand to a department which is usually headed by a representative of one of the Maritime Provinces.

Further Shuffle Predicted

It was felt in some quarters that there would be a further shuffle at a not too distant date.

Yesterday's move brings to three the number of federal by-elections fixed for Nov. 30. The others announced last week are in Winnipeg North Centre to fill the vacancy created by death of J. S. Woodsworth, former C.C.F. leader, and in Charlevoix-Saguenay, vacated by Mr. Casgrain's appointment to the bench last winter.

Madame Casgrain, wife of the former member, is reported to be the government's candidate in Charlevoix-Saguenay, and it would appear certain, therefore, that Gen. Lafleche will run in Outremont.

Severely Wounded in First War

Gen. Lafleche, a distinguished and severely-wounded veteran of the First Great War, was Deputy Minister of National Defence from 1930 to 1939 when ill-health drove him into temporary retirement at the start of the war.

Later he went to Paris as military attache at the Canadian Legation and he was present at the fall of France, escaping to England with other diplomats.

He returned to Canada and at once became Associate Deputy Minister of War Services, a department which was created in June, 1940, with Mr. Thorson as minister.

His task has been almost exclusively administration of the compulsory military service call-up, a branch which has been transferred to the Labor Department.

Hold Opposing View

There had been some expectation that this department would be merged with another when the call-up and public information branches were taken away from it recently but Mr. King said he was hoping Gen. Lafleche would make it an increasing source of strength to the war effort by concentrating on supervision of voluntary war work and by closer relations with the people through public addresses and travels.

These changes bring to the Cabinet two members of the House who held opposing views on the government's move to take power for conscripting men for service overseas, a power which it has not exercised and which it has given no indication of exercising in the near future.

Mr. Bertrand worked for and obtained a "Yes" vote to the plebiscite question in his riding and supported the government's subsequent legislation which removed the ban against total conscription.

Mr. Fournier's riding voted "No" in the plebiscite and he personally voted against the government on the legislation.

Mr. Thorson goes to the Exchequer Court vacancy created by the death of Hon. A. K. McLean. He was a private member of the House of Commons for Selkirk from 1926 to 1930 and from 1935 to the present, and was called to the Cabinet in June 1940.

TEN NORWEGIANS

"My generosity is finished. Nothing will change my uncompromising decision to smash the enemy's manipulation and provocations."

A Stockholm radio report intimated that hostile action had been made to sabotage the Trondheim-Mosjoen Railway.

A power station at Tannrem also had been dynamited, shutting off power and forcing the Germans to stop work at a naval base under construction, London reports said. Shipyard workers were forbidden to leave the yards.

A score of followers of Nazi-backed Premier Vidkun Quisling were arrested on charges they were not sufficiently active for the Nazis, Scandinavian circles here reported.

The tide of resentment against German domination swept little Denmark into the storm and Danish sources here expressed the fear the country would vanish soon into a German federation of North Sea countries.

Denmark Refuses Invitation

Stockholm dispatches to a London newspaper said the Germans had demanded from King Christian control of the Danish police and key posts in the ministry of justice. Other reports said the Danes had declined a German invitation to become a "model state" in a Nazi Europe.

The Oslo radio reported an increasing number of clashes between 1,100 Danish volunteers now on leave from the Russian front, where they have been fighting for the Nazis, and Copenhagen residents.

Danes feared the country's police functions might be turned over to these Danish Nazis.

Meanwhile the inter-Allied information committee reported that food stocks of the occupied countries had been plundered so thoroughly by the Germans that many people were on a starvation diet. The Belgians, for example, were reported living mainly on bread and turnips. Throughout the occupied territories, meat is almost non-existent, the report said.

JAPANESE TRY

capture the Guadalcanal air base from which the air attacks stem, appeared imminent as the enemy's efforts to reinforce their scattered detachments on the island continued.

At Least One Hit Scored

A Japanese cruiser, accompanied by a force of destroyers engaged in landing operations, was spotted by Navy and Marine Corps dive-bombers. At least one hit was scored on the vessel, the Navy reported. One United States plane was downed but the crew was saved.

A force of Navy and Marine torpedo planes renewed the attack at daybreak, found the cruiser still smoking from the earlier bombing and drove in two torpedoes. Meanwhile, planes bombed and strafed enemy troops and supply dumps on Guadalcanal.

Nine Zero fighter planes of a force of thirty accompanying a small group of Japanese bombers on an attempted raid against United States Guadalcanal installations were shot down by seven Navy bombers. Anti-aircraft batteries accounted for two more. One American plane was lost but the pilot was saved as the defenders turned the enemy bombers back without an explosive being dropped.

Risking of the larger ships instead of the usual barges and smaller craft to land Japanese reinforcements indicated to naval men the enemy may have materially strengthened his island units for an effort to retake the airbase which not only dominates the Australian-American lifeline but also serves as a base for Allied operations against Nipponese positions for miles around.

RED ARMY BOSS

It was officially announced in Moscow that Premier Joseph Stalin has relinquished the post of people's commissar for defence and commander-in-chief of the Russian armies to his military advisor, Marshal Boris Mikhailovitch Shaposhnikoff, ABOVE, chief of the general staff since 1941.

ECONOMIC CZAR

President Roosevelt has named Associate Justice James F. Byrnes of the United States supreme court, ABOVE, as economic czar and his deputy commander-in-chief to administer the anti-inflation program. He is resigning his court post. Byrnes will have sweeping authority to stabilize rents, wages, and prices.

1,082 R.A.F. Bombers Lost Over N. Europe During Last 9 Months

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair told the House of Commons today that 1,082 R.A.F. bombers were reported lost over northern Europe during the nine months ended Sept. 30 but said the air force was "suffering a lower rate of casualties than the German air forces attacking this country."

Asked why British losses were "so much greater than those of Allied forces" Sir Archibald replied that "no Allied forces have had to face the tremendous strength of the German night fighter, anti-aircraft and searchlight defences in western Germany."

Saying that the bomber command's policy was not responsible for high losses, he said that, on the contrary, "the losses are extraordinarily low."

STILL NO TRACE

North Bay, Ont., Oct. 7 (CP)—There is still no trace of Mr. and Mrs. Earl D. Kirk of North Bay who drove out of the city of Sudbury in their automobile two years ago this month and were never seen again. Police searched district highways for them for months.

Hour for Allied Deeds to Help Russia is Close

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Admiral William H. Standley, the American Ambassador to Moscow, is going home to report—and there can be little doubt that he will picture the Russians as increasingly impatient over the lack of a second front.

That mood was made abundantly clear by Premier Joseph Stalin's recent letter to Henry C. Cassidy, Associated Press correspondent in Moscow.

So far there has been no direct comment on this letter from the leadership of the United States or Britain. President Roosevelt had nothing to say at his press conference yesterday, and Prime Minister Churchill merely warned Parliament "not to press these matters unduly at a period which is certainly significant."

Exactly what that means is far from clear. —Mr. Churchill coupled his warning, however, with an assertion that he had nothing to add to the "carefully weighed statement" on Allied-Russian relations he had already made.

That obviously was a reference to his report to Parliament Sept. 8 after his visit to Egypt and Moscow. He then revealed a rift with Russia over Allied second-front delays.

"The Russians did not think that we or America had done enough to take the weight off them," he said, "and this is not at all surprising in view of the terrific onslaughts they have withstood with marvelous tenacity."

Reassured Soviet Officials

Mr. Churchill was then convinced, however, that he and his colleague, W. Averell Harriman, President Roosevelt's personal representative had succeeded in reassuring Soviet officials of "our loyal and sincere resolve to come to their aid as quickly as possible without regard to the sacrifices and losses involved so long as the contribution is toward victory."

That seems to be the "carefully-weighed statement" to which he has now referred. One implication is that despite the Stalin-to-Cassidy letter, the British leader sees no widening of the second-front rift since he spoke. The other, implicit in his warning against Parliamentary exploration of the subject at so "significant" a time, is that the hour for Allied deeds to ratify Allied assurances to Moscow is close at hand.

The only other statement that Mr. Churchill has made on the subject since his Sept. 8 speech was his recent warning against published speculation about the when and where of Allied attempts to ease Nazi pressure on Russia. That also impressed this writer with the feeling that Anglo-American offensive moves might be closer than Moscow thinks.

Time Will Tell

Time, and not much of it, will tell as to that. There was another Churchill remark on Sept. 8, however, which events in Russia have since gone far to make good.

"Of the Russian front," he remarked, "I will only at this moment say—it is the 8th of September."

On that day Russian reports told of new German non-stop attacks battering their way into the streets of Stalingrad from the west. There was little to encourage belief that the city could hold out a week, much less a month. Yet a month later Nazi attackers have progressed only inches.

Their attack from the west has failed. The northwest suburbs, each a Russian fortress, are the main objects of attack. The Nazi left flank, protected by a "barrier" cordon across the Don-Volga corridor northwest of the city, is in growing peril—and winter is close at hand even in the Don and Volga basins.

It was the approach of that greatest of Russia's Allies, Winter, that Mr. Churchill visualized. Current reports from Stalingrad tell of cold winds already howling at night across the open steppes where a month ago a heat wave hampered the attackers.

There probably remain only a few days before the Nazi High Command must reach a crucial decision. To be caught by an early winter in the open with a vast army to supply over wrecked highways and railroads might be disastrous. A withdrawal to better protected positions, abandoning the Stalingrad storming operations, could be hardly less dangerous if too long delayed.

Every hour, every day of that miraculous Russian stand amid the ruins of Stalingrad is of priceless value to Russia and her Allies and a growing peril to Hitler. What Mr. Churchill foresaw in his "this is the 8th of September" comment is close to a realized hope.

That Extra Something! ...You can spot it every time

OF COURSE the Armed Services get Coca-Cola just as they get all the good things that are wanted and needed to do each job.

Coca-Cola has that extra something to do the job of complete refreshment. It has a taste that's uniquely satisfying—a quality that's unmistakable. And there's a reason. Coca-Cola holds the original secret of unique refreshment . . . a finished art in its making . . . a blend of wholesome flavours that can't be copied.

• • •

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called Coke. Coca-Cola and Coke mean the same thing . . . the real thing . . . "a single thing coming from a single source, and well known to the community".

At service canteens and recreation centres, you'll see how happily ice-cold Coca-Cola "cuts in" to make "intermission" a refreshing moment on the sunny side of things. It makes for morale.

The best is always the better buy!

Room Accommodation Needed

In an effort to relieve shortage of rooms in cities where housing accommodation for war workers is scarce the Government is opening a campaign to induce householders to rent their spare rooms to meet the emergency.

The names of Belleville and Trenton are likely to be included among a number of cities in Eastern Ontario where the scarcity is serious. It is hinted that where voluntary efforts fail compulsion may be resorted to to get the desired space. Due to war demands for materials and labor new housing construction has been restricted and building of new dwelling units will only be possible in the most extreme cases.

There is to be a house-to-house canvass to get a picture of the supply and where the existing accommodation is inadequate a report will be made to Ottawa with a view to having new housing construction authorized.

According to a survey of the city there is a definite shortage of apartments and houses for rent there being an immediate demand for one hundred single rooms alone along with two hundred small housing units or apartments. It has, also, been reported that some girls are having difficulty getting rooms chiefly because landladies, for reasons of their own, prefer to have men as lodgers. This is a matter that could be investigated and an attempt made to arrive at some solution of the difficulty.

Those who have rooms that are not in use except at odd times can help by registering at the local bureau so that the rooms can be used as required. A fair rental to both parties will likely be set at the proper time that should be satisfactory to both parties concerned.

Airmen Want Loan of Records

Early this week we published an appeal from a group of airmen at Mountain View Air Station asking for the loaning of gramophone records for a musical appreciation hour that the men intend to put on one evening a week. One of the things they stressed was that the records should include music by symphony orchestras and songs by operatic singers and so on. We expect some of the men in the camps are getting "fed-up" with what passes for music that we hear the great percentage of the time over the radio. Not all jazz is to be condemned but older people often object to the "hot" variety.

During the week there is the odd program that does include songs and music that have some melody and which the listener wishes to hear over again but mostly it is jazz of a blatant type that is distinctly tiresome. The worthwhile songs of the past will never lose their appeal but we hear them too infrequently.

We suppose the same charge can be levied at newspapers and magazines for publishing what seems to many readers news and articles that could not possibly interest anyone. What some people enjoy there are others who think the editors must be "nuts" to use such stuff. Probably the same thing occurs in radio and they must broadcast all kinds of programs to suit some of their listeners some of the time.

In the case of the Mountain View men we expect that there are enough of them in a camp of such size who really enjoy the kind of music that is too rarely heard today and they are making their own opportunities to have it providing the citizens of Belleville are willing to co-operate. They tell us they will take the best of care of the records and promise to return them in as good condition as when they received them from those fortunate enough to have them. We hope the boys will get enough of the records that they may be able to make a decent selection for their musical appreciation hour.

Canada as Ship Builder

While Britain and the United States are doing a great work on the building of merchant ships, Canada is at the big task too of providing cargo ships to ply the ocean lanes. Fifty-one huge cargo ships have been completed and delivered by Canada since the first of January, 1942, and all but one of these were built so far this year.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

ITEM AT DIEPPE

A tall, brave man in a coat of black,
Left a small French town that was red with flame,
There were wounded men and the sea wept blood
With the frozen stars in a silent chain.

Was a man of God to disown his place
And regain a world but to lose a soul?
Or was he to turn in the sullen gloom
To a band of men and to make them whole?

The tide pulls hard on the flashing oar
And the form in black with a cheerful word
Chances the waves and the beach again
To succor his men with the Word of God.

Was this a battle for worldly praise,
A soldier's fight and a life forgot?
Or was it a word to that man in black—
"Return that my children perish not!"

And Canada cheers for victory won,
But the wounded die within prison walls.
Then a simple man raises hands in prayer
And from God's heaven a blessing falls.

THE VICTORY LOAN

On October 19th Canadians will be asked to loan $7550,000,000 to the nation to carry on the Dominion's war effort.

Raising this amount of money would appear to be a herculean task. But it can be done—and it must be done.

And Canadians will see to it that it is done.

The Commando dagger, weapon of all-out ruthless warfare, will be the symbol for the Loan.

"Canadians who buy Third Victory Loan bonds this month," declared Mr. G. W. Spinney, chairman of the War Finance Committee, "will participate with Lieut.-General A. L. McNaughton, Canadian Army Commander, and the Army Overseas in pointing the dagger at the heart of Berlin."

Some seven hundred and twenty-two Commando daggers—Army issue, have been flown to Canada for distribution to 722 local units of the National War Finance Committee throughout the country.

According to Mr. Spinney, "when each community unit achieves its war loan objective, it will dispatch its Commando dagger to the regiment overseas which represents that community."

"The dagger will be for actual use in battle by a member of the regiment and will stand as a pledge from the folks back home to supply the armed forces overseas with all the weapons and equipment they need to reach Berlin."

One of these daggers will be sent to Belleville. It remains for the people of this city to dispatch it as quickly as possible to its fighting units overseas.

The quota for this county, it has been intimated, will be $2,150,000 an, amount slightly in excess of that of the last loan and which was generously oversubscribed by Hastings residents, business and industry.

There is a possibility that some people will talk of increased taxation, and perhaps use this fact as an alibi for not purchasing Victory Bonds. They should remember that no war can be won without sacrifices. And this war will never be won until everyone forgets about personal comfort, and starts thinking about winning the war.

There is no sense in trying to evade the facts. The duty of every Canadian is clear. The handwriting is on the wall in a clarity never experienced by the Dominion and the Empire.

It is time we in Canada forgot about "Letting George Do It," and set ourselves to the task of going all-out hand-in-hand with the lads who disdained to lend the government money, but offered their lives instead.

The time has come when winning the war has shifted from the shoulders of the armed services and the government. It is equally distributed to the rank and file of the nation. Every Canadian must help. And help by not only working in munitions factories or other essential industries; the Red Cross, or such organizations but by digging and digging deeply into our pockets in order that the weapons, planes, guns, and tanks, will be sent in an unending stream to the far flung battlefronts.

Belleville must, and we are sure, will do its part.

AFTER VICTORY

Some day the war will end;
And when the cheering's done
Wives will their gardens tend
Through spring and summer sun.
Children to school will go
And old men sit and chat,
And all our brave will know
They fought and died for that.

When freedom sits secure
And tyrants threat no more
These joys will all be sure,
Much as they were before;
Laughter, and dance, and song,
Easter, and Christmas Day
Saved from the pagan throng
Five thousand miles away.

Lovers in church will wed,
And down the aisles will pass
The neighborhood's honored dead
For ritual or for mass.
Then living as men ought,
We shall recall with pride,
For this our bravest fought,
For this our bravest died.

Stalin's Statement

New York, Oct. 7.—It is impossible to gloss over the importance of the Stalin statement. It is not put in the form of an ultimatum, but it is very nearly one. Nor is there any good debating what he means by "meeting obligations fully and on time." The answer to that question is given in the text of the statement. He means that he wishes the Anglo-American world to fight, and to fight now.

The Stalin statement must be taken in connection with the statement which Mr. Willkie made from Moscow and has now repeated from Chungking, urging the opening of a second front. Mr. Willkie in his first statement also remarked that some military leaders might need a little prodding. Since Willkie went to Moscow as the personal emissary of the President, there is only one conclusion to be drawn from that remark—namely, that the Anglo-American political leadership does not see eye to eye on all questions with the military leadership.

This apparent disagreement between the military and political leadership is also not confined to the Anglo-American world. There is a split between the Nazi leadership in Germany and the German High Command.

This was indicated in the Hitler speech. A large part of that speech was a rationalization of the value of the German victories in Russia. Hitler, in pretending to answer Allied leaders, was answering what he has unquestionably heard from his own generals—namely, that the acquisition of huge territories is not a synonym for winning a war. We know now that Marshal Fedor von Bock, who resigned with Brauchitsch over the last winter campaign, only to be reinstated, is out again, together with Ritter von Leeb.

Hitler Again on Defensive

Despite the gains, the German campaign in the Caucasus has failed. The timetable is off, and Hitler, in the face of the winter, is again obliged to go on the defensive—admittedly so, according to his own speech.

Stalin's statement also stated unequivocably that the Russian armies are as strong as those of "any aggressor power." The Russians have not been accustomed to overstate their strength. Their armies are intact after nearly fourteen months of war.

Marshal Goering's speech on Sunday confirms the rift between German political and military leaders, albeit in an indirect way. He states that no generals have been shot, but he adds that the Government would not hesitate to shoot generals as well as soldiers if they were cowards. Being a coward means giving a bad report on Russia, and on the whole military situation.

Stalin's ultimatum, combined with his reiteration of strength, can only mean one thing. It can only mean that he considers returning to the original Russian conception of fighting the Russian war alone—and making the Russian peace alone. He is saying, in effect: If the Anglo-Americans do not come up to scratch and really fight "the Fascist gangsters," then Russia will look out for herself.

In considering what obligations the Anglo-Americans may have given Russia, it is well to consider what obligations Russia took in return. Russia took two: To stay in the war and not make a separate peace and to abandon any program for the Communist revolution in Europe.

If Russia has to fight for all major military purposes alone, both of these reciprocal obligations may fall into the wastebasket.

Political Offensive Timid

The Anglo-American world has, up to now, made neither a major military offensive nor a major political offensive. The political offensive has been the timid and equivocal Atlantic Charter, which was still-born.

Nevertheless, the Russians have scrupulously fulfilled their political obligations, as well as fighting a war of unexampled and even reckless heroism. Everywhere in the world Moscow has laid down a line for the Communist Party: Support the war effort to the fullest. Everywhere the Communist Party has been against strikes and against any slowdown of working effort.

Stalin's Powerful Card

The record shows that Stalin abandoned the idea of the Communist revolution as an instrument of war policy, and probably willingly. A Communist revolution in Europe might upset Stalin's attempts to consolidate the revolution in Russia along more conservative lines. But if Stalin believes that Russia must fight alone, then he has a powerful card to play.

For the German European masses are Socialist. Dr. Goebbels had to precede Hitler with an extreme Left Wing speech to which far too little attention was paid here.

And if tomorrow Stalin should suddenly raise the banner, "Workmen, soldiers and peasants of Europe, unite for the all-European union of Socialist Republics against the Fascist gangsters and their Anglo-American stooges," he would have something.

And the German Army is not anti-Communist. The German And the Russians have never been so politically unastute as to announce, as we have done in the Atlantic Charter, the unilateral disarmament of Germany.

The Russians know that this war is a revolutionary war. They know that the German Army and the Nazi leadership are not necessarily the same thing. They judge armies by what they are fighting for.

There is more than one way to bring down Hitler.

AGE IN THE SADDLE

The present American Cabinet is probably the oldest cabinet that has ever presided over the destiny of the nation.

The total ages of President Roosevelt, Vice-President Wallace and the heads of the ten executive departments is approximately 734 years.

Their average age is slightly over 61 years.

The present age of these eleven men and one woman, not counting the odd months, are as follows:

President Roosevelt, 60.
Vice President Wallace, 54.
Secretary of State Hull, 71.
Secretary of Treasury Morganthau, 51.
Secretary of War Stimson, 75.
Attorney General Biddle, 56.
Postmaster General Walker, 56.
Secretary of Navy Knox, 68.
Secretary of Interior Ickes, 68.
Secretary of Agriculture Wickard 47.
Secretary of Commerce Jones, 68.
Secretary of Labor Perkins, 60.

Secretary of War Stimson, 75, is the oldest man in the present cabinet, and Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, 47, the youngest.

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who, like the President, is 60, does not give the date of her birth, in her biographical account in the Congressional Directory.

The original cabinet of President Washington was one of the youngest groups of men who ever set out to build a new government.

The average age of President Washington and his first cabinet was slightly over 44 years, or about 13 years less than the average age of President Roosevelt's present cabinet.

President Washington, 58.
Vice President Adams, 55.
Secretary of State Jefferson, 47.
Secretary of Treasury Hamilton, 33.
Secretary of War Knox, 40.
Attorney General Randolph, 37.
Postmaster General Osgood, 42.

It is an interesting fact that the oldest man in Washington's first cabinet, exclusive of the President and Vice President, was the same age as the youngest member of President Roosevelt's present cabinet.

There are now ten executive departments instead of five as in Washington's time.

Steps Under Way To Clarify Soviet Aid Situation

Washington, Oct. 7 — (AP) — Steps toward clarifying misunderstandings and removing complications that may have arisen in the Anglo-American program of aid to Russia are under way today.

President Roosevelt announced at his press conference yesterday that the United States ambassador, William H. Standley, is returning from his post in the Soviet Union to report, and Moscow dispatches said the Ambassador is bringing with him his military and naval attaches.

At the same time the president told reporters he had scanned the headlines reporting Wendell Willkie's recent demand for a second front but had not thought it worthwhile to read the stories.

In addition to Standley, Mr. Roosevelt said several other American diplomats, including Laurence A. Steinhardt, the Ambassador to Turkey, will return to Washington soon to report. Steinhardt already has reached the United States.

New Protocol Signed

Shortly after the president's announcement the state department announced the signing of a British-American-Soviet protocol covering the delivery of supplies to Russia and giving formal acceptance to agreements already in effect providing for uninterrupted continuance of the supply program agreed on at the Moscow conference a year ago.

Details of the arrangement were not announced, but it was noted the signing of the protocol and the announcement that Standley is coming home followed closely on Premier Stalin's blunt statement Sunday that Allied aid is relatively ineffective and calling on the Allies to "fulfill their obligations fully and on time."

Neither the president, at his press conference, nor Prime Minister Churchill in the House of Commons yesterday gave any hint of their attitude toward the second-front implications of the Stalin statement. Nor did the state department's announcement of a three-power protocol on Russian aid deliveries refer in any way to the Roosevelt-Molotov second front statement of last spring.

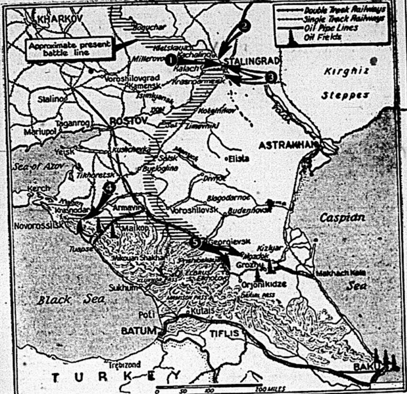
RED ARMY STANDS UP TO INVADER



This map shows how both flanks of the Germans attacking Stalingrad were under Russian pressure. While the Nazis hammered away at the upper part of the city (1), the Russians kept the initiative to the northwest (2) and advanced in the southwest in a drive probably based on Krasnoarmeisk (3). The Nazis were held below Novorossisk (4), where they are trying to reach the Black Sea coast. Around Mozdok (5) the enemy apparently is pushing in two directions. Here the Russians reported having repelled six attacks in a day, while the Germans said they had stormed Elkhotovo and another place nearby.

17 COMMUNISTS FREED FROM JAIL

Hepburn Not Pleased Release Has Been Made Conditional

Toronto, Oct. 7 — (CP) — Tim Buck and sixteen other Communists, released by order of Justice Minister St. Laurent yesterday after spending eleven days in Don jail, today sought to have the Dominion Government ban lifted on the Communist party of Canada.

"We are confident that sustained public pressure for the lifting of the ban will convince the Department of Justice and the King Government that it is in the national interest that the ban be lifted," said Buck, who explained he would devote his time to that purpose and campaigning for the opening of a second front in western Europe.

Buck and the sixteen other Communist leaders, sought by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for almost two years on internment orders, gave themselves up to officers Sept. 25.

Hepburn Not Pleased

Their "conditional release" was announced yesterday by Mr. St. Laurent in a telegram to Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, who in turn sent a telegraphic reply to the Justice Minister saying: "I, in common with the people of this province, object to any condition attached to the release" of Buck and the others.

Buck said last night in an interview he spent the two years he was a fugitive between Montreal and Toronto carrying on his duties as secretary of the Communist party.

Worked 14 Hours a Day

"I worked 14 hours a day," said Buck, tanned from sitting in the backyards of houses where he lived writing between 20 and 30 letters a day. "I got so I could pass policemen without any feeling of self-consciousness."

Commenting on the men's conditional release, Premier Hepburn said it gave them "the status of second-class citizens."

"We shall live up to those conditions," said Buck, who explained he and the sixteen other men were released only after they had signed a statement prohibiting them from participating in the activites of the Communist party or any other organization declared illegal under Defence of Canada Regulations.

Ration Coupon Banking Appears Probable

Washington, Oct. 7 (AP)—Handling hundreds of thousands of those little sugar rationing coupons is no joke.

And, with rationing spreading to more and more items, merchants in the United States are looking hopefully toward the ration coupon banking experiment scheduled for the Albany-Schenectady-Troy area of New York State. If it works there, it'll be applied nationally, says the office of price administration.

This plan, tried out successfully in Britain, permits businessmen to open bank accounts in which they deposit ration coupons received from their customers.

Then, when they need the coupons to replenish their stocks, they give their suppliers cheques for certain amounts of coupons instead of handing over the actual tickets. The suppliers deposit the cheques to their credit, and they're cleared back to the banks on which they're drawn.

CONSERVATIVES OPEN CONVENTION TO ALL PARTIES

Party Leaders to Meet in Winnipeg on December 9th., 10th., 11th.

MEIGHEN TO PRESIDE

Ottawa, Oct. 7 — (CP) — Conservative representatives from coast to coast last night decided that their national convention at Winnipeg on Dec. 9, 10 and 11 should be open to those not previously associated with their party who seek unity in pressing the war with vigor.

The National Convention Committee, charged with the duty of arranging for the convention, approved a resolution empowering the executive committee of the convention "to issue voting credentials as delegates-at-large to individuals and representatives of organizations, not previously associated with the Conservative party, who indicate their desire to attend or to be represented under the terms of the said announcement."

The "announcement" referred to was that of Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, national leader of the Conservative party, who issued a statement in Toronto on Sept. 22, saying:

"The time has now come when an opportunity should be given not only to Conservatives but to all Canadians who think as we do about this war and its conduct on the part of Canada, to get together and make a united effort to bring better things about."

Mr. Meighen's statement added that he hoped the convention doors would be open to all citizens who, regardless of former party affiliations, "are animated by these principles and resolved to give them effect."

An interim committee, headed by H. R. Milner, K. C., of Edmonton, chairman of a recent Conservative laymen's meeting at Port Hope, Ont., endorsed Mr. Meighen's view at a meeting on Sept. 26 and said the convention should be open to all Canadians who are ready to "unite for the utmost vigor in the conduct of the war."

Milner to Head Committee

The National Convention Committee yesterday announced the names of 48 of its members, including Mr. Meighen, Hon. R. B. Hanson, House of Commons opposition leader, provincial party leaders and presidents of provincial associations, senators, members of Parliament, 11 women supporters of the party and young Conservatives.

The National Committee was charged with making all arrangements for the convention, and spent more than 10 hours in discussion.

After deciding the date and place of the meeting, the committee named an executive committee to manage all detailed arrangements.

This committee will be headed by Mr. Milner, with R. A. Bell, secretary to Mr. Hanson, as secretary, and with Gordon Graydon, Conservative member of Parliament for Peel, Ont.; Gustave Monette, Montreal; Senator Louis Cote, Ottawa and Lt.-Col. A. C. Casselman, member for Grenville-Dundas, Ont., as members.

Mr. Meighen said "The whole subject of leadership and policy" will be before the convention, but there has been no indication of whether the former prime minister and former Conservative leader in the Senate proposes to resign the national leadership he took over last year.

The National Committee decided that there should be three classifications of voting delegates at the convention, in addition to those who receive credentials as individuals or representatives of organizations who indicate their desire to co-operate under the terms of Mr. Meighen's announcement.

WEDDINGS

PRESTIA—GERMAIN

A quiet, but pretty wedding was solemnized at ten o'clock Saturday morning, in the rectory of St. Patrick's Church, Niagara Falls, Ont., when Mrs. Jean Germain was united in marriage to Mr. Frank Prestia, with Father Hugh Austin officiating.

The bride was charming in a navy blue suit and hat with matching accessories, wearing a corsage of Johanna Hill roses and freesia. The bride's attendant, Mrs. Gordon Cullen, was attired in a black and red ensemble with black accessories, and a corsage of yellow roses and bronze 'mums.

Mr. P. Praino was the groomsman.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was laid for the immediate relatives at the home of Mrs. J. V. Buck, 972 Huron Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Prestia left for a honeymoon in Belleville, and on their return will reside at 931 Victoria Avenue, Niagara Falls, Ont.

GENGE—BELL

An early Autumn wedding was solemnized at the home of the officiating clergyman, Rev. J. D. P. Knox, Belleville, on Monday, at three p.m., when Miss Grace Kathaleen, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bell, Colden, was united in marriage to Mr. Edward Lorne Genge, youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Genge, Verona. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Anna Bell of Brockville, as bridesmaid, and the best man was Mr. Edgar V. Genge, Verona, brother of the bridegroom.

The bride looked very becoming in an afternoon dress of Aleutian blue wool crepe, made in a two-piece effect, the bodice beautifully trimmed in trapiento embroidery and self covered buttons, with bracelet length sleeves and sweetheart neckline. Her accessories were black shoes, gloves; with a turban style hat with veil and her only ornament was a gold locket, the gift of the groom. She wore a corsage of Sweetheart roses.

The bridesmaid wore a beige redingote with padded self embroidery trimming and brown accessories. Her corsage was of Talisman roses and the bridegroom's gift to the bridesmaid, was a gold compact.

A wedding dinner was served to immediate friends of the young couple at the Perfect Cafe. The table was decorated in pink and white and was centred by the bride's cake, which was made by her mother.

The happy couple left on a short wedding trip to points north. For travelling the bride chose a black and gold crepe dress and a green Harris tweed coat with black accessories. On their return, Mr. and Mrs. Genge will reside in Verona, Ont.

Red Cross Workers Begin Making Quota of 600 Garments for Boys Urgently Needed for Britain

Crisp Fall days find the women of Belleville and the surrounding district hard at work for the Red Cross just as they were in the warmest Summer weather. Red Cross headquarters on Campbell Street, fairly hums with activity, day and night. The making of sheets for Russian Red Cross has almost reached its conclusion. Of the four thousand quota, 3760 have already been shipped and it is hoped that any auxiliaries or individuals having sheets at home will finish and return them as quickly as possible. Scraps of material left over from cutting the sheets will be used for hospital gowns and caps for Russian hospitals.

A quota of six hundred articles of boys' clothing for Britain has been received by the local branch to meet an emergency demand for wearing apparel for boys of the ages of 2, 3, 4, 9, 11, 12, 14. A start has been made on this work which includes longs, shorts, shirts, coats and caps all of which are very badly needed.

Activities of the Red Cross for the coming months include the War Emergency Nursing Classes in charge of Mrs. A. H. Ketcheson. These classes have provided excellent training to a large number of girls and women since they were established in the city and those who finished the courses gained helpful experience as assistants to the nurses at the Blood Donor Clinic. Those who have been successful in the course are registered with the Red Cross and are on call to give assistance during epidemics or war emergencies

Those who have relatives who are prisoners of war will be interested in the very thorough manner in which the Red Cross looks after the needs of these men. Any information which next-of-kin might seek is available at the Red Cross branch. Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne is the liaison officer and should be informed of the names of prisoners-of-war and nearest of kin of relatives in this district.

Thousands of boxes of food are sent out weekly by the Canadian Red Cross Society for British prisoners-of-war, while cigarettes and tobaccos are sent through firms as are books, games and cards. Advice as to sending parcels the articles permissible, letters can be obtained from the Red Cross.

Still another service for the fighting men of Canada and their dependents is the newly formed Dependents' Board of Trustees which has been formed to assist financially and otherwise the dependents of men serving in the Canadian navy, army and airforce.

Build Health To Save Beauty

[illegible] believes in daily outdoor exercise

By HELEN FOLLETT

COSMETICS won't do much for you unless they have a background of health. Make-up is all too apparent on the woman who is starved for fresh air, who doesn't get enough sleep, whose musculature is poor and circulation sluggish. A good digestion does more for the complexion than the rouge compact and the powder pad.

The tired woman who seems unable to get rested drags out of the wrong side of the bed, is ready for tears or a grouch. Very sad. Let her put her psysical house in order and all will be well. She must snatch an hour of relaxation during the day in nine hours of sleep don't pull her together again. If the nap doesn't help she'd better toddle to the office of old Family Doc for medical advice.

Monotony gets many women down. The same old grind every day. Not enough fun. But one can go to see a funny movie or get an amusing book from the public library. That would help. If the weary ones don't take themselves in hand they will become morose and self-centered.

We all must have some outdoor life. The woman who likes to walk is getting the best possible exercise. She should pull up her backbone, lift her chest, flatten her tummy, let her arms swing back and forth and march.

Golf, tennis, swimming, rowing, badminton are all excellent forms of exercise. They keep the insidious fat cells from forming. They're good for hustling up the blood streams. They create appetite and a good appetite is a blessing.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Girls' aimless Chatter Keeps Them Dateless

Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Those lonesome, dateless girls who try to make of your column a 'Wailing Wall' all have an I—Me—Mine complex. The minute they open their mouths, it's, 'I did this today', 'I did that yesterday', 'I'm going to do that tomorrow', 'My girl friend and I saw Fitzmaurice Goo in "Heart's Adrift". She was crazy over it. I wasn't, but I liked Betty Bosh the feminine lead.'

"These I-specialists read only movie magazine, mystery stories and persist in swamping you with details. You try to edge in with your golf score. She recalls the murder mystery where Alabaster Fauntleroy slew someone with a broken golf club.

"You try to tell this moronic peach that a global war is raging and ask if she is doing anything about it—Red Cross work, volunteer activities. Has she signed up for any defense work at all? No, but she's seen three war movies. And didn't Asbestos O'Nut look magnificent in his uniform? Her mother loved him so did her aunts. Father didn't think so much of him.

"You decline the claret punch offered at the party where you met this peach, nevertheless you go home with a groggy feeling. Her aimless chatter has bored into the marrow of your bones.

"Perhaps it's coincidence, but next day, going to the office in the bus, you meet a girl you've never looked at before. Her brother is in your fraternity, but she never seemed to register with you, stupid creature that you've been. In the fifteen-minute bus ride you discover she's charming, intelligent, knows what's going on and, thank Heaven, has the gift of understatement. There's no I—Me—Mine, movie stuff, murder mysteries in the line she hands you.

"I discovered why this girl was sympatica. Evidently she has studied her brothers and dad, and got the masculine slant on things. A girl can't to that by chattering about her friends, movies and the shades of nail polish. A man is what a woman makes of his home-life, though I'll agree no woman can make anything but a clod out of a clod.

"I've been following the wails of these dateless girls in your column. They're dateless just because they don't take the trouble to be interesting.

"John Smith"

Well, girls, here's a chance to throw a few back at John Smith. Is your talk wholly and solely about movie stars, murder mysteries, etc? Do you never open a paper that has to do with the war? Up to date, have you passed up Defense work, Red Cross, or other activities? Tell John what you think of him in your criticism.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Money-Order Gifts to AEF

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. In your column the other day, when you wrote about what the service men voted as most desireable Christmas gifts, I think I remember that you said it is permissible to write "Christmas parcel" on a Christmas gift package. I meant to save both your columns about Christmas gifts to Service men but I have lost the one in which, I think, you wrote about this suggestion.

It seems to me such a practical suggestion that I would like to follow it, if it is permissible.

2. Also would you consider a money order a suitable gift?

G. R. T.

1. Yes, the Post Office Department not only suggests, but definitely advises us to write "Christmas Parcel" on our Christmas gift packages.

Also the Post Office Department informs us that we may write on the packages "such messages as 'Merry Christmas', 'Do Not Open Until Christmas', etc., if they do not interfere with the address.

2. Yes. Imagine how suitable and welcome any service man would consider it. However, I do think that a money order should be an "extra" gift, for the service man should also have the happiness and joy of opening the Christmas packages

To quote the authority of the Post Office Department again: "Don't send cash gifts. Use money orders. Some countries have a law against importing foreign money, but money orders may be cashed anywhere."

Acknowledge?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

Is it necessary to acknowledge a formal invitation to a wedding?

Clara

If the invitation is to the church only, it requires no formal acknowledgement.

PHILLIPSTON AND ZION INSTITUTE

The September meeting of the Phillipston and Zion Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Ted Follwell, Ann Street, Belleville, with a good attendance. Mrs. W. J. Tufts, the president, was in charge. All communications and bills were dealt with also new business. This institute has sent 96 pounds of jam; 96 pounds of jelly; 144 pounds of honey, which included a donation from Mr. and Mrs. Joe Miles. Plans were made for packing boxes for community boys who are serving overseas. The President stressed the great importance of all members giving cookies, soap, socks, gum, chocolate bars, razor blades.

The Red Cross work was reported by Mrs. Bunnett. Roll Call: one way to conserve sugar, was well responded to. Mrs. Ralph Sills had the motto for the afternoon, "The value of nutrition in war time", leaving many valuable thoughts with her listeners. Community singing with Mrs. Percy Ray at the piano. Mrs. Joe Miles demonstrated a hot apple dish for supper. Mrs. C. Holmes, provincial board director, who was guest speaker, gave many fine thoughts for each to remember on what the other districts are doing. Miss B. Jones also gave a short address.

The president then requested Mrs. Harry Ketcheson, leader of Phillipston and Zion Girls' Club, during the past year to outline their activities. With Mrs. D. Rowe as assistant leader, a group of girls eight in number, completed the "Junior Home Making Unit". "The Club Girl Stands on Guard". All attended Achievement Day in Stirling early in July. In the Spring five girls became members of the garden brigade, each planting and caring for the family vegetable garden and thus making a very very worth while contribution toward our war effort.

On September 12th this group attended the Gardening and Canning Club Achievement Day held also in Stirling under the direction of Mr. H. L. Fair, Agricultural Representative and Miss Jean Scott, County Coach. Following are the names of the girls who took part in these projects: Phyllis Beatty, Jean Sills, Bessie Sills, Irene Ketcheson, Gwen Ray, Shirley Robson, Barbara Robson, Barbara Simmons and Ilda Ketcheson.

Collection was taken and the meeting closed with "God Save the King" after which Mrs. Follwell and her assistants served lunch.

WHITES W. A.

October meeting of White's W. A. was held on Thursday, October 1st at the home of the Rev. J. M. Spence and Mrs. Spence. The meeting was opened by the President, Mrs. F. Sandercock, all singing Hymn 436, followed by prayer by Mr. Spence. Mrs. C. Rush read the scripture reading. Hymn 399 was sung. The roll call was answered by a verse of Scripture. There were 14 members present and 5 visitors. Collection $4.10. As the meeting was not held on the regular date, the copper contest will not conclude until November meeting. The money promised in lieu of a fowl supper is to be collected in time for the Anniversary Service.

Mrs. L. Hunt thanked the members for the plant sent her when she was ill and Mrs. R. Ketcheson for the card sent her since her recent bereavement. It was suggested a plant be sent to Mrs. D. Moore who is ill in Belleville General Hospital.

Mrs. C. Ketcheson was named convener for decorating the church for Anniversary Services.

Hymn 496 was sung and all repeated the Mizpah Benediction. A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Spence for opening her home. Mrs. Spence served a very dainty lunch, and after a social half-hour all departed for their homes.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

Testing the Working Ability of the Liver

For a number of years found myself writing about the liver almost once every month. I pointed out the various jobs done by the liver such as manufacturing bile and then the various jobs done by the bile; the storing of sugar in the liver for future needs of the body; the importance of the liver in filtering out the harmful substances from the blood and the effects these harmful substances would have on the body tissues and body processes if they were not filtered out; the coloring and other materials in the liver used to help form the blood; that the liver was the largest organ in the body and had within it about one-quarter of all the blood of the body.

There was one point I mentioned once or twice but did not emphasise as I should have done and that was the advisability of having the liver tested for its working ability just as the heart, kidneys, stomach, bloodvessels and other organs are tested. A test can be made showing the working ability of the liver by the use of substance taken by mouth or injected into a vein. The liver should remove these substances from the blood within a definite time if it is doing its work properly. One of these substances is hippuric acid.

In the Medical Journal of Australia, Drs. Margaret Henderson and B. Splatt report their results in 89 patients with liver disease, 86 with various other disorders, and 26 normal adults or patients recovering from minor ailments. Not only did the results show the extent to which the liver was damaged or unable to do its work, and the extent of heart damage but it showed also how the damaged condition of the liver was allowing poisons to aggravate other conditions present in the body, such as pernicious anaemia, tuberculosis and rheumatic arthritis.

In the treatment of a sluggish liver or a liver that is not doing its work properly, the physician prescribes special diets and various drugs.

However, we can keep the liver in good working condition by taking long deep breaths or by bending exercises keeping the knees straight (both exercises squeeze the liver) and by avoiding overeating.

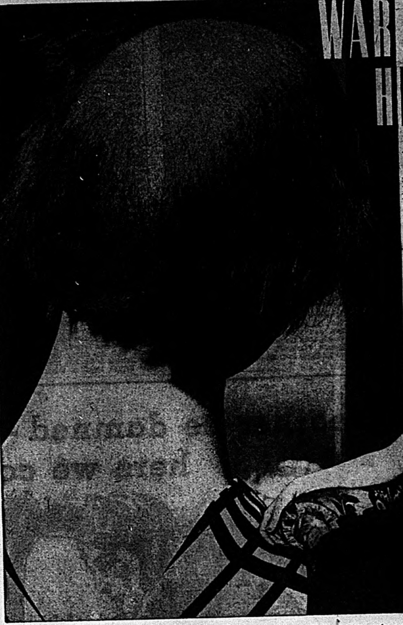
WAR SNATCHING HER BALD

What to do to meet the doctor's warning that worry and changes in living may end the old legend that nobody ever saw a shiny-pated female (but there's comfort in the claim that you seldom see a male softie who is bald!)

By CHARLES NEVILLE



Terrible, indeed, is the picture of things to come predicted by experts—a picture of a bald woman that only a dummy (like above) can do justice to. Yet war's strains, too much cutting, can do it, they say! "Slow down," one relief!

WAR'S anxieties, threats of security, changes in ways of living and, for the first time, inclusion of women among the military forces, promise to bring on a new army of baldpates, feminine gender. That is, according to Dr. Eugene Traugott Bernstein, dermatology specialist, who, in a recent report in the Journal of Mental and Nervous Diseases, goes on to say that "sudden shock may be the cause of complete loss of hair in women." He cites the case of one woman who thought herself trapped in a burning house. "Two days after this incident," the doctor relates, "she lost all her hair."

Distingue Princess Lucy Cotton Thomas Tchitcherine, (above) once shaved her pretty head (shown partly recovered above.) She quickly changed her mind, now has plenty. This was before the era of women in pants and permanents.

Even fear of a modern blitz tends to throw femininity off its endoglandular balance—endocrines being the secondary glands that play an important part in mental stress and strain. Consequently this "vegetative nervous system," which controls normal growth of nails, hair, etc., goes completely out of kilter—and what can the hair do but curl up and die?

As Dr. Bernstein broadcast from the Bureau of Information of the Academy of Medicine recently over the Columbia Broadcasting System, "Emotions affect the skin by first distributing the sympathetic nervous system, then the blood vessels, muscles and nutrition of the skin itself. Thus, you see, the mind not only affects the skin, but the appendage—the hair. So one turns 'white as a sheet,' 'red as a beet' or his or her hair literally 'stands on end!'" (or comes out in big, alarming bunches.)

"Women used to lead sheltered lives," the doctor points out. "Today the same psychic insults are hurled at her as at her mate." Also, it must be admitted, women are showing more masculine traits and, as a result, they must pay for it a thousand times over, hair for hair.

To prevent feminine baldness would be to turn back the clock. To cure the condition requires "less nights out and more serene relaxation, good scalp hygiene and an attempt at keeping a balance in one's life, however difficult to attain these difficult days." Also a good dermatologist. For there are what the doctor calls "estrogenic substances"—which shouldn't frighten you since they are simply ovarian extracts which, together with the vitamins should bring back your hair's vitality.

But despite the doctor's warnings and ministrations, what with the 3 o'clock-in-the-morning air raid alarm and next year's income tax a daily nightmare, he practically admits there's a chance that many a woman will have none too much fuzz left to prop even her perky little brow.

Among the unwelcomed Paul Reveres shouting to the women that baldness is coming is Charles Nessler. As owner of important hair-waving patents, he is in touch with hairdressers all over the country.

"What has come to pass," glooms this Jeremiah of the Permanent Wave, "was foreseen twenty years ago when, for the first time in history, girls began imitating boys in cutting their hair."

So, they have been at it long enough to provide enough facts to chart a trend. Furthermore, the safety demands of war industry, etc., demand short hair.

"Hairdressers from all over the country," Mr. Nessler's figures indicate, "report an unmistakable tendency to baldness in our younger women. Recent measurements of their hair growth have revealed deficiencies up to 55 per cent from what women of similar ages grew nineteen years ago. Few are actually bald yet, but, considering the initial causes and their continuance, it can't be far off."

Men do get bald more often than women, but that doesn't seem much of a puzzler for the good doctors. They claim that this is merely another one of the differences between the two sexes.

That baldness really means virility in later life is a hypothesis of Dr. James B. Hamilton, anatomist who has been conducting experiments at Yale University. Although among normal men, 43 per cent lose much of their hair in middle age, among a large group of men who had not matured physically, he found not one bald head. The unmasculine also were found to have less dandruff.

"No one ever saw a bald eunuch," was the terse and scientific declaration of one dermatologist.

Continuing his experiments, male sex hormones were given to these glandularly deficient men and they began to lose hair and develop dandruff. When the treatments were stopped, loss of hair ceased.

But one cause seems fairly definite—heredity. Sons seem to inherit their father's pattern of baldness with other characteristics.

It's all a matter of training a well-behaved scalp to pay attention to growing hair early in life, according to Mr. Nessler's theory. Before twenty years of age, the scalp grows ten feet of hair. Frequent sheddings are replaced with shorter growths having healthy roots—a cycle which occurs six times before the scalp is grown. Long hair in girls gives the scalp good training for the years to come.

In adult life, a good crop for the anxious hair-grower should be six inches. And not six inches here and there—but all over the scalp. If this doesn't happen, it is vulgarly and unscientifically known as "baldness"—a condition frequently observed among barbers selling hair tonics.

There are three types of baldness—(1) All bare, like Mussolini's; (2) Fading in front, like Chas. Boyer, Bing Crosby; (3) Churchill, above, and Jim Farley, hair around the edges indicating the virile type, say experts.

"All babies look like me!" is the quite profound statement of the Churchill-looking Kewpie, above. Kewpie seems to be very certain he's right, too. (Atlas Photo.)

HOLLYWOOD NOTEBOOK

By Ann Marsters

- Carole Landis recently announced that movie stars can be just as lonely and dateless as any other girl, what with so many of the boys going into service. So the Marines stepped into the situation—and now they arrive in batches from the San Diego base every week-end and take Carole out dancing and dining.
- The Hollywood Reporter, local trade paper, says this about Bette Davis' latest picture: "All of Bette Davis' previous screen achievements are but dress rehearsals in the light of her great triumph in 'Now, Voyager.'"
- What kind of movies do the boys in our armed forces like best? War Department theatres report that the favorites of last month, in order of their popularity, were: "Beyond the Blue Horizon," "Wings for the Eagle," "Crossroads," "This Above All," "Flight Lieutenant" and "Take a Letter, Darling."
- Before George Montgomery becomes a Flying Cadet in the Marine Corps, he will make two more pictures at 20th Century Fox—"In Old Coney Island," and "Down to the Sea in Ships."
- "Wake Island" is boosting Marine enlistments wherever it plays. Sixteen thousand new recruits are needed monthly by the Marines—and the picture is really being quite a help in the recruiting drive for fighting men.
- Gary Cooper is discussing a deal with United Artists in which he will be both producer and star, with permission to do occasional outside pictures.
- Warners will make a patriotic musical, and the cast will be made up of every star on its contract list.
- Chiang Kai-shek has written the foreword for Republic's "Flying Tigers," based on the American Volunteer Group which has been of such great help to China. The foreword reads: "Since the Flying Tigers first spread their wings in skies above China, the enemy has learned to fear the intrepid spirit they have displayed in face of his superior numbers. They have become the symbol of the invincible strength of the forces now upholding the cause of justice and humanity. The Chinese people will preserve forever the memory of their glorious achievements."
- There were at least two camera crews with the U. S. Marines in their attack on the Solomon Islands. And the Government will allow part of the film to be used by Hollywood.
- Mapy Cortez, imported from Puerto Rico to dance the rhumba and conga on the screen, says she wouldn't dream of dancing like that in public, back home. "It is not proper," she declared, "to dance these dances in night clubs in any Latin capital. Nice people dance only the waltz or the fox trot. Of course," she added, "tourists dance the rhumba and conga at our night clubs. But they do not know our customs."
- Nancy Didrikson, sister of Babe Didrikson, is working on the Paramount lot as stand-in for Ingrid Bergman, the Maria of "For Whom the Bell Tolls." Nancy is a pretty strawberry blonde, and closely resembles Ingrid in features, height, and complexion.
- Barbara Stanwyck is terribly discouraged about her Victory garden. It got off to a fine start, and within a few weeks the corn was two feet high. Then Barbara went away for a week—and when she returned, the corn seemed shorter. But Bob Taylor just laughed at her when she kept insisting that the corn was growing shorter and shorter, instead of taller. Finally, she called in a professional farmer who discovered that gophers were feasting on the corn roots, pulling the corn down into the ground as they nibbled at the roots.
- Bing Crosby is the worst dressed man in Hollywood—and he is proud of the title. "I am also," he said, "the most comfortable." He probably has the largest collection of unmatching coats and trousers in the country. He has only one sober suit. He has worn it four times—to the respective christenings of his four sons.
- Republic studio is going to give a star buildup to a horse—and maybe that's a good idea, considering the way the human stars of draft age are disappearing from Hollywood. The horse is Trigger—a beautiful Palomino owned by Roy Rogers. Trigger will be given solo action work in his prancing before the cameras.
- Gene Autry's studio has three scripts ready for him—still hoping that the War Department will grant leaves of absence to the top cowboy star so he can make some more westerns.
- For Jane Withers' starrer, "Johnny Doughboy," several scenes will be made in and around Jane's own home.
- Since Andy Devine shed 50-odd pounds, his movie career has picked up. His new figure won him a top role in "Between Us Girls" with Diana Barrymore, and now he's slated for another important spot in "Sin Town."

You'll be seeing more of...

PHYLLIS RUTH. She started her movie career as an extra -- and she is one of the very few such players to fight her way up from the extra ranks. One day, producer B. G. De Sylva spotted her walking around the Paramount lot. At that time, he was casting "Caught in the Draft," and he needed a tiny blonde comedienne to play opposite Eddie Bracken. He didn't even ask Phyllis what experience she had had, but promptly signed her for the role.

De Sylva was so pleased by her handling of the role, that he then cast her in "Louisiana Purchase". After the first rushes, she was signed to a long-term contract.

Player Shifts Develop Cards Into a Championship Team According to Bill Southworth

Kurowski Put in as Regular Player and Beazley Given Starting Role

WARNEKE SOLD

By JUDSON BAILEY
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, Oct. 7 — (AP) — One of the reasons St. Louis Cardinals were able to spring a surprise on New York Yankees in the world series, and a lot of other people including Brooklyn Dodgers, was that they finished with a different team than the fluttering Redbirds who started last spring.

When the Cardinals came streaking down the stretch in the National League, their rivals consoled themselves with remembrances of the earlier Redbirds and figured they would return to their previous pace.

It took the world series to prove that winning 43 of their last 52 scheduled games was nearer the natural gait of the Cards than their performance in the first half of the season when they reached the all-star-game intermission with a record of 43 won and 29 lost.

At the start of the season the St. Louis infield had rookie Ray Sanders on first, Frank Crespi on second, Martin Marion at short and Jimmy Brown at third. The experts were saying the Cardinals had sold away their pennant chance by letting Big John Mize go to New York Giants.

George (Whitey) Kurowski, whose homer in the fifth game of the world series clinched the championship for the Cards, was considered likely timber for Rochester or Columbus, or some other Redbird farm. His short right arm, from which three inches of bone were removed in a childhood operation, made him a dead left-field hitter.

Time for a Change

The Cards dropped a doubleheader May 24 and at that point had won only 19 games to 17 lost. Manager Billy Southworth decided the time was ripe to start masterminding.

The next day Brown moved to second and Kurowski became the regular custodian of the hot corner. The team won four straight.

Then came the next step in the revitalization of the Redbirds. On May 27 Johnny Hopp was installed permanently at first base. The change would have been made sooner except that Hopp had injured a thumb soon after the season started.

However, right along about here the Cards received a rude setback because their two southpaw stars, Ernie White and Howie Pollet, developed arm trouble.

Discover Beazley

This pitching problem helped lead to the discovery of Johnny Beazley. He was going into games as a relief pitcher, holding the foe scoreless for four or five innings and the Cards were coming from behind frequently to win for him.

Up till June 28 Beazley, the 23-year-old sensation of the year, had started only two games, but he convinced Southworth it was a mistake to spot the other teams three or four runs before putting in Beazley.

So the manager made up his mind to make the lanky rookie a starting pitcher and a week later sold Lon Warneke to Chicago Cubs for waiver money $7,500 in a deal that shocked the baseball front. Some folks thought the Cards were conceding the pennant to the Dodgers. It was just the other way around. From the day the Cards made this misunderstood deal they won 63 games and lost just 16.

LACROSSE FINALS OPEN IN TORONTO

Combines Meet Salmonbellies of New Westminster for the Title

Toronto, Oct. 7—(CP)—A scholarly dissertation on the spectator appeal of colored lacrosse balls obscured the usual pre-series arguments today as New Westminster Salmonbellies and Mimico-Brampton Combines prepared to open their best-of-five Dominion championship series.

The professor in charge of instruction was Jack Woods, coach of Salmonbellies. Woods says his big worry is that a white ball will be used instead of an orange ball like the Salmonbellies use. He claims the white ball will blend into the glittering white side and end boards at Maple Leaf Gardens where the series opens tonight.

As for the Combines, Woods predicted "We'll outrun 'em, outpass 'em, and, I hope, outscore 'em." He believes the fast-breaking Salmonbellies and their short passing game will give the bigger and more experienced Combines plenty to worry about.

Both teams will hold light drills today. Salmonbellies arrived in Toronto Monday after trampling Lachine-Villa St. Pierre in a semi-final series. The two games cost them the services of Art Mathewson and Doug Ross, both injured. Clifford (Kip) Routley and Marcus Smith left New Westminster Saturday and will be on hand for the opener.

Combines are at full strength. They have had a long layoff after a gruelling seven-game series with St. Catharines Athletics and Coach Chuck Davidson says "My team is plenty hot right now." Three players have been added for the Mann Cup series—Carl (Alababa Gus) Madsen from St. Catharines and Bill Isaacs and Onions Smith from Hamilton Tigers.

SPORT SHORTS FROM BRITAIN

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 7—(CP)—It's not often that the solemn ritual of the bloodstock sales ring, where large sums sometimes are bid by the nod of a head or the wave of a catalogue, is touched by comedy relief. So poker-faced bidders broke into hearty laughter when this happened at an important Newmarket sale:

Lord Milton used his catalogue to brush a fly from his face and promptly had the first lot—a mare named Love Tie—knocked down to him for 80 guineas ($295).

Lord Milton explained and Maj. Gerald Deane, the auctioneer, said laughingly that "if you wave I take the bid, you know."

So Love Tie was put up again—and was sold for the same price to another ringsider.

The late Sir Alec Black's stud and young horses in training realized approximately $70,250 at Newmarket. The biggest price, $9,950, was paid for two-year-old Myastre, a recent winner. The purchaser was Reg Day—the man who trained him.

Former Canadian Davis Cupper, Walter Martin of Regina and Toronto, lost a tennis singles match at Lewisham in a Red Cross match. He was beaten 7-5, 6-3, by C. M. Jones, former British Davis Cup team member and now an R.A.F. officer.

Martin, a flight lieutenant at R.C.A.F. headquarters, then teamed with a Briton, Claude Lister, to beat Jones and K. Della-Porta, 7-5, 6-2 in doubles.

It's a lengthy title but a team from a Canadian squadron commanded by Wing Cmdr. Len Fraser of Winnipeg and Vancouver, holds the All-Bomber Squadron Softball Championship of the Midlands area.

Fraser's men took the crown by whipping another Canadian bomber squadron team 24-12 in the final. Fraser presented Y.M.C.A. medals to members of both teams after the match.

The winner's batting powerhouse was led by Sgt. Tom Cranston of Midland, Ont.; AC. R. Smith, of Toronto and AC. Herb Kent of Quebec City.

SERIES PROVIDES SECOND-GUESSERS PLENTY OF TOPIC

Three Major Factors Why Yankees Lost to St. Louis Cards

JOE GORDON GOAT

(By SID FEDER)
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 7. (AP)— The Yankees probably would be the first to admit that the main thing that happened to them in the late lamented World Series was St. Louis Cardinals.

But beyond that, the old cracker barrel figures to get quite a banging around this winter as the fans try to figure out just what it was that changed the alleged greatest club in baseball into something more like the 10th Avenue alley cats.

Now, second-guessing the series from this range is something like locking yourself in a safe and challenging Joe Louis, but looking back at what happened there appears to have been three major factors that added up to the large eight ball Joe McCarthy and his men got behind.

These headaches were (a) Joe Gordon's patty-cake plate-work (b) the absence of a left-handed Yankee pitcher especially since southpaw slingers had a voodoo on the Cards all summer and (c) the galloping ghost in the St. Louis centre field, Terry Moore.

Moore Stops Dimaggio

You don't have to look much farther than Moore when you're tabbing the series hero, because Moore stopped Joe Dimaggio, when Dimag had to be stopped.

American League clubs tell you the outfits who've been toughest for the Yanks since jolting Joe has been around have been those with rapid centre fielders. Dimaggio is primarily not a pull hitter, but a solid sender to left centre.

Moore "stole" at least three homers—triples anyway—from Joe by galloping miles for Dimag's drives.

The biggest difference between this year's Yankees and the Yanks who belted the Brooklyn Bums over a year ago was Joe Gordon. Every time Leo Durocher looked up during the '41 fuss the flash was on base.

But this fall, Gordon fanned seven times and swung at some balls so wide he couldn't have reached with the centre-field flagpole for a bat.

In the '41 series, too, the best pitched game was served up by the Yanks' young southpaw, Marius Russo. But Marius has been nursing an ailing flipper, and since El Goofo Gomez appears about ready to call it a career, the Yanks just didn't have a portsider.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Oct. 7 (AP)—While American soldiers are lend-leasing baseball to Britons and Australians (and causing them no end of confusion we're getting a taste of rugby in return....A team of Australian and New Zealand flying cadets will play a Royal Navy outfit as a preliminary to the Columbia-Brown game Saturday and two squads from the R.A.F. flying school at Ponca City, Okla., will put on an exhibition for Oklahoma City fans a week later....From all we hear, it's a rough, fast game .... Race-horse experts point out that the ban on special trains to the tracks is making the hoss players walk both ways—instead of just home.

Johnny on the Spot

A lot of guys would be willing to give the shirts off their backs to help win the war, but the Reds' Johnny Vander Meer actually did it....After pitching a benefit exhibition game in Jersey the other day, Johnny contributed the shirt of his baseball uniform to be raffled off....It went to the day's biggest war bond buyer.

TORONTO, Oct. 7 — (CP) — Toronto Leafs' sale of Gordon Drillon to Montreal Canadiens split National Hockey League fans into two Camps: those who believe Drillon will be as great a goal-getter without Syl Apps to make plays; and those who don't.

Some fans claimed Drillon did not carry his share of the defensive load with Leafs but none could deny his ability to score. His long-time record proves that. Those who believe Apps' superlative play-making was chiefly responsible for Drillon's stardom will clamor loudly if Gordon fails to show as well alongside another centre. They must not forget their own arguments that Apps can make any winger look mighty good now that no one man can be a team in himself. Unless Drillon is given sound assistance with Canadiens he assuredly will not maintain his high-scoring record.

Incidentally:

Promoter Len Barker of Regina, always ready for something new, is introducing the air force's new game with girls as contestants. They call it borden ball with the rules similar to hockey but a rugby ball is used ... women are still cropping up in new jobs. Doris Trueb, one of Vancouver's best women bowlers, is new manager on the lower floor of Pender Alleys there ... Bill (Niagara Falls Review) Sootheran, after an interview with Hon. Humphrey Mitchell, reported the Federal Minister of Labor has a notable athletic background. Bill says Mr. Mitchell introduced the Australian crawl to Canadian swimmers.

Bowling Blurb:

Bill (Ottawa Journal) Westwick quotes R. J. Wood of Toronto, secretary of the Canadian Bowling Association, on the growth of five-pin bowling in Canada. Wood said a survey disclosed more five-pin alleys in Ontario alone than there are ten-pin alleys in all of the United States. He credits Toronto's Tommy Ryan with originating the five-pin game around 1917, making the game more popular for women by introducing smaller bowls and reducing size of the pins.

GERMAN BOAT DESTROYED

London, Oct. 7—(CP)—British Light Naval Forces destroyed a German motor torpedo boat in a clash with an enemy flotilla off the Belgian coast last night, but one British vessel is missing, the admiralty announced tonight.

Other British vessels were damaged. The German ship, one of a formation of torpedo boats and motor torpedo boats, "was set on fire and subsequently was seen ot blow up," said a communique.

WOMEN TOO—Join "that men may fly." Canadian women fill vital jobs in the R.C.A.F. Women's Division, releasing men for air crew duties. Recruits are needed, age 18 to 40, physically fit, with at least High School entrance. Many useful and fascinating jobs await you. No experience needed. The Air Force will train you quickly to take your place with Canada's airwomen. Full information at any R.C.A.F. Recruiting Centre, or write address below for booklet.

Hundreds of miles away, through clouds and mist, lies the target for which the tons of bombs in their racks are waiting. The skill of the Navigator brings the plane to the spot where the deadly explosive will tear into the enemy's vitals. The training he got in R.C.A.F. navigation schools qualifies him to set the course which brings the attack to the objective. The success of the flight is largely in his hands.

Not in his hands alone, for each of the other members of the air crew does his essential part. That's what air crew training in the R.C.A.F. means—the development of a team with perfect co-ordination and deadly striking power.

They are real pals, these young teams, sharing a great adventure. When their present job is done and the enemy is wiped out they will share in the future which awaits them as masters of the air.

R.C.A.F. training in Canada is expanding steadily. More planes, more schools, more instructors are now available. Applications are being accepted for air crew at R.C.A.F. Recruiting Centres throughout Canada.

If you are physically fit, mentally alert, over 17½ and not yet 33, you are eligible. If you are over 33, but have exceptional qualifications, you may still be considered. Lack of formal education is no longer a bar to enlistment.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

MIGUEL "MIKE" GONZALEZ, veteran coach of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals, celebrated his fiftieth birthday on the identical day the Red Birds clinched the National League pennant on Sept. 25th.

National League pennants are not new to Mike, as he has been with four previous champions, McGrew's Giants, Gabby Street's Cardinals of 1931 and the Frisch Gas House Gang of 1934. What's more, world's championships have followed the veteran Cuban to a much higher degree than most men in his league, as he was on three blue ribbon winners.

Mike was third-string catcher on the Giants of 1921, and though he was a good fielding backstop, both Frank Snyder and Earl Smith, better hitters, gained the call over him for McGraw's assignments. Gonzales got into only 13 games, most of them substituting for George Kelly at first base. Commissioner Landis took hold of the first World's Series that year, 1921, and though Mike didn't play an inning of the eight games with the Yankees the Commissioner made a rule that no player who had been eligible for the Series —could do any winter barnstorming. That hit Gonzalez hard, as he then was the playing manager of the Havana Reds in Cuba's winter league. Instead of playing first base for his team as usual, Mike had to run the Havana Reds from the bench and coaching lines.

On a winter vacation trip to Havana, a puzzled, excited Cuban fan asked the writer: "What kind of ball player do they think Miguel Gonzalles is in your United States? John McGraw doesn't let him play in summer, and Judge Landis doesn't let him play in winter. When do they think he should do his ball playing—in his sleep?"

IN THE 13 WORLD'S SERIES IN which the New York Yankees have participated since 1921, the Bronx Bombers only failed once to achieve a single victory in games played in baseball's fall classic. That was the series of 20 years ago—the second of the three famous Giant-Yankee clashes—in which the McGrawmen of 1922 captured four out of five contests, with the second game ending —in a three-all ten-inning tie.

Since then the Yankees have crashed —with the National League champions in eleven world series, losing only the 1926 and 1942 series. Strangely enough the Yankees two losses were to two inspired St. Louis Cardinal baseball clubs.

TRUST THESE WRESTLERS, who appear every Wednesday night at the Hume Arena, to get into the newspaper limelight. Take for instance Pedro Martinez, the rough and ready Mexican grappler who meets Jake Burns here tonight. Pedro might be a ring villain, as a matter of fact Burns will find that out for followers as the following newspaper yarn, published by a Toronto scrivener recently proves. The Queen's City scribe had this to say about Martinez after last week's bout in the Maple Leaf Gardens: "Pugnacious Pedro had come through an exceptionally stirring contest and had been roundly derided by the fans. However, after the bout the young tremulous lady asked him for his autograph.

Pedro started to oblige when a kibitzer said to the girl: "You have a nerve asking for an autograph after the way you booed and hollered at Pedro during the bout tonight."

The young thing stammered and looked uncomfortable and finally said to Martinez: "Honestly, I didn't think you'd remember, else I'd never have asked for your autograph."

Without cracking a smile, Martinez went on signing and replied: "This time I will autograph, but remember, I never miss a thing that goes on during a bout."

REMEMBER WHEN FRANK (King) Clancy, chunky Ottawa Senator defenceman, was signed by the Toronto Maple Leafs 12 years ago today? One of the greatest defencemen in the history of hockey, Clancy retired in 1936. He was purchased from Ottawa for $35,000.00 cash and a player, the biggest one-player deal ever made in hockey history.

THIS AND THAT—THE BOYS along gambling row took a swell shellacking in the World Series, the wise guys betting as high as two to one on the Yankees, with lots of takers on the short end. . . Just whether there'll be another World Series for the duration, only time can tell. . . . Already baseball greats are headed for the United States armed services in such names as Slaughter, Rizzuto, Beazley, Korowski, Moore, Gordon, Hassett and even old Red Ruffing. . . The Montreal and District Hockey League folded for the duration. . . Two years ago Johnny Beazley, rookie hero of the 1942 World's Series, wanted to quit baseball while with the New Orleans Pelicans. . . Charley Hearth, business manager of the Pelicans, persuaded Beazley to have his tonsils out and his previous ill-health vanished. . . . Johnny Pesky, Red Sox shortstop, is one of sixteen major league players to collect as many as 200 base hits in their freshman season of major league baseball. . . . The Cubs might not have cut much of a figure in the National League, but they did have the best financial year in four. . . .The New York Giants have won 15 pennants since 1888, while the Yankees have copped 13 since 1921. . . Unofficially the football lid will be pried off this week when the B.C.I. and St. Mikes senior six-man squads tangle in an exhibition game . . . .Both Stirling and Tweed High schools are preparing for a strenuous football season. . . .The latter squad are champions of the Bay of Quinte area.

Johnny Niggeling, 37-year-old pitcher of the Browns, was the American League's leading night-game pitcher for 1942. He had six wins and no defeats.

Billy Southworth's son, Billy Jr., is a captain in the Army Air Forces.

Bonham pitched the game that put the Yanks in first place May 6, and the same pitcher was on the mound when the club clinched the pennant.

Little Benny's Note Book

My cousin Artie stayed at my house all night, and pop and ma went to the movies and Artie and I were suppose to go to bed at 9 positively and no later, and we were listening to the radio and waiting for 9, and the announcer on the Zippo Suds hour told all about a thousand dollar prize for whoever sent in the best letter telling about an experience with Zippo Suds, and Artie said G, let's both write a letter and no matter which one wins the prize we'll divide the thousand dollars.

Sounding fair enough, and we wrote our letters, mine being:

My Experience With Zippo Suds

One time I was coming home from the store with a box of Zippo Suds and it fell right in a mud puddle and broke open, and the suds made the mud pudle as clear as cristal, an I took out my hankerchif and washed it right in the puddle and it came out as white as snow, and if you knew my hankerchiffs you would realize this was a remarkable experience.

And Artie's being:

My Experience With Zippo Suds

One time I undumped a whole box of Zippo Suds in the bathtub and took a bath and I came out so white I looked in the mirrer and thought I was an angel and tried to fly all around the bathroom.

Let's run right out and mail them, Artie said, and I said, Aw heck all the envelopes are locked up, I guess ma only had her good ones left and she thought somebody might take some.

Proving if she did she thought right, and we left the letters on ma's desk with a note telling her to please send them to the Zippo Suds Company, the result being pop gave us a dime to divide between us this morning, saying the letters were worth that much of a prize to him personly.

JAM FOR BRITAIN

AT THE CAPITOL

Richard Cromwell as a young doctor finds it tough to refuse to operate on a stricken gangster at the point of a gun in "Riot Squad," tense dramatic screen play coming to the Capitol next with the added special western "Arizona" starring Jean Arthur and Wm. Holden.

AT THE McCARTHY

Jimmy Rogers (son of Will Rogers), Marjorie Woodworth and Noah Beery, Jr., featured in the laugh hit "Dudes are Pretty People", now at the McCarthy Theatre in addition to the thrilling adventure drama "The First Commando."

AT THE BELLE

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy get all tangled up in Oriental mystification, when Dante, the world's greatest magician appears with them in "A-Haunting We Will Go," hilarious new comedy coming to the Belle. Sheila Ryan and John Shelton are the romantic interest. Lloyd Nolan and Marjorie Weaver in "The Man Who Wouldn't Die" is the second feature attraction.

AT THE BELLE

"Holiday Inn"

All the gay and carefree holidays we love to celebrate, rolled together into one grand entertainment jamboree are at the Belle Theatre in Irving Berlin's "Holiday Inn" with Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire, plus Marjorie Reynolds, Virginia Dale and Walter Abel. The Belle News Digest described by Lowell Thomas and a fun cartoon complete the program.

"Holiday Inn" is unquestionably one of the most enjoyable musical films of the season.

"Laurel and Hardy" New Fun Hit

Sh-h! With nothing up their sleeves and nothing in their heads, except laughs aplenty. Laurel and Hardy are coming to the Belle Theatre . . . in "A-Haunting We Will Go," a rollicking film which, judging from advance reports, abounds in practically all the ingredients of solid entertainment — magic, murder, mirth, action and romance.

Just when we need it most, it seems that Stan and Ollie have come up with their hilarious best. And something new has been added in the person of Dante, the great magician, who performs feats never before seen on the screen.

Ravishing Sheila Ryan and John Shelton are teamed in the romantic interludes. They are just two people happy in love, until Stan and Ollie's misadventures inexorably encompass their lives, too.

But it looks this time as if all of Stan's and Ollie's bungling will have to be forgiven, because it inadvertently brings a gang of criminals before the bar of justice and threatens to bring down the house.

"Man Who Wouldn't Die" Thrilling

A new mystery adventure with that ace of private detectives, Michael Shayne, will be presented as the added feature attraction and is titled "The Man Who Wouldn't Die."

This new 20th Century-Fox production stars Lloyd Nolan as the wise-cracking Shayne, in what has been called the best of his films. The story centres around a "dead man who walks and talks," mystifying everybody except Mike Shayne—he's just scared stiff. But his ready Irish wit and his acute mind produce a solution — but good.

Mike (Lloyd Nolan) Shayne is different in many respects. He gets confused readily, and is often led away from the task at hand by a pair of flashing ankles. Socking the wrong guy is a habit and generally making a mess of things, usually with hilarious results, is the rule. But like all good detectives, he always gets his man — and provides topnotch entertainment.

Marjorie Weaver, who is fast becoming a favorite, is said to add a fine comedy and romantic touch to the film in her role of a dizzy young heiress, and supporting players, Helene Reynolds and Henry Wilcoxon, according to advance reports, are excellent.

"When Air Raids Strike"

The March of Time "When Air Raids Strike" dramatically shows Canadians what to do and what not to do in case of an air raid. It compares actual fact with rumors. The issue graphically shows how Canadians can protect their lives and property by utilising the methods employed by forty million men and women of England who gallantly fought the Nazi bombing attacks upon their homes. It delves deeply into the organisation necessary to meet air raid conditions, showing how each civilian has a definite thing to do. It also thrillingly shows how an ordinary family in England through advanced knowledge and instruction was able to extinguish a magnesium bomb that had dropped near their home.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Riot Squad"

Thrilling activity characterises "Riot Squad," the Monogram drama which comes to the Capitol Theatre with Richard Cromwell and Rita Quigley in the featured roles.

The ingredients of the story are the police of a great city, a mob of gangsters and a pair of lovers, and these are the focal points of a succession of events which are said to furnish a continual flow of exciting action.

John Miljan is seen in the role of the ruthless Grasso, and other players appearing with Cromwell and Miss Quigley in "Riot Squad" are Mary Ruth, Herbert Rawlinson, Mary Gordon, Donald Kerr and Noel Cravat. The picture was produced and directed by Edward Finney, with Al Herman as associate producer, and the original screenplay was written by C. C. Coons.

"Arizona"

The added special western attraction comes to the screen in all its wild, brave magnificence. The breath-taking romance of Arizona's birth! Filmed amid sun-drenched splendor, the tempestuous love drama of Phoebe Titus, lovely titan of a woman and dashing Peter Muncie, Sergeant, U.S.A.!

Wesley Ruggles' "Arizona" stars Jean Arthur, William Holden, Warren William, Porter Hall and a cast of thousands. Don't miss it!

AT THE McCARTHY

"The First Commando"

Acclaimed as one of the best war films to come out of England, "The First Commando" received a five star rating by Roly Young, in the Toronto Globe and Mail when the picture recently played at the Toronto Uptown Theatre. Belleville theatregoers now have the opportunity of enjoying this great attraction at the McCarthy Theatre.

"The First Commando" is a picture you will praise, it brings something new to the screen in the way of magnificent entertainment, while the cast enact roles in about the most capable manner ever filmed.

Constance Cummings, Tommy Trinder, Clifford Evans, Robert Morley, Gordon Jackson, Ernest Milton and Owen Reynolds, are the principals, while in many scenes hundreds of extras are brought into the mighty scope of the story, which by the way, is true, being based on a venture to France by an Englishman named Melbourne Johns. J. B. Priestley wrote the story after the exploits of Mr. Johns had brought him considerable fame in the British Press. You are urged not to miss "The First Commando" and on the same program for added enjoyment the laugh hit, "Dudes are Pretty People," featuring Jimmy Rogers, (son of Will Rogers), Noah Beery, Jr., Marjorie Woodworth, Russell Gleason and Marjorie Gateson, make up one of the most pleasing shows of the year.

NEW POST?

Ex-president Abelardo Rodriguez, now commander of Mexico's Gulf coast defences, appears likely to be named director of Mexico's new program to co-ordinate the nation's industry toward its war effort.

CONGRATS

WITHOUT WANTING

Chapter 12

At noon Judith hurried from the store to the hospital and found Emily still asleep, her face gray on the white pillow, the odor of ether still in the white room. A nurse sat beside her. Judith did not linger. When she returned to the store, there was a telegram from Emily's mother, telling her that she would arrive in New York the following afternoon. Judith wired back that she had seen Emily and that she, Mrs. Travers, must not go to a hotel but to the apartment.

That afternoon Giles Benson, the advertising manager, called her into his office to discuss cruise clothes. Also he said, "You have a vacation due you, haven't you? Um . . . See me about that in a week or so. Can't do anything about it now with Miss Autry off ill."

A vacation long anticipated but almost forgotten since Max had become the centre of her life. She thought, "If I could go to Florida and join him. . . . But he'll be back before I can go. Anyway, he's down there on business and I'd be in the way."

There was no letter from him that night. But the disappointment was short-lived since she had to hurry to the hospital again.

There were flowers in Emily's room, long-stemmed red roses in a blue vase on a table beside the bed. Emily lay very still, her eyes open, her face gray and gaunt, her hands very thin.

"I knew it was you," she said weakly when Judith came in. "I knew they were your footsteps coming down the hall. Funny, how you get to know footsteps. I know Tim's too."

Judith went to the bed and put her hand over Emily's. She was afraid she was going to cry out of pity for her friend. Her lips trembled when she said, "Your mother will be here tomorrow afternoon. You're not to worry about anything."

Phyllis and Ames had not come.

"Take off your things and bring the chair closer." When Judith was sitting close to the bed, Emily said, "I hate to be so much trouble to everybody" She closed her eyes. I've been sick for a long time, but "I've got to tell you something. I thought I could—well, think it away. I'm going home, Judith, as soon as I'm well enough to travel. I'm going home to stay.

"Tim's people were lovely to me yesterday. His mother is a beautiful woman, tall and regal, and his father looks the way Tim will look thirty years from now. And their house is a sort of gray castle of a place. I've never seen so many rooms and servants." She smiled sadly. "They were lovely to me, yes, but in the way you are to a nice country cousin. But I suppose when you are very rich and important and have an only son, you don't want him to marry an outsider. I saw yesterday it wouldn't work at all, my marrying Tim, if he begged me to. Funny, but I stopped resenting it. When you know you can't have a mink coat, you don't even look in show windows at them.

"I was taken ill last night before their guests arrived. Tim's life has been mapped out for him, Judith. It's a pity because nobody's life should be mapped out for him. I like the philosophy of my kind better. We're still taught that everybody is created equal and that this is still the land of opportunity. If I had never come to New York, I'd never have known it isn't that way."

"I understand, Emily. But don't talk any more just now."

"I've got to. I've got to get it off my mind. If I don't go home, what will happen? I'll go deeper and deeper into debt and I'll see the glow wear off my romance. I'll get desperate and bitter and hard. How long I'll be a pleasant side-issue to Tim I don't know. Maybe . . . even after he marries the right girl. But it will be too late for me then. You've seen them Judith, the women who've given years to men and who wouldn't marry them. You always feel sorry for them, but you never like them much for being fools. You think they should have known better. If only when you're a small-town girl you didn't believe what you saw in the movies. . . . I hope you can get someone congenial to live with you."

"I'll manage. Your mother will be with me while she is here."

"Thanks. . . . I knew yesterday what it means to be rich. Tim demanded the best surgeon, the best room, special nurses. I was too sick to protest. And I've got to cash in an insurance policy my parents paid on for years before I took it over in order to pay for Tim's best." She smiled again. "At home at least, I'll be the best-dressed girl in town for a while."

Her eyes were misty when she said, "A girl doesn't come to New York to find herself. She comes to lose herself. What does it all add up to, after all—the pretty clothes, the cocktails, the dancing? I'm going back where life at least has the purpose of keeping a family together and . . . That's Tim walking down the hall."

"Hi! How's the patient? She looks swell, doesn't she, Judith?"

He wouldn't sit down. Restlessly he moved from one part of the room to another, smoking cigarettes, his good humor all too obviously forced. Poor Tim, Judith thought. He had his side, too. Illness bored him because he had never been ill. There was no music and laughter here in this white room. His playmate who had lived to amuse him was a white-faced, pale-mouthed girl. It was the night after Christmas, the gayest time of the year, and he was missing the fun . . . .

"I'll take you home, Judith," he said when the nurse told them they must go.

Briefly he bent over Emily. "Keep the old chin up, honey. You'll be as good as new shortly. And if you want anything, just give us the signal. I'll see you."

When they were in his car Judith said, "Her mother is coming tomorrow."

"Good. What a rotten break for Emily, being laid up now."

How tiresome for you, Tim, she thought, to be expected nightly at a hospital when everyone else is dancing and drinking this year to a close.

Mrs. Travers arrived the next afternoon and went directly to the apartment where Fannie admitted her. When Judith came home, Mrs. Traverse had left a note saying that she had gone to the hospital. There was no letter from Max. . . Perhaps he was very busy. . . . Perhaps the heavy Christmas mail had delayed his letter. Excuses drove away disappointment.

She met Mrs. Travers at the hospital and saw that Emily had inherited her lovely brown eyes and her friendliness from her mother. Mrs. Travers was short, stout, neatly, but quite inexpensively dressed with short brown hair and a round face on which she had never used anything except soap and water. You knew instantly that she was the hub around which a large family revolved, that the windows in her house were always clean and that the food on her table was plain, abundant and wholesome.

"So this is Judith," she said, rising and shaking Judith's hand vigorously. Mrs. Travers' hand was rough, her handclasp firm. "I can't thank you enough for what you've done for my girl." Brisk, capable, she had taken charge of Emily, had spoken to doctors and nurses and could be good-humored now that she knew Emily was out of danger. "She's going to be all right. Sickness is nothing new to me. I've nursed six of 'em through the childhood diseases and Emily's Dad, who had missed 'em came down with 'em well."

Emily smiled. "Mother is in her glory when one or all of us need her."

"They can shift for themselves while I'm here with you. I haven't been to New York since I went to Niagara on my honeymoon. It hasn't changed much or maybe I'm not impressed because we've got some pretty big buildings out west now. Emily's come to her senses, Judith. She's going home."

Mrs. Travers was telling Judith about her adored family when Tim came. He was wearing evening clothes and carrying a long box of flowers and his expression said, "I must have my plan ,Emily, but I didn't forget you, honey. I've brought some flowers. There's a party tonight and you can't expect me to sit here."

"Tim. . .This is my mother."

Mrs. Travers got up and shook his hand. How homespun Emily's mother must seem to him, Judith thought!

"How do you do, young man?" Mrs. Travers said. She eyed him so critically that color crept up his lean cheeks.

He laughed. "I'm doing fine, Mrs. Travers."

He was charming—the little while he stayed. He told her a funny story about himself and made them laugh. But he stayed such a little while and when he left, Emily's eyes followed him and lingered through the open door long after he had gone. In the clear brown eyes, no less beautiful now because they were tired and had known recent pain Judith saw a battle for strength. For out of strength would come resignation.

25,000 New Women Workers a Month Required by Industry

Toronto, Oct. 6—(CP) — Canadian industry will require 25,000 new women workers a month between now and Christmas, Mrs. Rex Eaton, Assistant Director of National Selective Service, said today in an address prepared for delivery to women attending the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor.

The registration of women between the ages of 20 and 24 had shown many willing to do part-time work and it was expected this would be an important factor in alleviating the shortage, not only in munition plants but in other essential fields, she said.

Refresher courses would be arranged to fit women who had been out of their profession for several years. Indications were that there would be particular need for nurses and teachers.

Jap Spokesman Says War Just Beginning

London, Oct. 7. (CP) — British listeners at New Delhi, India, heard of Tokyo broadcast in Japanese today in which a Japanese naval spokesman warned his people that the United States is building long-range flying Fortresses which make such island bases as Midway and the Aleutians potentially dangerous to Japan.

The spokesman was quoted as saying the new Fortresses have a 10,000-mile flight range and that with the United States piling up an "astronical quantity" of weapons, "the war is just beginning".

French-Canadian Squadron Used In Reich Raid

By LOUIS V. HUNTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

With the R.C.A.F., Somewhere in England, Oct. 7—(CP Cable)—The newly-formed French - Canadian bomber squadron of the R.C.A.F. was over Germany for the second successive night and reported a successful attack on Osnabrueck.

This is the German city raided by a strong bomber command force of R.A.F. and other Canadian squadrons. The last attack on Osnabrueck, key railway town in the Ruhr, was carried out Aug. 17 when a heavy load of high explosives and 50,000 incendiaries were rained on the town in a "cascade" raid of 90 minutes.

A week before that, in what now is regarded as an average-strength raid of fewer than 200 members, the bomber command pounded Osnabrueck with 450 tons of bombs, including nearly 50 4,000-pounders.

Less than 30 hours after its first operational sortie, the French-Canadian squadron joined in what the Air Ministry described as a concentrated attack against the important railway centre.

The raid was a greater success for the new squadron than the first sortie over western Germany, when unfavorable weather hampered operations. Six aircraft failed to return, but it is not known whether any of them were flown by Canadians.

The French-Canadian squadron was one of four units of the R.C.A.F. in the raid which was carried out in the light of flares dropped by aerial "path-finders" which the bomber command now is using to guide aircraft to their targets.

Ralston Visits Forestry Corps

Somewhere in Scotland, Oct. 7—(CP Cable)—Col. J. L. Ralston, Canadian Minister of National Defence, on a one-day tour of the Canadian Forestry Corps tramped today through Scottish forests where husky men from the Dominion labored at cutting and loading timber for war use.

Accompanied by Maj.-Gen. P. J. Montague, Senior Officer of Canadian Military Headquarters, and Col. H. A. Dyde, the Minister's Military Secretary, Col. Ralston was received by the only Brigade-General in the Canadian Army, Brig.-Gen. J. B. White, who commands the forestry unit. (The rank of Brigadier-General was abolished by the British and Canadian armies in favor of Brigadier. Gen. White gained his rank in the First Great War.)

Gold Production To be Cut a Third

Ottawa, Oct. 7 (CP).—Labor Minister Mitchell's forecast in Toronto last night that "upwards of 10,000" gold miners will be transferred to base metal mines and other war industries, coupled with official employment figures, indicated today the government is aiming at a cut of more than one-third in Canada's gold production.

Latest complete figures—for 1941—show 32,551 employees in the gold mining industry. It is believed that the present figure is slightly below the 1941 total.

Already the movement of men out of gold mines has begun. Mr. Mitchell described this last night as "an evolutionary movement toward the same goal" as the United States which, it is reported, will halt gold production within a few days.

Selective service officials recently started work on a requisition for 700 workers for nickel mines at Sudbury, Ont., and said they expected most of the men would be obtained from gold mines. The first transfer of 300 was made Saturday and was described by the Labor minister as "just a fraction of the number to be transferred under the plan" which he forecast would affect "upwards of 10,000".

In addition there will undoubtedly be some enlistments from the ranks of gold mines and replacements for these men in the mines likely will not be available.

Almost the entire $200,000,000 annual production of Canadian gold mines goes to the United States but reports have already been made of reduced tonnage because of man-power shortage.

Prime Minister Vigorously Defends British Admiral

London, Oct. 7 (CP)—Admiral Thomas C. Hart's assertion that the R.A.F. failed to give the British battleship Prince of Wales and battle cruiser Repulse held off Malaya recalled today Prime Minister Churchill's explanation in the House of Commons Dec. 11, 1941, that such aid was impossible because of Japanese attacks on British airdromes in northern Malaya.

"I understand that it was impossible for shore-based aircraft to give the suport to the ships that had been hoped for because of the attack which had been made on our airdromes and the Admiral proceeded on the basis of clouds which were very low and afforded protection for the offensive stroke he wished to make," Mr. Churchill said then.

The Prime Minister vigorously defended the British Admiral, Sir Tom Phillips, again in Commons last Jan. 21 when he declared that Admiral Phillips decided "drastic, urgent naval action was required" to halt the Japanese transports and said the only British aircraft carrier then in commission was with the Home Fleet.

"Admiral Phillips was fully aware of the risks he was taking," the Prime Minister continued. "Only after he left harbor was he informed that fighter protection could not be provided in the area in which he intended to operate but in view of the low visibility he decided to stand on."

Mr. Churchill then explained that Admiral Phillips turned back when the skies began to clear and knew his ships had been sighted The Admiral was lost with his ships

EIGHT SERBS EXECUTED

London, Oct. 7. (CP) —Yugoslav circles reported today that eighty Serbs were shot by the Germans at Zemun, near Belgrade, in mid-September after a German airplane hangar there was blown up.

Naval Lieutenant Saves Man's Life

Orillia, Ont., Oct. 7. (CP)—Sub.-Lieut. E. G. Findley, 19-year-old member of the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve from Montreal, today saved the life of George H. Adams of Toronto, trapped in his room when fire started in the annex of the Champlain hotel.

When firemen hesitated to enter the building because of choking clouds of smoke, the young officer donned his gas mask and crawled into the heart of the fire where he found Adams unconscious in his bedroom.

Unable to move the man to safety, Findley called for aid. Two firemen entered the building and helped carry Adams through the smoke-filled corriors. Adams regained consciousness when artificial respiration was applied.

Twenty guests of the hotel sleeping in the annex, were forced out in night attire when the alarm sounded. The blaze was believed to have started in Adams' room. Cause of the blaze was undetermined.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 7 (CP)—The early hours were marked by active selling of the gold stocks today on Toronto Exchange. News that gold mines in the United States would be closed forced prices back to a new low for the last nine or ten years. Expectation that men would be transferred from Canadian gold mines to other industries prompted the selling.

McIntyre lost two points to 36, Dome 3-4 to 13 1-4 and losses of 15 to 25 cents were boarded by Hollinger, Wright-Hargreaves, Teck Hughes, Malartic Gold Fields, East Malartic and Macassa and Lake Shore was down 70 cents to $6.80.

Lord Beaverbrook Introduced Cannon To British Fighters

London, Oct. 7 (CP Cable)—Col J. J. Llewellin, Minister of Aircraft Production, revealed in the House of Commons today that it was Lord Beaverbrook, when he was Minister of the same department, who introduced cannon to British fighter aircraft, to replace or supplement machine-guns.

The disclosure was made during a discussion of the Public Accounts Committee charges against British Manufacturing Research Co., Ltd., which made cannon.

Llewellin said both he and Lord Beaverbrook had always believed in cannon and that they would work. This was during the early days of there was considerable opinion one there was cnsiderable opinin one way and the other. The fighter command and Air Ministry had adopted the view cannon were not wanted in fighter aircraft.

All the latest types of British fighters are equipped with cannon

STRETCHER CASE COMES ASHORE AFTER OTTAWA SINKING

From hand to hand a stretcher case is brought to the jetty from the corvette that rescued many of the survivors of the Canadian destroyer Ottawa. This fellow asked for a cigarette, first thing on being rescued, and it was his last thought before being rushed to the R.C.N. hospital. As the rescue ships drew alongside the jetty, there were cries of recognition, much banter and singing, and words of encouragement for the wounded.

WALL STREET

New York, Oct. 7 —(AP)— Buying interest was spotty in today's stock market and while a few specialties made progress a number of Industrial leaders slipped to slightly lower levels.

The Gold mining stocks, however, provided the principal price swings, Homestake and McIntyre Porcupine breaking sharply in the first hour on the W.P.B.'s order of suspension of production and diversion of equipment and labor to non-ferrous metal properties.

Although not affected by this ban because it is a Canadian concern, McIntyre was discounting similar action by the Dominion government.

Some of the Industrial pivotals, fractionally higher at the opening, later entered minus territory and near the fourth hour losses, mostly fractional, outnumbered gains by a small margin.

Homestake came back a bit after a five-point drop and McIntyre erased part of a two-point dip. Moderately lower most of the time were Montgomery Ward, Santa Fe, Public Service of N.J., North American and Goodyear. Steadier were Bethlehem Steel, General Motors, Boeing and Cerro de Pasco. Allied Chemical pushed up about a point.

Canadian stocks were easy. Lake Shore Mines eased ⅝, Hiram Walker ½ and Canadian Pacific ⅛.

1,000 Tank Men Of Rommel's Corps Now in Canada

An East Coast Canadian Port, Oct. 7—(CP)—Sullen German tank men from Rommel's Africa corps, nearly 1,000 strong, now are safely tucked away in Canadian internment camps for the duration after landing at this port.

Arrival in Canada instead of the promised Cairo, where Rommel had said they were headed, had done nothing to improve their tempers, an they did not seem pleased to exchange the heat and dust of the desert for this climate.

But they gave no trouble, officers in charge of the prisoners said, either at the landing here or on the long boat trip from the Mediterranean to this Dominion. Tough Polish soldiers, fanatic enemies of the Nazis, made sure of that as they guarded the Germans on the long ocean jaunt.

"The Polish soldiers behaved admirably," the English colonel in charge said, "only they were a little too strict. But no one coul blame them for that."

Canadian troops with fixed bayontes and fingers pressed on Tommy gun triggers took over at the dock side here. No incidents marred the landing.

One Anti-Nazi

However, one German took this opportunity to display his long-hidden hate for Nazism. On the boat trip he was guarded separately, not to keep him from escaping but to keep fellow prisoners from attacking him.

He was glad to be a prisoner as that meant he was free from the rule of Hitler. He had fought valiantly—his decorations proved that—but now his fighting days were over and he didn't mind in the least.

Guards said he expressed his anti-Nazi views as soon as he was taken prisoner and continued to express them until it was necessary to separate him from his fellow Germans.

He insisted there were many others who thought as he did and were only waiting a similar opportunity to break free. No one would say how he would be guarded while in Canada to prevent other prisoners from attacking him but even the Poles expressed the hope he would be segregated and protected.

WHAT—TOO MUCH CHEESE?

London —(CP)— Reporting the increased cheese ration is not being taken up "by the public" the Ministry of Food says the surplus will probably be issued to caterers who want "as much extra cheese as possible."

Ether Crackles With Humor When R.C.A.F. Lads on Line

By Flying Officer John Clare, R. C. A. F. Public Relations Officer (Overseas).

"I'm coming up on him but he's some way ahead."

"He's turning away again."

"He must be a wiley bird, that Jerry, but, I'm directly behind him now.. .. ..(interval).. .. ..I've damaged him."

"Excellent, what was he?"

"217 Dornier."

You have been listening in on an attack by a Royal Canadian Air Force fighter on a German raider over Britain. Close contact is maintained between aircraft and ground as the various gears of a great defensive machine mesh smoothly to make trouble for intruding enemy aircraft.

In cubicles, confronted by receiving sets, girls of the W. A. A. F. record these conservations taking place high above the clouds and often in the heat of the chase and in actual battle.

Here is a provocative scrap of dialogue plucked from the blue battlefield where the R. C. A. F. fights its war.

"Tallyho" (the traditional cry with which fighter pilots go into combat).

"Beat 'em up boy, beat e'm up."

"O. K.. .. ..(interval).. .. ..I got one of 'em—he's had it."

Pilot Orders His Tea

When the enemy is prudently steering clear of the sector, flying talk becomes more informal and less charged with excitement. There was the request, for instance, of the young pilot whose imagination had been beguiled by the fragrant vision of a steaming cup of tea. He called to the ground to see if they could have one waiting for him when he came downstairs. There was no answer immediately. So he repeated his request.

"All right, all right, do you expect us to bring it up to you." someone muttered through the ether.

The idea of a miscrophone planted in front of them brings out the puckishness in apparently stolid personalties in just the same way that people asked to say a few words to the radio audience will indulge in some strange verbal antics.

There is the story of one fighter squadron doing some "formating" with some new pilots. The squadron was moving from one formation to anothers—vics, echelons and so forth—when the squadron leader noticed that one of his boys was missing. At once he asked on the "intercom" for his whereabouts.

From the depths of a nearby cloud came the elfin reply 'I'm hi-i-ding'.

The hiding he was doing in the cloud was nothing compared to the verbal hiding he took from his CO.

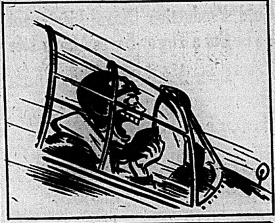
Can Warn Each Other

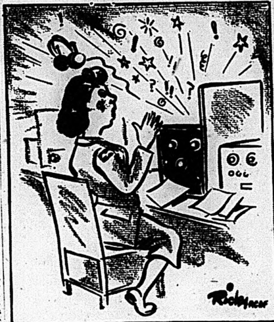
While this aerial radio has its lighter moments its serious and important purpose, of course, is to enable pilots to keep in touch with each other and with the ground. It is possible for them to warn each other of approaching aircraft, to make plans for attack and defense and generally bind the whole squadron or wing into a tight knit striking force.

In the heat of combat a pilot may hear a cool voice in his ear saying, 'There's a FW190 on your tail,' a split second before the Hun's guns open up.

But somehow its the amusing little episodes that linger in dispersal hut talk and legend. Like that of the young Canadian who was flying "Q" for Queenie and was requesting permission to land. It had been a long hard day and he was anxious to come in and get out of his kite. When he came to speak to the controller his tongue slipped a couple of times as he tried to get a grip on "Queenie."

"This is Kwee for Connie calling, I mean Koo for Keenie. . . . Aw, hell, can I land now?"





"Where's my tea? . . ."

Commercial Travellers Take Steps to Combat Malicious Rumors

Toronto, Oct. 7—To co-ordinate their activities and further assist the war effort, representatives of the six commerical travellers associations of Canada in conference here this weekend established a permanent National Committee headed by Henry W. Hayes of Montreal. Steps were also taken by the conference to launch a campaign against malicious rumours; a committee was set up to work with the management service of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in the interests of retailers and the help of forty thousand travellers was offered to the government in the present salvage campaign.

The National Committee which Mr. Hayes heads consists of John Curtis, President of the Commercial Travellers Association of Canada, Toronto; W. H. C. Schwartz, President of the Maritime Commercial travellers Association, Halifax, N. S.; J. R. Boutillier, President of the North West Commercial Travellers Association of Canada, Winnipeg, Man.; Clarence J. Atkins, President of the Ontario Commercial Travellers Association, London, Ont.; J. T. Berrington, Associated Canadian Travellers, Calgary, Alta. Headquarters of the National Committee will be in Montreal and an advisory committee to the chairman has been appointed consisting of H. F. Tindale, Toronto, C. J. Atkins, London and G. G. Hodges, Montreal.

To prepare Posters

To combat malicious rumors, the aid of the forty thousand commerical travellers will be enlisted by letters from the National Committee and posters will be prepared for use in hotels.

The committee to work with the management service of the W. P. T. B. was set up after the conference had heard Hugh Mackenzie, Director of Simplified Practice, and will work in co-operation with the Board. Commercial Travellers have already been used by the Board to disseminate useful information.

It was also considered by the conference that the efforts of commerical travellers might be used in Canada as they have been in the United States in connection with salvage drives and the help of the six associations is being offered to the government.

The manpower analysis which the six associations undertook is nearing completion, delegates were informed, and will be made available shortly to the Director of National Selective Service.

Eligible for NEW TIRES?

Here's the way to buy them under Wartime Regulations

First determine in which category of essential drivers you are listed . . . your nearby Firestone Dealer has the official information and can advise you. Next, fill out an application for a Tire Ration Permit . . . Firestone Dealers have these forms. Send or take this along with the Dealer's Inspection Report to the nearest office of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board which issues the required Tire Ration Permit. When you have this, the dealer can then furnish the necessary tires to you.

To obtain a Tire Retreading job you must go through the same procedure. However, no Permit is necessary for Tire Repairs . . . and if your tires have any small cuts or bruises, we urge you to have them repaired immediately, before they lead to more serious trouble.

And don't forget every Firestone Dealer is pledged to help you get the very last mile out of your present tires, regardless of their make. For 25 years Firestone has been training their dealers in tire conservation. Consequently, Firestone Dealers have the experience, knowledge and equipment to be of definite help to you. This service plus common-sense wartime driving on your part helps you extend the life of your tires for thousands of extra miles. See your nearby Firestone Dealer today.

Turn in every ounce of scrap rubber to your local Salvage Committee — NOW.

How to Get the Most Mileage from Your Present Tires

1. Have the Firestone Dealer estimate the number of miles left in the tires — then ration your mileage to so many miles per week.
2. Limit your driving to essential transportation. If you drive to work, take others and rotate trips with them.
3. Have air pressure checked every week. Underinflation is the greatest enemy of tire life.
4. Drive slowly—avoid quick starts and stops that grind off the tread. Go easy on curves and use gears instead of brakes on steep hills.
5. Park with care — do not scrape sidewalls or bump the curb.

* * *

THE FIRESTONE DEALER CAN HELP YOU BY

1. Completely inspecting tires and tubes at frequent intervals for cuts and bruises.
2. Rotating the tires every 5,000 miles to even the wear.
3. Checking wheel alignment and brakes.

No needless or unnecessary expense—work done only when required.

BRITAIN THREATENS TO BIND NAZI PRISONERS

Quick Reply Made To Manacling Of Dieppe Prisoners

British Declare Gov't Does Not Permit Binding Of Captured Men

AFFECT EQUAL NUMBER

London, Oct. 8 (CP) — Britain, in a quick reply to the German action of binding the hands of Canadian and British prisoners captured at Dieppe, threatened to take similar measures against an equal number of German prisoners in British hands.

Only a few hours had elapsed since the Berlin radio announced that the captives—mostly Canadians—were manacled at noon today. The announcement called it reprisal for similar treatment of captured Nazis, a claim which the British authorities have vigorously denied.

The German action of fettering prisoners "is expressly forbidden by Article 11 of the Geneva Convention" (governing humane treatment of prisoners), a British government statement said.

The statement reiterated Britain's declaration that the government has not and will not permit orders for the manacling of prisoners taken in the field.

The German action mainly affects Canadians, of whom 2,547 were missing after the Dieppe raid.

The War Office warned yesterday that wanton reprisals against Britons would not be overlooked and it was learned that a further official statement on the German action may be made later today.

The Italians have said nothing about the German measures. They have 262,000 of their nationals in British hands and might be most affected if Britain undertook general counter-measures against the Axis.

Meanwhile in the House of Commons, Charles Ammon, Labor member for North Camberwell, raised the question of compulsory evacuation of Channel islanders by the Germans, a fact which was established during the small commando raid on Sark Oct. 3.

The member asked Home Secretary Herbert Morrison if he was not aware that letters had been arriving in Britain for some days reporting the mysterious disappearance of relatives. He suggested that the Home Secretary request the military authorities to publish the information, which would not be harmful since it is well known to the enemy.

No Hint of Action

In a statement last night the War Office declared that "if the German government carry out the threats mentioned in their communique the British Government will have to consider their future action."

As yet, however, there has been no hint of what that "future action" might be.

In an effort to prove their contention that German prisoners have not been mistreated, the British authorities have invited Swiss representatives in Britain to interview any of the captive Nazis. Switzerland is the protecting power for prisoners of both the Axis and Britain.

In announcing that the reprisal threat had been carried out, the German radio also referred to Allied proposals yesterday for the punishment of war criminals after the conflict is ended.

"These gentlemen," the announcer said, "should take heed lest one day Germany should adopt this decision for its own purposes and apply it to Mr. Roosevelt and other warmongers."

May Have Secured Outside Assistance

Simcoe, Ont., Oct. 8 —(CP)—Two prisoners escaped from Norfolk county jail last night in what local jail officials termed a "smart job" and suggested they had outside assistance.

One of the men was Leonard Staley of St. Williams, who had served about 25 days of a 30-day sentence on a conviction of theft of auto tires. He is also facing court martial as a deserter from a Toronto Field Ambulance outfit. The other was Glenford Murphy, a southerner. He was to have faced three charges in court this morning for forgery.

It is believed they got over the jail wall by tieing sheets together.

AXIS SEAPLANE BASE AT BOMBA HEAVILY RAIDED

Targets on African Coast Between Derna and Sidi Barrani Bombed

U.S. FIGHTERS ENGAGED

Cairo, Oct. 8 — (AP) — Long-range bombers of the R. A. F. attacked targets on the North African coast between Derna and Sidi Barrani yesterday, including the Axis seaplane base at Bomba where they damaged a number of enemy aircraft, a communique announced today.

The bulletin said one plane was lost in these forays but declared that two German Messerschmitts were shot down by bombers in a flurry of action over the El Alamein battlefront.

There was no activity on the land front beyond the usual night-patrol skirmishes, the communique added.

United States fighter pilots escorted R. A. F. fighter-bombers on a raid behind the German lines yesterday.

On 12 trips over enemy territory during the day, the R. A. F. caused heavy damage to German airports, convoys and troop concentrations.

Door Still Open For Settlement

London, Oct. 8 —(CP)— L. S. Amery, Secretary of State for India, said today in the House of Commons "there can be no question" of negotiations with the All-India Congress Party as long as it follows its present course.

The minister said this would be the attitude of the British Government "so long as there is any danger of recrudescense of troubles for which they have been responsible or until they have made it clear they have abandoned their whole policy of acquiring control of India by illegal and revolutionary methods."

The Congress Party leaders, Mr. Amery said, "by their own action have put themselves out of court."

To treat with them before they "come to an agreed settlement with the rest of the country," he said, "would create greater difficulties with the Moslems and other parties and would be regarded as a direct betrayal of the army, police and civil service."

However, Mr. Amery said, "the door remains open for favorable consideration of any proposals agreed on by the leaders of the Indian parties . . ."

308 Decorations Have Been Won By Members of R.C.N. and R.C.A.F.

Ottawa, Oct. 8 — (CP) — Day-by-day operations over a period of three years have brought the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force an impressive group of decorations.

In proportion to their strength, the forces of the sea and air are still well ahead of the land forces in decorations earned in the present war, despite the impressive total of 178 decorations won by soldiers in the one operation at Dieppe last August.

A total of 200 decorations has been won by men serving in the Royal Canadian Air Force, and officials estimate that almost as many more have been won by "direct-entry" Canadians in the Royal Air Force. This latter group includes a large number of Canadians who went to England and joined the Royal Air Force on the outbreak of war. The total includes a number of awards to Canadian airmen based, in part at least, on their services in the air force arm of the Battle of Dieppe.

Yesterday the Royal Canadian Navy also announced several decorations for Canadian naval personnel who served with Royal Naval units at the Battle of Dieppe. The total of naval decorations given Canadians stands at 108.

The army contributed the one Canadian Victoria Cross winner of the war to date, Lt.-Col Cecil Merritt of Vancouver, who won the distinction at Dieppe, and has 12 officers who have won the Distinguished Service Order, and 16 who won the Military Cross. The Distinguished Conduct Medal was awarded to 12 men and the Military Medal to 45 while 92 officers and men were mentioned in dispatches.

The Royal Canadian Air Force collection of decorations includes one Distinguished Service Order, 95 Distinguished Flying Crosses, 53 Distinguished Flying Medals, 13 British Empire Medals, nine Air Force Crosses, four Air Force Medals, one George Cross, three George Medals, one Czech Medal for Valor, one Czech Military Cross, three bars to the Distinguished Flying Cross, and 16 mentions in dispatches.

The following decorations have been won by members of the Royal Canadian Navy: One Distinguished Service Order, one Order of the British Empire, 20 Distinguished Service Crosses, one of them with bar; five Distinguished Service Medals, three George Medals, two two of them with bars; one British Empire Medal, one Albert Medal, four Polish Crosses of Valor 54 mentions in 5dispatches 13 commendations and one testimonial of the Royal Humane Society.

JAPANESE FLEE ALEUTIAN ISLAND "RAT TRAPS"

Disappear From Attu And Agattu, Which They Occupied Four Months Ago

SUFFER HEAVY LOSSES

Washington, Oct. 8 — (AP) — Blasted by American sea and air power, the Japanese appeared today to have fled from two of the three Western Aleutian Islands they occupied four months ago and were undergoing heavy bombardment on their remaining footholds.

Probably realizing they had blundered into what a naval spokesman termed a "rat trap," enemy forces have disappeared from the westernmost island of Attu and nearby Agattu with losses thus far totalling 38 ships sunk or damaged and 40 planes destroyed.

The navy reported yesterday that no signs of Japanese activity on either island had been detected for several weeks. The enemy's lone remaining base, the island of Kiska, thus drew the concentrated fire of United States bombing planes.

The communique did not say whether Canadian planes took part in the raid and the navy department said it could add nothing to its announcement. Canadian ground and air forces are aiding in Alaska's defence.

Hit Seaplane Hangars

Presumably operating from their New Andreanof Islands base, army Liberator bombers with fighter escorts dumped explosives and incendiaries on the Japanese Kiska encampment Monday, scoring hits on seaplane hangars.

Six enemy seaplane fighters which counter-attacked were shot down.

Express Fear Two Drowned

Sudbury, Ont., Oct. 8 (CP) — An upturned canoe was found today on the shore at Perry Point in the Big Missinable Lake north of Chapleau and Provincial Police expressed fear that Mr. and Mrs. John Hall, who had been on a prospecting trip, had drowned when the canoe overturned in the lake.

The Halls, formerly of Orillia, last were seen alive in August but no fear for their safety had been felt until the canoe was found because both had been in Northern Ontario on prospecting trips for several years.

Dragging operations in the lake have failed to locate either body.

City's Strengthened Garrison Repels Nazis Attack One by One

By EDDY GILMORE
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

Moscow, Oct. 8 (AP)—Red Army tank forces breaking into the fortified German left flank northwest of Stalingrad were reported to have forced the enemy to divert veteran Prussian units, the elite of his army, from other fronts in an effort to stop the push aimed at relieving the siege of the Volga city.

The Russians, however, maintained the initiative on the steppes even as the Germans poured more and more men and machines into the holocaust. The latest official report said that German attacks were beaten off both to the northwest as well as inside the ruined city.

During the past three days, dispatches said, the Germans lost thousands of men, hundreds of trucks and armored cars and scores of tanks without compensating gains.

Documents taken from newly-captured prisoners emphasized again the importance the Germans attach to the Stalingrad offensive, indicating even that the Hitler command hoped to win the entire war in the east by the occupation of the Volga metropolis.

But now, according to Pravda, Moscow Communist newspaper prisoners no longer talk of the end of the war but only express fear that the coming winter will be fatal to Germany with her forces insufficient to cover the broad fronts in Russia.

Forces under Maj.-Gen. Alexei Rodintrev were given a great share of the credit for turning the tide of battle in the northwest suburbs, where by a surprise night assault the Germans had driven along a ditch perilously close to the Volga, at the rear of Stalingrad.

Taken under cross-fire the Germans finally were rolled back.

About 250 Germans were declared wiped out and a number of armored vehicles, eight guns and five ammunition trucks were destroyed by the fire-power and the grinding treads of the Soviet tanks as the Russians maintained the initiative in the Battle of the Steppes.

The noon communique said German attacks were repulsed both northwest of Stalingrad and within the city. The army newspaper Red Star reported the Russians were tightening their hold on recaptured streets and consolidating their positions.

Defence mortar batteries were credited with knocking out eight tanks and decimating a company of German infantry. Soviet artillerymen were said to have wiped out a battalion of infantry, silenced six opposing batteries and destroyed eight tanks and 70 trucks.

Positions Restored

Red Star said the Germans had penetrated the industrial section in the northeast suburbs of Stalingrad by a recent night attack along a ditch leading to the west bank of the Volga, but said counter-attacks by a guard division had restored Russian positions.

The sector includes the huge Stalin tank and tractor factory, the Red October metal works and other plants. The factories are surrounded by workers' homes and are connected with Stalingrad itself by a broad highway.

HIGHER CEILING PRICES FOR BEEF SAYS TRADE BOARD

New Move to Solve Perplexing Problem of Scanty Domestic Supplies

INCREASE $1.50 CWT.

Ottawa, Oct. 8 (CP)—Higher ceiling prices for beef were announced last night by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in a new move to solve the perplexing issue of scanty domestic beef supplies.

Effective immediately, the wholesale carcass price of beef is increased $1.50 per hundredweight for the Autumn period ended Nov. 30. Retail prices are correspondingly increased but will be "more strictly controlled."

This move is the latest in a series of steps by the board aimed at solution of beef shortages in many Canadian cities and towns. It is designed to encourage farmers to market cattle now instead of holding back until the spring in the hope of higher prices.

The new plan was announced in a lengthy board statement which said the beef —situation "has presented the most troublesome problems in the entire price ceiling administration."

Briefly, this is what the new plan provides:

Wholesale carcass prices for good commercial beef are increased by $1.50 per hundredweight for the period ending Nov. 30. This makes the basic Toronto maximum price $17.25 per hundredweight, with the usual differentials for the other 14 zones across the country.

Six grades of beef are established, with a different maximum price for

SPINNEY BELIEVES HIGH TAXATION ONLY TEMPORARY

Chairman of National War Finance Committee Sees Change When Peace is Restored

VICTORY LOAN APPEAL

Hamilton, Oct. 8 —(CP)— G. W. Spinney, chairman of the National War Finance Committee, expressed the belief last night that the war-will disappear with the coming of enforced high-taxation schedules in peace despite the "probability" that post-war rehabilitation will require a Governmental policy of expenditures.

Mr. Spinney spoke to a combined meeting of Hamilton service clubs in connection with the opening of the Dominion's third Victory Loan, for a minimum of $750,000,000, Oct. 19. He reviewed the country's financial requirements and described the coming loan as "the real test as to whether we in Canada actually are growing stronger . . ."

Emphasizing that he was speaking as a layman and not as a member nor an employee of the Government, he declared of post-war taxation:

"I think no one of us has any rightful basis for believing or expecting that the high tax schedules which have been imposed upon us as a result of the war are here to stay . . . Such a statement to my mind is based completely on wrong thinking."

Mr. Spinney said he had heard people saying the present taxation rates would never decrease no matter how soon the war ended. He pointed out Canada's tax bill now ada bonds" for "it is fully realized

HITCH—HIKERS BEAT UP MOTORIST

Windsor, Ont. Oct. 8. (CP)—Lloyd Wigle, 27, of Kingsville, Ont., was in hospital here today suffering injuries received earlier when three men to whom he had given a ride in his car, allegedly attacked and beat him outside the city limits.

Wigle staggered into Windsor with most of the clothes beaten from his back and was taken to the hospital immediately. He told police he had picked up two soldiers and a civilian and that they suddenly turned on him as he was driving out of Windsor.

Police said they were holding three men for questioning in connection with the attack.

SUPPLY PROBLEM FACING ALLIES IN NEW GUINEA

However Threat To Port Moresby Has Been Lessened For The Present

WIN CONTROL OF PASS

Allied Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 8 (CP)—Allied troops, having driven the Japanese back across the summit of New Guinea's Owen Stanley mountains, found themselves today facing the same supply difficulties which the invaders encountered in their unsuccessful push toward Port Moresby.

A communique from Allied headquarters said that "almost insuperable complications in maintenance of supply lines" are progressively slowing down the Allies. It raised the question of how far they might attempt to pursue the retreating Japanese.

The bulletin said the Allies suffered practically no losses in driving the Japanese from their advance positions near Ioribaiwa, 32 miles airline from Port Moresby, and pushing forward during the last ten days to win control of the pass through the highest part of the mountains.

The supply problem was emphasized by Army Minister Francis Forde who returned from a visit to the front with high praise of the Allied troops.

"Armchair strategists should see the Owen Stanley country through which our troops are advancing and should see the long, wearying mountain roads over which supplies must be hauled," Mr. Forde said. "The men themselves plough through mud sometimes knee-deep, pick their way through a tangled mass of jungle creepers and vines, and scale precipitous mountain tracks which even mules cannot climb—all while carrying equipment."

Threat Smashed

Today's communique, devoted wholly to the situation in the Owen Stanley sector, did not indicate whether the Allied forces actually had moved through the pass to the northeastern slope of the mountains. It left no doubt, however, that the threat to Port Moresby has been smashed for the present, characterizing the Japanese troops as exhausted and adding:

"The enemy, as we expected, had discovered his supply problems, aggravated by constant air attacks, were impossible of immediate solution."

Reports from New Guinea said native carriers forced into service by the Japanese but now on the Allied side told how enemy forces struggled vainly to keep supplies

Seven Airmen on Raft Fight Sharks For a Week Before Rescue Arrives

By CHARLES McMURTRY
(Associate Press Staff Writer)

With the U.S. Pacific Fleet, Sept. 27—(Delayed)—(AP)—Seven United States Army fliers, rescued from the South Pacific after drifting on a four-man raft for seven days, saw two members of their B-17 bomber crew die of exposure.

"If we had to lose a bomber, we were damn well glad to get rid of that one," the survivors said today. "We called it 'Spider" because it was hung together with thread. It was one of the first flying fortresses."

The men existed on a sip of water rationed morning and night and a bite of chocolate daily. Twice they say airplanes but were unable to attract attention. They fought off three sharks and shot two of them.

They learned later a shark had ripped the bottom of the rubber raft end-to-end but had not pierced the air compartment.

Survivors of the bomber's crew are First Lieuts. James P. Van Haur, 24, pilot Missoula, Mont.; Arvid W. (Bud) Anderson, 26, co-pilot Bremerton, Wash., and Sidney L. Darden, 26, navigator, Waco, Texas; Sgts. Joe Gagnon, 23, bombardier, Tupper Lake, N.Y.; Richard Paul Anderson, 23, radioman, Brookline, Mass. and Constantine Rusesky, 23, engineer, Shenandoah, Pa. and Pte. Virgil Murray, 25, side-gunner, St. Regis, Mont.

Cpl. Lucien De Amour, gunner, of Beverly, Mass., crazed by his sufferings, leaped from the raft the sixth night and perished. Cpl. James Hosegood, 33, assistant gunner (no address) died of exposure and illness three hours later.

The old flying fortress left its Southwest Pacific base Sept. 11 with two other bombers, and at the turning point in its mission, the cylinder head of the port engine blew out.

"With only three engines we fell behind the formation," Bud Anderson said. "The radio compass failed

Large Department Store Completely Destroyed by Blaze

Picton and Trenton Air Stations Also Belleville Supply Fire Equipment

ORIGIN NOT KNOWN

Picton, Oct. 8 (Special) — Fire, believed to have originated in the basement furnace room, completely destroyed the large department store of Alex Lipson, Main Street, Picton, early Thursday morning The building and entire stock of the store were a complete loss with damage estimated at approximately $200,000.

Discovered by a passerby shortly after 11:00 Wednesday evening the fire had gained considerable headway by the time the Picton Fire Department was called to the scene. Alarms were quickly sent out to Belleville and the district air force stations and four brigades fought the flames for six hours before they were brought under control.

Heroic efforts by firemen held the fire to the Lipson building, but adjoining stores were threatened by the flames at the height of the blaze.

The exact time at which the fire originated could not be determined by firemen or by the owners of the business, but Miss Mary Katz, employee of the firm, had visited the store at seven o'clock in the evening and had noticed nothing wrong. At eleven, however, a passerby heard glass breaking as the heat inside the building shattered the glass.

Could Not Enter Building

Picton Fire Department immediately answered the alarm but the flames already had mounted to prevent entry into the building. The pressure of the heat from the inside prevented opening the street doors and entry had to be gained through second-storey windows covered by heavy iron bars. Acetyline torches had to be used to burn the iron bars to gain entry through the windows.

Quickly sensing that the fire could not be controlled through the efforts of the Picton Fire Department alone, alarms were sent to Belleville and the district air stations. The alarm was received in Belleville at 12 o'clock, and five men, under Fire Chief William Lynch made the run with the city pumper in 35 minutes.

The Picton R.A.F. brigade arrived on the scene just before the Belleville men, and the Trenton R.C.A.F. firefighters were at the fire shortly before 1.30. The assistance given by the Belleville brigade and by the two airforce fighting units in controlling the blaze, which at its height threatened the entire main street, could not be too highly praised by the Picton authorities.

DR. R. A. FLYNN DIES SUDDENLY OF HEART ATTACK

Stricken at His Home Wednesday Afternoon Succumbing Early Thursday

IN CITY 11 YEARS

Dr. R. A. Flynn died suddenly at his home, 24 Queen Street, about three o'clock this Thursday morning. He was not feeling well on Wednesday but continued to look after his patients in their homes, and in the hospital. In the evening his close friend, Dr. G. S. Cronk called to see him and visited him again several times during the night and was with him when he died suddenly of a heart seizure.

The news of the death of Dr. Flynn created universal feelings of regret in Belleville today. Since coming here eleven years ago he established an extensive practice. His fine personality, friendly disposition and genial manner attracted many friends by whom he was held in high regard and by whom he will be much missed. In the discharge of his professional duties Dr. Flynn was most conscientious, he never spared himself and the welfare of his patients was his first consideration. He was kind-hearted and sympathetic and was a friend to the poor and to those in trouble. He was particularly fond of children and they in turn were fond of him and looked up to him as their Doctor and friend.

KINGSTON BOWLER HAS HEART ATTACK AT BOWLING GREEN

Suffering a sudden collapse at the Belleville Bowling Club, Mr. Joseph Newman, aged member of the Kingston Bowling Club, was admitted to the Belleville General Hospital on Wednesday afternoon in a critical condition. Mr. Newman was contesting with his club against the Belleville team, when he was stricken with the heart attack.

Dr. A. E. Carleton, Stirling, attended the stricken man at the greens and ordered his removal to the hospital, where he was attended by Dr. G. S. Cronk. Later Mr. Newman's physician from Kingston attended him at the hospital where this morning his condition is reported to be favorable. In a gesture of sympathy and well-wishes, the local bowling club this morning presented Mr. Newman with a bouquet of flowers.

Motorized Unit To Visit City During Loan Drive

Some idea of the force of Canada's military might will be seen here during the first week of the Third Victory Loan which opens October 19, when an armored cavalcade will parade through the city streets and halt for an indefinite period of time to allow public inspection.

Preceding the cavalcade will be a squadron of aircraft, which will fly low over the city and "bomb" it with pamphlets.

No defininte date has been set as yet for the appearance of the cavalcade but arrangements are now being made to have it appear either just before or following the opening of the Loan. If possible the armored vehicles will go to Picton, first, appearing there from 12 noon to 4 p. m. on the date selected, then back to this city for the late afternoon and early evening.

Victory Loan officials here stated that arrangements will be made, if possible, to suit the requirements of the city. The exact date will be announced later.

POLICE BLOTTER

Petty thieving was reported to police authorities during the past 24 hours. Alderman Robt. Pringle, Trent Road, reported the theft of a row boat, taken from its moorings west of the city limits.

Dr. J. J. Robertson left a black leather bag, used to carry medical goods and surgery knives in his motor car last night. During the night the bag was stolen.

Jay White, fourth concession of Sidney, complained to Provincial Police that a quantity of scrap iron had been taken from his barnyard recently. A man in a truck removed the iron, Mr. White reported.

Mrs. L. Ash, Foxboro, complained to the Provincial authorities that an injured dog had been abandoned on her premises after being struck by a hit-and-run motorist on Wednesday. The injured dog was later dispatched by the proper authorities.

Second Aerial Front In Italy to Help Russia Advocated

London, Oct. 8 —(CP—Cable)— Sir Archibald Southby, Conservative member of the House of Commons, suggested today the opening of a second aerial front in Italy to help Russia.

He announced his intention of asking Prime Minister Churchill if he has any official information to show that the Italian air force is assisting the German air force on the Russian front and, if so, "why do we not attack military targets in Italy," particularly in Rome and Val D-Aosta to assist our Russian allies by opening a second aerial front in Italy?"

Fined for Selling Ungraded Peaches

Convicted of selling ungraded peaches, contrary to the Fruits and Vegetables Act of the Department of Agriculture, Nick Watson, of Vineland, Ont., was fined $10. and costs before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd in County Police Court here today. Watson entered a plea of guilty before the proceedings opened and later Mr. C. T. Stevenson, District Agriculture Inspector, withdrew a second charge of falsely representing peaches offered for sale. The case arose out of the offering of peaches for sale in Belleville which was not graded. No evidence was heard, however, as the accused pleaded guilty and paid the minimum fine prior to the court.

Left Scene of Accident

Convicted of leaving the scene of an accident, Kenneth Badgley of Shannonville, was assessed $25 fine and $23. costs. Traffic Officer J. H. Hatch informed the court that Badgey's car had struck another motor car at Shannonville on Sept. 19th. last and Badgley had failed to remain at the scene. "This matter of leaving the scene of an accident is very serious" warned His Worship as he assessed the fine and costs.

Case Dismissed

"This case is not in my jurisdiction," pointed out Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K. C., when Harry Fisher, Tamworth, appeared on a charge of non-support. Chief J. C. Hayes of Tweed, informed the court that the plaintiff in the case resided in Tweed, but was not present. His Worship dismissed the count without further comment.

With Civic Elections in the Offing, Mayor Thompson Signifies Intention Of Seeking Office for Another Term

The frost is on the pumpkin and the grape and with the nearing of the end of the harvest comes consideration of other matters. In the city at this time of the year, that part of John Public, which is civic-minded begins to think and talk about municipal government. True he may or may not agree with all that is being done by city and county councils but he evinces some sort of interest in what will constitute the personnel of next year's municipal fathers' boards.

It was with this in view that an Ontario Intelligencer reporter put his newspaper nose to the ground and endeavored to ferret out some of the secret ambitions or intentions that lie either deep or next to the surface in aldermanic bosoms. He found out very little but what information he did get may be of some interest.

For instance, he approached His Worship Mayor Glen E. Thompson with the bromidic question, "Shall you run again?" His Honor unhesitatingly replied, "I shall be definitely in the field." And that was that.

Another alderman intimated very strongly that he, too, would run in the Mayoral Stakes which will breeze down the electoral track come the first week in December.

The rest of the aldermanic stable were not definite, that is, collectively, as to whether they would seek a further extension of their paternal duties to the city. It wouldn't be fair to mention names at this point, but the majority approached stated they would seek office for another year. After that, "who knows?"

So that's the picture as it was seen by the inquisitive reporter, and which is liable to change, it is presumed, without notice.

However, it looks now as if the city may see a fight for the mayoralty, and aldermanic seats. Nominations will be held as usual the last week in November, and the feature event the week following.

During the last civic election here there was about as much interest shown in public meetings as there would have been in a Zulu commercial travellers' convention in the heart of darkest Africa.

At least the candidates did turn out at both nomination and election meetings and they were about all that were present.

So if the city wakes up some morning to discover there are a few new faces sitting around the various civic government tables, it won't be the fault of the city or its bodies. Interest in election of men to municipal offices has been woefully lacking during the past two or three years. However, there still remains the Wharf Street Debating Club.

St. John Ambulance Brigade Continues First-Aid Classes

A corps of well-trained and efficient first aid workers would be badly needed should Belleville ever be subjected to the terrors of a concentrated bombing raid by an enemy air power. In such a contingency numerous casualties would be a certainty and stretcher bearers, well-trained in all phases of first aid work, would be in much demand.

However the knowledge of how to care for persons rendered unconscious through the concussion of exploding bombs, to tend fractures and cuts from flying glass, is only obtained as the result of suitable instruction and continuous practice.

It is just such work that the St. John Ambulance Brigade is constantly training. The local St. John Ambulance Brigade was started early in the year and many persons have been trained in first-aid work, both men and women, but many more will be needed, should an emergency arise in this city. Women joining the brigade are given instruction in home nursing, while men are instructed in first aid work.

J. Hodgson Head Instructor.

Instructors of the local brigade are headed by Mr. John Hodgson who has had long experience in first aid work. Under him are a competent group of men thoroughly acquainted in all phases of first-aid work. These men work without remuneration of any kind, and for the benefit of local residents.

The local St. John Ambulance Brigade is starting another class of first aid workers next week with instruction to be given at the collegiate each Monday evening. Every person interested is welcome to attend and take the training. At the conclusion of the course they may either join the brigade and continue practising to improve their efficiency or they may become associated with the local civilian defence committee. In any event, the instruction received, will be invaluable should an emergency arise in this city.

In the affairs of the city of his adoption Dr. Flynn took much interest and gave his support to all worthy causes. He was a member of the Belleville Kiwanis Club and filled in an able manner for a term the position of president. FINE ANNOYS OSHAWA DOCTOR

Oshawa, Ont., Oct. 8 — (CP)— "This is unfair, unjust and un-British and you had better send me to Toronto jail where you sent Tim Buck," shouted Dr. F. L. Henry, Oshawa, in Police Court yesterday. He had been convicted of two charges of "charging rentals higher than reasonably just" to tenants in an apartment house owned by him.

"This law governing rentals applies to you as well as any other person and I don't have to put up with this kind of nonsense from you," declared Magistrate Frank Ebbs as he fined accused $50 and costs or one month on each conviction.

Dr. Henry told the court that he would go to jail rather than pay the fine.

Talk on Incendiary Bombs and How To Deal With Them Given ARP Group

Should a fleet of enemy bombers suddenly roar over the city to release thousands of incendiary bombs upon public buildings, stores, factories and homes, how many local residents could deal with them that the resultant damage would be held to a minimum?

Incendiaries can crash through roofs to lodge in attics and other out-of-the-way places where, unless they are discovered immediately and the proper methods of control utilized to neutralize their destructive qualities, tremendous damage by fire is the certain result.

Belleville residents were given their first instruction on the appearance, construction and control of fire bombs on Wednesday evening when at the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Harold Seldon, vice chairman of the local Civilian Defence Committee, lectured members of the organization on "Incendiary Bombs and How to Deal With Them." It was the first of a series of eight lectures to be given in the basic training course which A.R.P. workers must take before branching out into categorized training of defence services.

Explains Construction

Mr. Seldon exhibited before the members of the local defence organization a typical incendiary bomb, of German make, explained its construction and action and told the best methods to deal with them or with the fires they start. Incendiary bombs are not explosive but are constructed so as to crash through roofs to start fires in upper floors or attics of buildings. They burn with an intense heat and spread fire over a distance of several yards.

The best method of control of incendiaries is to cover them with sand, ashes or other non-burning material, or to spray them with fine spray from a stirrup pump. The stirrup pump has been found to be the best manner of control, in that it prevents nearby woodwork from catching afire. Metal scoops, with which to pick the burning bomb up and deposit it outside away from inflammable materials, have also been found to be effective.

Industrial Representatives Attend

Representatives from local industrial firms attended the first lecture of the basic training course which dealt exclusively with incendiaries and their control. Other members also showed great interest in the lecture.

Additional equipment for the local Civilian Defence Committee is expected momentarily from headquarters in Toronto, it was stated by Mr. Seldon, a gasoline pumper, instructional material and first-aid kits having already arrived. Soon there will be respirators, equipment for air raid wardens, including stretchers and first-aid equipment.

Lectures will be held each Wednesday evening at the Y.M.C.A., at least for the period in which to complete the basic training course. Then members will be categorized into police, fire, first aid and air raid warden units for additional training.

The need for more members for the defence organization was stressed by Mr. Seldon who urged that interested persons "talk it up" among their friends. There is a very real danger of air raids in Canada, he warned, and Canadians must be trained to counteract them when they come. Complete organization of the local civilian defence set-up will be made on October 26, when Captain M. Hood, secretary of the provincial defence unit, will again visit the city.

WENDELL WILLKIE LEAVES CHINA

Chinese Papers Endorse Statement for All-Out Offensive

Chungking, Oct. 8—(AP)—Wendell Willkie left Chungking by plane yesterday, it was disclosed today, ending a five-day visit in the provisional Chinese capital.

The next stop of Willkie's tour, which has taken him through the Middle East and across Russia, was not immediately announced.

Meanwhile, Willkie's statement calling for an Allied offensive and an end to the supremacy of nations over other nations found unanimous support in the Chinese Press.

Every newspaper here displayed the statement prominently and endorsed it enthusiastically.

"A savior for post-war humanity has descended upon us," declared the New Peoples daily.

Ta Kung Pao said "Willkie's statement bounds and rebounds with sincerity and wisdom; it is the greatest statement he has made during his present trip."

The newspapers, however, made no comment on Willkie's appeal for China to put her economic and financial house in order by curbing inflation. Only a modified version of his statement on this subject was printed.

Members of the C.O.S.S.A. Vote to Continue Sports At Meeting Held in Belleville

Lester Shiels and T. E. Moffatt Re-elected as President and Secretary-Treasurer

CONVENERS NAMED

Interscholastic sports will continue in the Bay of Quinte group of the C.O.S.S.A. for at least another year it was definitely decided at the annual meeting and election of officers of that secondary school sports body held in the Belleville Collegiate Institute last evening when a signal honor was bestowed upon J. Lester Shiels of this city, when he was re-elected President of the Association for a second term. By virtue of their offices President Shiels and Mr. T. E. Moffat, venerable secretary-treasurer of the group, will automatically move into such respective positions as heads of the C.O.S.S.A. upon the annual meeting of that Ontario-wide Interscholastic body to be held in Toronto on Saturday.

Although only four district secondary schools were represented last night, two others signified intentions of continuing in the circuit for the year 1942-43. Present were delegates from St. Michael's Academy, Belleville Collegiate Institute and Albert College of Belleville along with Tweed High School. Secretary Moffat revealed that Stirling and Madoc High Schools would compete at both hockey and rugby football, however.

Officers Elected

The officers of the Bay of Quinte group of the C.O.S.S.A. for 1942-43 elected were:

Honorary President: Dr. Bert Howard, Albert College

President: J. Lester Shiels, Belleville.

Vice-President: Jack Doran, St. Michael's Academy.

Secretary-Treasurer: T. E. Moffat, Tweed.

Past President: Mr. Good of Stirling.

The respective convener chairmen named were:

Conventional 12-man football: Mr. Good, Stirling.

Six-man football: Paul R. Goyette, Albert College.

Boys' Basketball: Harold Partridge, B.C.I.

Girls' Basketball: Mrs. Davison, B.C.I.

Hockey. Harold Mott, B.C.I.

Football Picture

Only three schools indicated intentions of sponsoring 12-man football and include Tweed High School, 1941 league champions, Stirling and Madoc High Schools. In the six-man football program all teams entered are from Belleville: Albert College, Belleville Collegiate and St. Michaels Academy, 1941 group champions. Both B.C.I. and Albert College entered junior and senior six-man rugby squads, while St Mikes will compete in the junior series only. Picton Collegiate, an entry in this group in 1941, will be invited to return to the fold this season although that school was not represented last night.

Secretary Moffat suggested that the Bay of Quinte C.O.S.S.A. 1943 field day be held in Belleville next spring if at all possible and urged Mr. Doran of St. Michael's Academy to sponsor the project. "I realize the field day should be held in Madoc, but Belleville is more central and with prevailing conditions facing us I feel it would be more advantageous to hold the meet in Belleville, if at all possible", suggested Secretary Moffat.

In reading the treasurer's report, Mr. Moffat pointed out that the Association functioned with a bank balance last season for the first time in seven years. The financial statement presented reads as follows:

JAPANESE FLEE

and all the aircraft, escaping what the navy termed "only light anti-aircraft opposition," returned to their base.

The enemy's occupation of Kiska was regarded in naval circles as increasingly jeopardized, because of the approach of bitter winter weather. Less than 10 days ago, the Japanese radio reported that snow and bitter winds were causing hardship to their unsheltered forces in the islands.

Good Harbor at Kiska

Japanese invasion of the islands, recently described as a Japanese "rat trap" by Capt. Leland P. Lovette of the navy's bureau of public relations, opened with the bombing of Dutch Harbor, June 3, a day before the Battle of Midway.

Kiska has offered a comparatively adequate harbor for Japanese submarines and possibly might have been desired, naval officials said, as a vantage point from which to intercept supplies moving to Russia in case of a Japanese attack on the Soviet. Less than 600 nautical miles west of Dutch Harbor, Kiska likewise offers facilities for operation of Japanese planes.

Occupation of the Aleutians also gave the Japanese an opportunity to forecast weather conditions in the Eastern islands and on the American continent.

Whatever advantage was gained by the invasion was more than offset, naval circles believed, by the enemy casualties in ships and planes.

American submarines and planes sank 13 vessels including a cruiser, six destroyers, a warship identified as either a cruiser or destroyer, two minesweepers, a troop transport and two cargo ships. A destroyer, submarine and a transport were listed as probably sunk.

Among 22 enemy vessels reported damaged were four cruisers, three destroyers, a carrier, three submarines, six transports, a gunboat and four large cargo ships.

SUFFERED YEARS WITH GAS SOUR ACID UPSETS STOMACH

"Often Had to Stop and Rest," Unable to Sleep; Had Dizzy Spells, Headaches and Backache; Says Syntona Gave Her First Relief.

"During the past year I was in poor health due to very troublesome stomach disorders," said Mrs. Kathleen Boyce, 9 Wortley Road, London, Ontario, recently.

"Almost every morsel of food I ate caused an excess of acid in my stomach with belching up of hot, sour liquids. Gas pressure in my stomach and chest made me so short of breath I would often have to stop and rest until the attack passed off. When these attacks came over me at night I was unable to sleep. My system must have become contaminated by the poisons from the sluggishness of my stomach as I had a constant nagging backache and rheumatic pains all through my arms and limbs. I was subject to severe dizzy spells and frequent sick headaches.

"I tried many different things and although nothing ever helped me before, Syntona has given me such gratifying results that I cannot praise it too highly. It relieved the gassy condition of my stomach and got my bowels moving regularly. Food does not distress me now and I can enjoy my meals without fear of pain or shortness of breath afterward. I am entirely free from headaches and dizzy spells and the rheumatic aches and pains have gone away. I now get restful sleep at night and feel so much better that even my work seems easier. I am glad to add my name to the many who are recommending Syntona."

Let this pure herbal compound help you as it did so many other grateful men and women. Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

SHOWS TANK LANDING EXERCISES

CITY'S FORTIFIED

Red Star said the Russians stopped the Germans in the workers' quarter and threw them back and the invaders had failed to make a further advance. Now they are up against strengthened Red Army defences.

(A Rome radio broadcast recorded in London said Soviet forces hammering the Axis flank in the relief offensive across the Don-Volga corridor had bridged the Don with pontoons and, despite aerial strafing, regained footholds on the stream's west bank.)

Troops Are Holding

Opening of the 45th day of the siege of Stalingrad drew from the Soviet information bureau the flat declaration:—

"Our troops are holding their positions.

"During the day we destroyed about 500 Hitlerites, 19 German tanks, 18 trucks, five guns and six mortar batteries."

The Red Army of the Central Caucasus battled six tanks and motorized infantry fiercely in the Mozdok area, but — for the second day in succession — it was said the Russians retired to a new defence line in one sector.

An encirclement plan that backfired was declared to have cost the Germans 11 tanks and about a company of infantry in that region north of the Caucasian mountains.

Two battalions of a Rumanian infantry division newly moved into the western Caucasus battle arena southeast of Novorossisk "have been surrounded and annihilated" in a two-day engagement, the communique said.

The northwest front north of Moscow again drew attention. The information bureau said Red Army lines held against four attacks by two German regiments, supported by tanks and planes, and the battle ended with about 800 enemy dead and eight disabled tanks abandoned upon the field.

"On the Leningrad front, Soviet patrols killed 300 Germans in the last two days," it was announced. "Artillery fire destroyed 11 machine-guns, a mortar battery and 12 blockhouses."

HIGHER CEILING

each. A special premium of 50 cents per hundredweight will be allowed on extra quality beef, described as "red brand."

Seasonal increases will start in December and continue each month on a graduated scale until June next. In that month, the seasonal peak of $19.50 per hundredweight in Toronto for good commercial beef will be reached. At this point, it will be 25 cents per hundredweight above the ceiling price announced last June.

Will Have to be Imposed

Cattle prices will not be subject to actual ceilings at present. But if beef shortages occur again and subsequent black market operations force cattle prices to "unduly high levels," livestock price ceilings will have to be imposed.

Retail prices will be more strictly controlled and the board is considering an order defining standard retail cuts of beef.

If beef shortages appear to be more than temporary, rationing will be introduced. But it will probably require several months to organize a ration plan for beef.

The announcement means that farmers will get higher prices for their cattle, and that consumers will pay more for their beef.

Just how much more the farmer will get and how much more the consumer will pay was not immediately apparent. A board spokesman said it would mean a better price for the farmer and also would ensure continuity of supplies. He said it would not increase the retail price very much.

The spokesman said the payment of a premium of 50 cents per hundredweight on extra quality "Red Brand" beef was designed to encourage the farmer to produce higher quality beef and a heavier carcass.

The statement guardedly said the board's decision "may make it possible for farmers to be paid more for their cattle this autumn than the average prices which farmers have actually been receiving during the past month." It added, "It will not, however, create cattle prices as high as the artificial levels which have recently been quoted in some markets."

June Prices for Standard

Last night's announcement said that next June the Boards intend to declare the June prices as the only ceiling price, and prices will be left free to fluctuate seasonally under that ceiling.

It fixed maximum carcass prices for the four lower grades of beef at these discounts below the maximum price of good commercial beef; plain beef, 1 1-2 cents; butcher cows and bulls, 2 1-2 cents; cutter beef, 3 cents; boner beef 4 1-2 cents.

Wartime Food Corporation, said the statement, will be prepared to buy cattle if there is at any time a surplus supply threatening to depress cattle prices unduly. After providing a reserve supply for domestic consumption, the corporation will export any remaining surplus cattle.

The corporation, the statement added, "will operate with a view to preventing uneven marketings or disorderly fluctuation in prices."

As a move to tighten control of retail prices, the board said it has ordered that no retailer may sell at prices which represent a margin of more than seven cents per pound above his cost, whether he buys a whole carcass or a wholesale cut. This is in addition to a previous order which requires retailers to see that their selling prices shall not exceed their cost prices by a greater markup than that which they obtained in the basic price ceiling period Sept. 15-Oct. 11, 1941.

Control at Canadian Levels

The announcement also said that the board rejected the claim that Canadian cattle prices or the prices of any other commodities should be allowed to rise as high as United States prices. It said "Unless prices are controlled at Canadian levels the whole effort at price and wage control would be destroyed."

The statement took note of the controversy over beef prices and supplies which has been raging during recent months.

Donald Gordon, board chairman, said the board had received and studied many representations about shortages in the domestic beef supply and complaints that the previous program of seasonal price differentials was wrongly based.

"In the face of conflicting views," said the statement, "it was necessary for the board to provide finality by coming to a decision representing its best judgment in the matter."

Mr. Gordon appealed to all concerned, "Now that the decision is finally made . . . to make the policy a success regardless of past mistakes of past misunderstandings. The needs of war are such that we cannot afford to waste time and energy in differences of opinion amongst ourselves."

SPRING PORKERS FEASTING ON BORROWED TIME

Farmers Take Advantage of Ideal Weather to Feed Extra Rations

FALL RUN LATE

By FRANKLIN MULLIN

Associated Press Financial Writer.

Chicago, Oct. 8 (AP)—Livestock markets of the United States continued to wait today for the promised fall deluge of hog receipts while fat porkers, feasted on borrowed time.

Farmers, whose valuable hogs will supply vital concentrated food for the United Nations' war effort, took advantage of ideal fall weather and plentiful feed to give their animals the extra rations which will put their yield in meat and lard at maximum.

Thus, the country's record crop of spring pigs enjoyed a brief reprieve. And while they gorged in the feedlots, livestock men fretted about the threat of price ceilings being clamped on hogs as well as other meat animals.

The marketing lag virtually dispelled hopes the fall run of hogs might begin earlier this season. It not only would relieve the price situation, which is squeezing pork processors whose wholesale and retail meat charges have been frozen at ceilings, but also would spread out the heavy marketing period.

Government agents have warned that because of an unprecedented number of hogs on farms, transportation, marketing and processing facilities are likely to be faced with a serious glut if producers wait to sell all their animals during the heavy mid-winter slaughtering period.

Highest Since 1920

Although hogs recently have been selling in Chicago over an average of $15 per cwt., highest since 1920 compared with $10.50 a year ago, $6.30 two years ago and an all-time October low of $3.50 in 1932, farmers have shown no inclination to send their pigs to market to take advantage of these prices.

Normally there is a big pick-up in hog receipts in October, but arrivals as major corn belt markets last week were about 14 per cent less than the previous week and a year ago This week there has been some increase but the runs have been only slightly larger than a year ago, when farmers had considerably fewer hogs on feed.

Livestock dealers said meat shortages in some localities and price ceilings in effect on wholesale and retail trade might contribute to increased farm slaughter of hogs for local marketing.

Getting Down to Essentials

Occasionally the remark is made that we in Canada hardly know there is a war on judging from our way of living. It is true that we enjoy practically all of the pleasures and comforts of living that we have had in the past. We are having a shortage of gasoline and supplies of meat in most districts. However, even these shortages cause only inconvenience and no hardship. As yet our way of living has hardly been touched but there is the prospect that the future may not be so favorable along that line.

* * *

More and more of our citizens are entering factories on war production and most are getting higher wages than they have ever received. After the ordinary expenses of living are satisfied, these wage-earners are going to look around to transfer some of their surplus earnings into concrete possessions which they have desired for so long and have had to do without for lack of enough money.

* * *

They are going to buy what remaining stocks there are of new refrigerators, sports equipment and radios and so on. They will, also, buy what they can get of these things that are offered for sale by others but there is a limit to the quantity because these items cannot be replaced until after the war.

* * *

They are going to find that they cannot have everything they want merely because they have the money. People must realize there is not enough raw material to produce non-essential articles of manufactured products, guns, ships, planes and innumerable other tools of war so urgently needed. Now is the time for all of us to save our money so that we may buy war bonds and War Savings Stamps for the time when employment will not reward wage-earners and others so richly as the present.

* * *

Each year the government is reaching more and more people through the income tax and those with higher incomes are having a large share of their earnings taken to pay the tremendous costs of waging war. This will restrict the amount of careless spending and keep more people at home and give them an opportunity to enjoy some of the simpler pleasures of life that have been discarded since the motor car came into wide-spread popularity. Some will consider this something of a hardship for home has been a place for eating and sleeping only. Soon they'll begin to realize there is a war going on and that they are not going to be able to do many of the things they would like to do.

* * *

Our way of living in the matter of travel is likely to see some changes if the war goes on long enough—and there certainly does not seem to be any prospect of its ending soon—for we're going to have to do more walking. The shortage of tires and the drastic gasoline rationing starting this month will make itself felt more and more as time passes. Walking, for a good many of us, is something that we have avoided with persistency. We get in our car to go on an errand a block away, to go calling on friends living on the same street, and so on, but all that is going to be changed for many from now on. The doctors tell us that walking at a brisk pace is one of the best exercises that we can indulge in and now some of us will have an opportunity to try out this advice, which up until this fall, has been mostly theory.

* * *

These minor changes in our way of living will cause no suffering, only some inconvenience as we have said before, but they indicate the trend of the times. If further restrictions are necessary we know they will be accepted with good grace by most Canadians. When everything is considered we are very fortunate not to be having to give up more than has been asked of us. We have but to reflect on what the people in Europe are suffering to count our blessings one by one.

FALSE ALARM

To twelve thousand students the Fuehrer was speaking,
His words flowing out like a tap that was leaking
Flanked by his stout-hearted Reichmarshal Goering
His words, so I hear, were not a bit boring.

He outlined the history of the great German-nation
And received in reply a heiling ovation.
His chest he stuck out and his voice was a scream
When he said: "We alone in this war are supreme;
We'll soon have this big Russian bear in the bag."
And he twirled his moustache and hollered "Der Tag."
"We have the power and I know we can fool
That man Uncle Sam and his friend Johnny Bull—"

Then he paused, for a sound was borne on the breeze,
(It wasn't Jack Benny playing the flight of the bees).
Muted by distance, it caused him to wonder,
The sky was quite clear, so it couldn't be thunder.
And he cried, "It's an air raid, Dumkompts, Donnerwetter,
Someone give me a hole, the deeper the better.
Where is the Marshal, he'll know what is best?
And turning found Goering, his chins on his chest.
Then the Fuehrer turned purple, his rage over-pouring,
For it wasn't an air raid, 'twas just Goering snoring.

A "FOURTH" IN ENGLAND

—Sir: Mrs. Bergen and I were in Southport, England, on July 4, 1906. Toward noon we strolled down to the beautiful waterfront, where a very fine brass band in an ornamental bandstand was playing American airs. Over them floated the largest Stars and Stripes I ever had seen.

The band conductor—high hatted Prince Albert—coated and with white gloves and no baton—motioned his band to their feet and began "The Star Spangled Banner.' My silk hat came off at once, and many others standing near uncovered. You could not have asked for a finer demonstration.

I was quite overcome, and when the band finished I spoke up loud and clear, "Hurrah for King Edward!" There were cries of "Hear! Hear!" and some one shouted, "the American is going to make a speech." Then a burly Irish policeman pushed through the crowd and said, "If you want to make a speech get off the walk and speak on the street!" I answered, "I do not want to make a speech but I think that England is the very finest country." And he shot back—"Yer didn't see Ireland yet!" — Letter to Minneapolis Star Journal.

DEER HEAD TOPS RECORD

Recognition as a world's record will be asked by the New Zealand Deerstalkers Association for a Japanese deer head. It is a 10-pointer obtained by H. L. White, of Morrisville, and E. J. Schofield, of Auckland, in the Poronui district of North Island. Japanese deer develop better antlers in New Zealand than elsewhere. In their native country they seldom exceed six points. The head for which record rating is asked has antlers 33⅞ inches long, and a spread of 31⅛ inches.

Reigoso says it was an accident.

IT IS a current gag that Rommel, if he had been in the British army, would still be a sergeant. In the Nazi army, judging from the careers of other generals, Rommel would still be a sergeant if he hadn't, happened to be one of Hitler's plug-uglies.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

What a Physical Examination Really Means

I have never been able to understand why every individual does not report regularly to his or her physician and dentist for a physical examination. The motor car gets a careful checkup frequently—water in radiator; water in battery; amount of oil present and whether it is smooth or gritty; the air and gas flow in carburettor; amount and thickness of grease in gear box, steering column and rear axle; the oil in springs and shock absorbers; the amount of air in tires and a general inspection of other parts of the car. The car is not expected to perform well unless regular inspections are made.

In the case of his body, man waits until "something goes wrong" with one or other parts before he does anything about it. Just as the car and its different parts need proper oil grease, fuel, and air so the body as a whole and in its parts needs proper fuel, air, lubrication, removal of wastes, which should be checked regularly.

When car is taken to be inspected, the garage man has a card showing all the parts that must be inspected. It looks like, and is, a long list. The mechanic must know the car thoroughly to give the necessary service.

Most of us never think of how much must be inspected, how much must be known about the body, its symptoms that are serious and its symptoms that are not serious, if we are to remain well. There is inspection of eyes, ears, nose, throat; lungs; bronchial tubes; heart with its sounds, size, power, rate; liver—whether it is doing its various jobs; gall bladder and its emptying time; the stomach and its ability to prepare food for digestion; the small intestine which does most of the digesting and from which the blood absorbs the nourishment from the food; the large intestine and its ability to get rid of wastes; the condition of the kidneys and whether they are removing wastes properly; the pressure of the blood stream and condition of the bloodvessels; the blood itself and its red and white corpuscles

Then, food, exercise, rest must be discussed before the physician is through with his inspection.

This inspection not only wards off serious damage or wear of the parts of the body, but gives that feeling of safety that enables the individual to work or play within safe limits.

Whitehall Notebook

London, Oct. 8 (CP)—Few men in England are better linguists than Philip Noel-Baker, parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of War Transport whose voice is frequently heard over the air in the occupied countries of Europe.

His skill was put to its most severe test when he broadcast to Nazi Europe in five languages, English, German, French, Greek and Italian—calling on transport workers to keep the harvest from the Germans. Had it been required, he also would have spoken in Norwegian and Spanish.

Noel-Baker learned the languages on the spot. . . French and Italian before and during the last war, German during a year at a German University, Norwegian while working with Dr. Nansen, the explorer, in Norway, Spanish during a stay in Spain, and Greek during visits to that country where his wife owned property.

Beverley Baxter, Canadian-born member of parliament and journalist, has written his first play. It is "It Happened in September," and illustrates the opposing ideals of modern youth, personified by the son of an English M.P. and a German pilot. The play, which had its premiere at Brighton, probably will be brought to London later in the season by producer Jack Hylton.

An ambulance, gift of the Women's Patriotic League of Listowel, Ont., was presented to the town of Bover by, appropriately, Lady Listowel. A Hungarian by birth, Lady Listowel has been lecturing for the Ministry of Information and the Army on education.

She tells this story of a Canadian pilot she met on one of her journeys. Did he know Listowel in Canada? she asked.

"I do," was the reply. "Not long ago when I was travelling across the Dominion I was stranded one night in the village of Listowel. I got to a house, knocked at the door, was given a meal. I liked the daughter of the house. I proposed to her. Now we are married."

Sir Richard Acland, M.P., for Barnstable, Devon, who has long been at odds with the Liberal party, has informed the Divisional Liberal Executive he is leaving the party and wishes in future to be known as an independent.

Sir Richard, an M.P. since 1935, is 35 and is the eighth generation of Aclands to sit in parliament.

The 11th anniversary of the Mukden incident, which touched off the Chinese-Japanese war, was marked in London by a reception given by the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Wellington Koo.

The Ambassador—most dapper man at the Embassy—was host to more than 50 newspapermen from Britain, all parts of the Empire and many of the United Nations.

As each guest arrived he was announced in resounding voice by an immaculate English footman and welcomed personally by smiling Dr. Koo.

Chinese bread, a rice concoction resembling cream puffs in appearance, was the delicacy of a buffet supper which followed. The Ambassador made a point of introducing it to as many of his guests as dared eat it.

While on the subject of press receptions, conferences Brendan Bracken holds monthly for members of the Empire Press rank high in the opinion of newspapermen.

The Minister of information reviews the war "off the record" in lucid phrases, giving guidance to correspondents on topics ranging from industry at home to sea battles in the Pacific Ocean. Then he answers a barrage of questions and complaints from the score or more of press men and women.

Complaints raised at these conferences, more often than not, received almost immediate attention. They usually are handled by Mr. Bracken himself or by some of his assistants who sit in on the discussions, including L. W. Brockington, formerly on Prime Minister Mackenzie King's staff and now attached to the M.O.I.

Canadian news is gaining more and more prominence in British newspapers which early in the war rarely devoted more than an inch or two of space to what was happening in the Dominion. Now, nearly every paper in the country carries at least three or four items daily from Canada.

One paper which publicizes the Dominion more than any other is the Yorksire Herald which runs a weekly two-column feature under the heading "Cables From Canada."

Many of Canada's air squadrons are stationed in this county and the column was instigated at the suggestion of an air force officer closely connected with the paper who knew from personal contacts with Canadian airmen how much they appreciated news from home.

SHANGRI-LA

By making several references to "Shangri-La," President Roosevelt has probably given the English language a new word.

When the President was asked by newsmen at a White House press conference whence General Doolittle's planes had taken off to bomb Tokio last April, he declined to divulge the information. Jokingly, however, he said that when "a sweet young thing," a dinner guest at the White House, had asked him this question he told her the planes took off from Shangri-La.

At a later press conference the President whimsically suggested that Shangri-La might be the destination of two American battleships reported by the Axis to be in the Mediterranean.

Many people both at home and abroad took the President's whimsy seriously.

A man in New Orleans wrote the President that a careful study of the map of Louisiana had failed to reveal any "Shangri-La."

A radio broadcaster in Germany said in all seriousness that attempts to locate Shangri-La on maps in Germany had failed.

A lame-duck Congressman facetiously applied to the President for appointment as U.S. minister to Shangri-La.

"Shangri-La" was coined by James Hilton in his novel entitled "Lost Horizon," published in England in 1933.

Hilton says that "La" is a Tibetan dialect word meaning "mountain pass," while "Shangri-LÅ" was a pure invention that popped into his head when he was trying to think of a good name for an imaginary paradise in the Himalayan mountains in Tibet.

In the book of Shangri-La is the name of a green valley and a Buddhist monastry or lamasery high up in the mountains of Tibet. It was a sort of Utopia, where time stood still and the inhabitants were virtually ageless.

It is interesting that the President should have chosen Shangri-La as an imaginary airplane base, because in Hilton's story the central characters reached Shangri-La in a plane that crashed, and the High Lama predicted that Shangri-La might be a safe sanctuary when the new Dark Ages spread over the whole world like a pall. "The airman bearing loads of death to the great cities will not pass our way," added the High Lama, "and if by change he should, he may not consider us worth a bomb"

THE WAR TODAY

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

London, Oct. 8—Efforts to forecast the needs of a wholly shattered and disorganized postwar Europe are intensifying in London among governments of small nations enslaved by Hitler.

Here we have the symbolic governments of Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, The Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Greece and Yugoslavia. These orphans of the Hun bloodbath represent an odd mixture of countries whose pre-war interests, both political and economic, made them highly individualistic.

Now, however, as they drift about on an ocean so vast they cannot see its shores, one thing clear to them is that post-war Europe must be one for all and all for one. There must be unselfish co-ordination of effort.

Beyond that I don't believe there is one of these governments whose dreams are based on anything more than wishes. They don't know whether the countries they are trying to represent here will survive in their present form. They have small notion whether if they do survive, they will restore the same kind of governments they had before the war.

The best these representatives can do is to act as trustees who will serve until the enemy is evicted. Then they will turn their affairs over to the people at home, having kept the world conscious of their countries during the long blackout of war.

Grasping at Straws

..The governments here in London, having no idea what they may find at home after the war, must be prepared for a political turn which may be either to the right or left. The people of Europe are likely to be grasping at straws to save themselves and will seize any ism that looks good to them or seems to be the least of evils.

In this connection the governments are taking full note of the great swing the social pendulum is making. They figure the democratic world's trials have made it more social minded, more "people conscious," more anxious to serve and create greater opportunity for everybody.

Or you can put it this way: wealth isn't durable if other people are hungry.

I understand that with this handwriting on the wall to guide them, the governments are focussing attention on greater opportunities for everybody. As signs now read, this ideal, which is one of the points of the Atlantic Charter, may become the great bond among continental peoples.

Out of this ultimately might grow a United States of Europe.

However, the chief thing that appeals to most of the governments right now is regional federation. This means the grouping together of states with common interests, such as a Mediterranean bloc and a Baltic bloc. Once these regional federations are functioning properly, they might provide the necessary foundation for a greater organization of all the states of Europe.

However what happens in Europe after the war depends in a major degree on the understanding among Britain, the United States and Russia. Only the closest co-operation within this triple alliance can pull the continent together and prevent it being broken up again into zones of influence with power politics once more being played.

No One Blamed For Man's Death

Recommendations that all four-wheeled motor vehicle trailers be equipped with proper and adequate brakes were made by a Prince Edward County coroner's jury at Rossmore on Wednesday evening at the adjourned inquest looking into the death of Hilliard Aide, of Hartsmere. The hearing was held before Coroner Dr. R. A. Thompson of Wellington, and although the coroner's jury did not directly place any responsibility upon any individual, the jury did recommend and suggest that all trailers should be equipped with proper brakes.

The inquest was necessary following the death of Mr. Aide, who sustained injuries on Highway No. 14 south of Belleville last month when a trailer loaded with fish swerved and collided with the Picton-Belleville bus. The deceased man died later in the hospital as the result of injuries sustained when the bus crashed into the ditch as the result of the impact. W. S. Lane, Picton, conducted the inquest.

Injured Pilot Saves Life of His Observer

London, Oct. 8 — (CP) — The last act of a fatally injured pilot of a fighter command night-flying aircraft which came down in the sea after an "uneventual" intruder patrol, was to save the life of his observer, air ministry news service reported.

The observer said the crash, within a few miles of the English coast, apparently was due to engine failure because there were no enemy aircraft about.

"The next thing I remember was being in the water, and finding myself inflating my dinghy," he said. "I couldn't have been thrown into the position, because my harness straps were fastened when I was in the aircraft and I am sure now that the pilot, although himself injured, must have undone them and lowered me into the water.

The observer was picked up by a rescue launch and taken to hospital where he learned the pilot had been picked up by a trawler but had died from injury and exposure before he could be landed.

Of Him Canada Asks
All a Man Can Give

On You Canada Lays a Grave Responsibility

MAKE no mistake — this is a total war in which we face fanatical, ruthless, determined enemies. We shall defeat them only if valour in our fighting men is matched by self-denial and effort on the part of those at home.

WHAT YOU CAN DO FOR CANADA

Canada does not ask of you the deathless courage that she expects of her fighting men, but she does place on you a grave responsibility Over and above the money raised through taxation she must spend every single day Six Million Dollars to carry on the war. It must come from voluntary loans — from you and people like you. That is why you are asked to get ready to buy Victory Bonds.

Does Canada doubt that you will do as she asks? No indeed. She trusts in the sincerity of your patriotism — in your deep-rooted pride in her and all she stands for. She believes that you would scorn to do less than your utmost, or refuse to lend your money while others are offering their lives.

HOW YOU CAN DO IT

Of late the total earnings that go into the nation's pay envelopes have been enormously increased. Thousands are earning more than they have ever done. In countless homes sons and daughters are earning money for the first time.

This may—or may not—be true of you and yours, but at least your duty is clear. It is to see that each and every one in your home budgets his or her expenditures week by week to allow regular and consistent saving. Every item of needless spending should be ruthlessly cut out — every spare dollar invested in Victory Bonds. Make this the motto of your household: "Work, save and lend."

Miss Lorna Wright read the address of the evening, which was signed by Nathan Sine, Murney Kirkey, Donald Thompson, Bob Sine, Ernie Reid.

The young couple were presented with a silver tea service, a blanket and a table

James and Wanda suitably thanked their friends for the excellent gifts. A number of the gentlemen present spoke briefly, expressing their pleasure at being present and wished James and Wanda every success in life.

Chicken Is Good Substitute For Pork, Beef

Canadians have been asked to refrain from buying pork in order that the meat that Britain so urgently needs may be sent to her. There are, however, plentiful supplies of poultry available which is good news, as there is probably no other meat with so high a popularity rating.

Fried chicken that melts in the mouth can be prepared by the following method ,recommended by the Consumers Section of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. Have the butcher split the birds. Simmer gently until tender, about 20 minutes, without the addition of salt which tends to dry out the flesh. Allow to cool. Cut in individual portions. Dip each portion in seasoned flour, egg and fine breadcrumbs and fry in deep fat 375 degrees for five minutes. A moist, tender product of better appearance and flavor is the result and larger birds can be successfully prepared by this method than when the chicken is not precooked.

On Monday night, September 28, a large number of people gathered at Springbrook Orange Hall, to wish Mr. and Mrs. James Johnston a happy wedded life and to present them with a number of useful gifts.

Mr. George E. Thompson acted as chairman for the evening. Ada Bateman gave a reading. Florence Galloway and Norma Mason sang a duet and Jeanne Williams a solo. Four of the smaller girls, Lois Mason, Barbara Meiklejohn, Eleanor Thompson and June Knox entertained with a song.

The address of the evening was read by Marian McKeown. The address was signed by Marjorie Brown, Ruth Bateman, Leah Stewart and Ada Bateman.

Wanda and James replied thanking the neighbors and friends for the lovely gifts. Lunch was served.

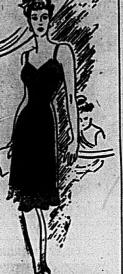
A Smart Slip

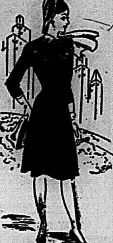


Cut on regulation lines.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

THE NEW slips are as handsome as they are practical, and are mostly cut on regulation lines with a fitted bodice. This one is of black crepe and has gored detail below the snugly fitted bodice. Black net borders the top and the hem, and very narrow black ribbon is threaded through the beading and tied in a small bow at the hem and front.

Shades of Autumn



Lovely purple dress.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

PURPLE, a beautiful deep grape purple, is the color chosen for some of the prettiest of the new frocks for fall. It is the shade for this handsome wool frock so right for the autumn scene. The yoke is of braid, with colorful stone insets embroidered on three-color crepe, pale blue at the neck, then deeper blue, then a bluish purple. The dress is utterly simple and is seamed from neck to helm at the centre front.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Acts Queer When He's Around

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past few months I've been going with a girl. About two months ago I enlisted in the Army, and we've been corresponding. Everything seemed all right until I came home on a few days' furlough. I saw her at church and asked to take her home, but she declined. I heard that someone told her something which isn't true.

I made one date with her and she acted queer all evening. When I asked her about the night at church, she explained that she had come with a group of girls and did not want to desert them.

Now that I'm back in camp, I'm wondering if I should keep on going with her or should I go with others. I can go with plenty of them.

R. T. N.

Sometimes it's hard to tell whether a girl is really "mad", or if her queerness is due to that chip on the shoulder which is almost always present when young people are falling in love. For lovers are unduly sensitive; they imagine all sorts of slights and offenses where none is intended.

Better give her another chance and if she fails to answer your next letter, let her alone for a while. Why not go out with other girls, anyway.

Husband Carries Other Girl's Picture

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Five years ago we were married. My husband's salary was small so I went to work to help out. I kept my job until our son was born. About five months ago his work got slack again so I took back my old job. Now my husband has a good job in a war plant. His salary has doubled, but still I've kept my job. Two months ago he began finding fault with everything I did, and I found that he still has her picture time off from work to see a certain girl who works in his office.

He promised to break off with her, but when I came back from the hospital after an operation, I found out that he had been taking in his wallet. He begged for another chance.

What am I to do, Miss Fairfax? He thinks he loves her but still wants to live with me. He tells me to forget it and be happy, but how can I, knowing that he may be out with this other girl? Shall I try to forget, hoping that he will snap out of it some day?

Heartbroken Wife

When I get a letter like yours—and I get scores of them—it seems as if the world chaos had begun to seep into domestic life. Your husband philandering around with a girl carrying her picture in his wallet, begging you to stand by him, making and breaking promises — people who lead that sort of life are like seaweed awash on the tide.

I'm thankful your little son has one sane parent, and that you have a job; as the custody of the child would be given to you in case you do break up. In the final analysis, it's always up to the woman how much he want to stand for.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Furlough Marriage

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My fiance expects to have a furlough some time in November, and we are going to be married then.

I must confess that I am very vague about the difference between formal and informal invitations. I am going to have a church wedding and, if there is time after I know the date of my fiance's furlough, I would like to have engraved invitations.

If there isn't time for this, may notes of invitations be sent? I don't know whose responsibility it is to write these; am I to write these. or is my mother to do this? Should they be written in the third person?

Roma

If your wedding is to be formal, you can have the informal invitations engraved, with the date line left blank, to be written in when you know the date. This is often done nowadays, when wedding dates are not known until the last minute. Even with formal weddings now, one is very apt to be invited by telephone or telegraph, or by special-delivery note.

If notes of invitations are to be sent, they are best written by the bride's mother, who is the hostess, or by the bride, in her mother's name. They are written in the first person, like the usual note. . . formal invitations are worded in the third person.

Hint For Table Manners

"Speak not of doleful things at the table. Speak not of melancholy thing as death and wounds. And if others mention them change, if you can, the discourse".

All-time Attendance Record Established at Madoc Fall Fair Despite Exigencies of the War

Perfect Weather, Splendid Exhibits and Trials of Speed Make Exhibition Real Success

A VARIED PROGRAM

Madoc, Oct. 8 (Staff)—Historic hub of the county, and traditionally famous for its fall exhibition this centre Hastings village yesterday played host to eight thousand enthusiastic fair-goers an all-time attendance record as the Madoc Agricultural Society provided another sterling fair despite exigencies of war.

The weather was perfect. A brilliant October sun shone from a cloud-flecked blue sky on the thousands that milled in the natural amphitheatre that is Madoc's fair grounds.

The exhibition as a whole lived up to the reputation of many successful predecessors. Foresighted directors left no stone unturned to make the 1942 exhibition an outstanding one and it easily rated as one of the best in the district.

Entries —in all classes with the exception of cattle compared favorably with those of last year. Cattle exhibits were down slightly due to the fact that two outstanding exhibitors were unable to put in an appearance.

Plenty of Entertainment

There was entertainment galore. On a raised dais the fine band of the Royal Canadian Artillery, Kingston, played sparkling melodies, interspersing a fine stage program provided by Miss Marion Laird and her clever "Young Canada Revue" from Peterboro. These clever youngsters, dancers, singers, acrobats and musicians performed in a two-hour show that was outstanding in originality and ability of the 15 youthful performers.

Husky sawyers from the far sections of the county and district vied in a log sawing competition while old-time fiddlers brought out in typical pioneer style the catchy melodies of days long past.

Ladies Prove Adept

Ladies of the district proved adept with hammer and nail in a nail driving contest that left no doubt as to the ability of milady in this phase of man's realm.

Adding to the general enjoyment of the large crowd that thronged about the platform were buck-sawing contests. A dog show by school children, cowboy songs; step dancing by nimble-footed oldsters and youngsters, and a mouth-organ contest that evinced merriment, as well as melody.

In the livestock exhibits the horse entries were outstanding. Proud Percherons, Belgians and Clydesdale vied with Hackneys, and other lighter breeds for equine honors.

All Classes Represented

Holstein, Jersey, Ayrshire, Shorthorn and Durham cattle demonstrated the county's keen interest in this type of farming. The poultry exhibits were also outstanding and fine specimens of all breeds including chickens, turkey and geese were shown.

Agricultural exhibits were down from those of last year but the quality of fruits, vegetables, seeds, grains and cheese maintained the high status of previous exhibitions. Cheese exhibits were not so numerous as before but the top exhibits score of 98.15 points well indicates the type of cheese shown.

Exhibits Numerous

Exhibits in the main building were numerous and variable. Some fine examples of women's needlework were on display with a colorful floral exhibit occupying the centre of the building. Another feature was the Dominion Entomological Laboratory, Belleville, display, showing many parasites that affect fruit plant and vegetable life. Children's art work, such as paintings, drawings and water colors; exhibits of cooking and preserves and many other features were on display. A Win-the-War section and a Red Cross display attracted much attention.

Colorful Midway

A colorful midway received its share of attention from the crowd. share of attention from the crowd. A merry-go-round thrilled the children with weight-lifters, ball-throwing contests, games of chance, bingo—and tented shows, candy-sellers and souvenir vendors made up this section of the fair. Hot dog stands and local food concessions got their share of business.

Always colorful is its parade of people, the fair again echoed to the enjoyment of a cross section of Hastings and neighboring counties. Urban and rural residents from Prince Edward, Northumberland and other close-by areas were present. The northern part of the district was also well represented.

Trials of Speed

Trials of speed by some outstanding harness horses were productive of some keen racing and all the events, handled by starter George O. Tice, Belleville, were closely contested. A running race provided a lot of thrills to lovers of this sport.

President Wilfred Forrestall his directors and Secretary William Hill expressed themselves as well pleased with the success of its third wartime fair. The record attendance indicates that the general public is stil far from showing a lack of interest in rural fairs. The results:

BRITISH TROOPS CAPTURE MAJUNGA, MADAGASCAR

On the morning of Sept. 10, British troops effected widespread landings on the west coast of Madagascar, including the ports of Majunga and Morondava. Meeting only slight opposition at Majunga the town was soon overcome and the civil and military authorities arranged the surrender. This is one of the first photographs from Madagascar, showing British troops as they landed on the quay at Majunga. Madagascar is now practically all in the hands of the British.

Duke of Kent's Plane Flown on Wrong Track

London, Oct. 8 (CP)—Air Secretary Sir Archibald Sinclair said the accident in which the Duke of Kent was killed occurred "because the aircraft was flown on a track other than that indicated in the flight plan given the pilot and at too low an altitude to clear rising ground on the track."

The Minister said the R.A.F. Court of Inquiry also had found the Captain responsible "for a serious mistake in airmanship."

Weather conditions were not good for the takeoff, the Minister's written reply to a House of Commons question said. but "should have presented no difficulties to an experienced pilot."

50 Shipments Of Cigarettes Sent By Fund in Year

Just one year ago yesterday the first shipment of cigarettes, sent to Belleville boys serving overseas through the Kinsmen "Fag Fund", inaugurated the fund. Since that time 50 shipments totalling approximately 620,000 cigarettes have reached our boys in the armed services.

The popularity and expectancy of the "smokes" sent through the Kinsmen Fund can readily be appreciated in the continued number of replies being received daily by Chairman Matt Currie, for instance in the past few days letters of appreciation urging the Kinsmen and citizens of Belleville to continue the sending of Canadian "fags" to Belleville boys overseas were received from the following:—A. A. Clarke, D. Galpin, G. S. Yearwood, J. A. Pike, D. Graham, Leo Goyer, E. Webber, R. A. Rollins, H. Kelleher, W. J. Terry, Tom McCoy, J. Graham and others, all of whom expressed thanks and hopes for the continuance of the fund.

With Belleville boys overseas looking for their monthly quota of "fags," Chairman Currie today made a plea to the citizens of Belleville to contribute to the Kinsmen Fag Fund through the collection boxes left in numerous stores in Belleville. "If each citizen would contribute but 15c a year the fund could carry on successfully and assure all our boys of cigarettes each month," explained Mr. Currie at last night's Kinsmen Club meeting.

Those shipped packages of 300 cigarettes each this week included: A. A. Acerra, Charles W. Anderson, Edwin Aylesworth, M. A. Ayres, Andrew Bennett, Donald Bibby, A. P. Blaney, A. Bridge, Gordon Cook, R. E. Denike, W. Dingman, Geoffrey Dodds, J. P. Foster, Harry Gibson, David Graham, N. Guay, James Hall, Joseph G. E. Jones, Stanley Joslin, John Laney, W. Laney, R. S. King's Ministry Has 20 Ministers

Ottawa, Oct. 7. (CP)—With three new men brought into the Cabinet —increasing its numerical strength by two—Prime Minister MacKenzie King's ministry now has twenty members, including the Prime Minister and Senator J. H. King of British Columbia, government leader in the Upper House and Minister Without Portfolio.

The appointments, announced last night, brought Quebec's representation up to five members, all with portfolios. During recent months Quebec has had only two members but earlier in the war it had five. One of them, the late Senate Leader Raoul Dandurand, was like Dr. King a Minister Without Portfolio.

Ontario's representation was not affected by the latest shifts. That province continues to have six men in the government, with portfolios, including Navy Minister Macdonald, former Premier of Nova Scotia, who represents Kingston City. Manitoba lost one representative with transfer of Hon. J. T. Thorson from Minister of War Services to the presidency of Exchequer Court.

In addition to Ontario and Quebec, the only provinces having more than one cabinet representative are Saskatchewan with the Prime Minister and Agriculture Minister Gardiner, and British Columbia with Pensions Minister Mackenzie and Dr. King.

The new appointees last night were Maj.-Gen. L. R. LaFleche, as Minister of National War Services; Ernest Bertrand (Lib. Montreal Laurier) as Minister of Fisheries succeeding Hon. J. E. Michaud who became Transport Minister; and Alphonse Fournier (Lib. Hull) as Minister of Public Works.

The semi-monthly meeting of St. Paul's Laymen's Association was held in the Parish Hall on Tuesday evening with the president, Rural Dean A. B. Caldwell in the chair. It was decided to hold a euchre party. It was announced that Dr. H. Hammond, white grub expert, would give a talk at a future meeting illustrated with slides and also bring an exhibit of mounted Canadian wild birds. Suggestions for future meeting were submitted after which the meeting adjourned.

Obvious Prime Holding Line Is the "Gap"

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

The pell-mell Japanese retreat in New Guinea has reached a point where events must soon disclose whether the enemy forces are seeking escape by sea or merely falling back to new holding ground in the mountains. In either case the threat to the important Allied base at Port Moresby seems ended.

Even if the retreat proves to be a race to the beach for night embarkation and escape, it seems doubtful that General MacArthur plans following the foe down to the sea. The mountain bulwark for protection of Port Moresby has been fully proved and the route offers Australian or Australian-American forces no advantage for aggressive action. Mopping-up operations by air against an attempted Japanese sea escape rather than hot land pursuit seems indicated.

Holding Position Only.

Prime Minister Curtin of Australia recently designated the Allied land front in the New Guinea mountains as strictly a "holding" position. Transportation difficulties are too great for it to be used effectively to supply air or other bases the Japanese may be abandoning on the northeast coast, much less for troop movements in strength to a new Allied offensive jump-off position.

The obvious prime holding line is the gap. If advancing Australian units press beyond it, it probably will be only to harass and delay the Japanese retreat to the sea if such it is, or to feel out the new line to which the enemy falls back.

The reoccupation of that high gap is therefore apt to signal the end of important land operations in New Guinea. It is concluding under circumstances that mark it as a definite Allied success and a bitter face-losing Japanese reverse; but it has little probable bearing on Allied long-distance offensive preparations. It was strictly a defensive action.

That is not true of the situation in the Solomon Islands, although widened protection of Pacific supply lanes to Australia was a major factor leading to the American expedition. Primarily that success is the beginning of a major offensive to clear the east flank of the Australian front for an ultimate Allied advance to regain the Phillipines, or even to attack Formosa and Japan itself.

Soften Up Ceram.

Expansion of that flanking preparation westward, into the southwestern approaches to the China Sea, is indicated. Heavy bombing of Japanese oil tanks on the Island of Ceram, west of New Guinea, is reported from Australian headquarters. It appears more of an initial step in preparation for offensive action than as a defensive raid.

Growing Allied air power in Australia is reaching out to soften up Japanese positions on the Celebes-China Sea flank of the Southwestern Pacific front as well as those on the Pacific flank in the Solomons and the Bismarck Archipelago. Ultimate establishment of Allied flanking outposts along both sides of whatever route northward a major offensive based on Australia may take must be a part of such a plan.

Progressive step-by-step Allied advance from island to island seems in prospect as the hour for offensive operations in those far seas draws nearer. Japanese realization of that is obvious in the persistent efforts to retake lost ground in the Solomons.

Roofed with Metal

The fact that the Lipson store was roofed with metal and then covered with asphalt compound undoubtedly helped the firemen in their fight in preventing the spread of the flames. A fireproof wall held the fire from the adjoining Herrington store, but the first and second floors of the doomed building crashed into the basement of the store. At one time 11 streams of water were playing into the flames.

Records of two canning factories owned by Mr. Lipson, together with tomato slips recording the season's purchase of farmers' tomatoes, were in the store safe. The safe crashed through to the basement and at mid-morning was still too hot to get near. Anxiety is felt for the safety of the records, even though the safe is claimed fireproof.

One of a Chain of Stores.

The Picton store of the Lipson firm was one of a chain of five in Central Ontario, and was one of the most modern in the Bay of Quinte district. Today just the walls and the steel girders of the structure remain standing. Owing to the shortage of building materials, and the difficulty in the purchase of additional stock, the loss is held to be irreplacable.

The Picton branch of the I.O.D.E. did splendid service during the blaze in serving refreshments and coffee to the members of the various fire-fighting forces. Belleville and Trenton fire departments left the scene of the blaze at dawn, while the Picton R.A.F. stayed until 8.30, when danger of spread of the blaze was past.

SPINNEY BELIEVES

compared with $500,000,000 before the war, and the interest on the public debt is some $175,000,000 and likely will be increased by $25,000,000 because of the Third Victory Loan.

"If we have six or seven, or even eight, more Victory Loans before this awful business is over, our tax bill, assuming other costs on a pre-war basis, will still be substantially short of, let us say, half the present levy, and let us not forget that the money will be owed to our own people and that the strain of meeting the interest in peacetime need not be anticipated with any degree of concern."

The "policy of expenditures" will be needed to re-establish members of the armed forces into civil life and transfer from wartime to peace enterprises, but, Mr. Spinney added, "if we as a nation will exert real self-denial and save like we have never saved before," the transfer will take care of itself through a demand for consumer goods that the people will be able to pay for from their savings.

"I am satisfied that the very logic which calls for high taxes in war years will dictate a reversal in post-war years," he declared.

Asking for the leadership of large corporate investors "to buy bonds to the maximum amount which you can manage," he said "there is no intention to moderate the stress we have in the past laid upon ready marketability of Dominion of Canada bonds" for "it is fully realided that destruction of marketability would kill distribution."

"Some recent confusion of mind on the part of large corporate investors who have supported these Victory Loan campaigns in the past" had been sensed, Mr. Spinney said in asking for their leadership.

He asked purchasers of war savings certificates and bonds to hold on to them at least until the war is over; and said the only justification for withdrawing "the help . . . we gave to our country when we invested" would be if it were found that more bonds had been bought than could be paid for or an unexpected emergency for which money must be had.

He described production, manpower for industrial development and enlistments and unwillingness on the part of the people to put up money as three possible bottlenecks of war effort, with the first overcome, and authorities working to eliminate the second.

Of the third, he said: "I do not believe the people of Canada will let such bottleneck develop. I believe the Canadian people can provide the money and I am confident that they will."

Shared by All Classes.

The financial burden of the war was being felt by all classes, but to back up the opinion of the Government must go all-out in its war effort and the building up of the armed forces, the people must adopt "a type of self-denial the like of which many of us would have felt ourselves incapable of in times less stern."

"The fact is that wars must be paid for by effort and self-denial," Mr. Spinney said. "The people's savings are merely what the people do not spend for their living. War costs must come out of the people's living in one way or another. If they do not come naturally, directly and currently by taxation and borrowing, they will sooner or later come by way of inflation."

All the controls and regulations in force now, together with the appeals of Government borrowing, are a small cost to pay for the defeat of inflation, he said. Sacrifices were being asked of everyone but no one should feel surprised nor aggrieved by their style of living being cramped—"we cannot expect to obtain victory as a by-product of good business and comfortable living."

Mr. Spinney took note of "malicious" rumors which he said increased in intensity whenever a loan was to be floated. In all probability the rumors were of enemy origin, he said, denying emphatically that the Government would freeze bond holdings and prevent their sale or that savings accounts in banks would be frozen or confiscated.

Lord Strabolgi Urges Allied War Council

Glasgow, Oct. 8 — (CP) — Lord Strabolgi, labor peer, called today for a supreme Allied war council and said that if all Allied efforts were directed to building up overwhelming air forces there would be a speedy, and victorious end to the war.

"From recent speeches of Nazi leaders," he said in an address, "it is clear . . . that Hitler and his confederates would like a patched-up peace, leaving them in possession of their ill-gotten gains. They are angling for this before they lose the initiative."

He said the Allies had sufficient weapons "to be able to force the pace . . . but lack supreme Allied direction of the war.

"For victory in a reasonable time, we must harmonize the strategy of the principal Allies — including Russia and China. We cannot afford to wait any longer for a supreme Allied war council.

The only answer to Hitler's boasting or to peace manoeuvres is to attack at the earliest possible moment with all the available strength of the United Nations."

Campaign for Allied Aid to Russia Kept Up by Soviet Press

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Oct. 8 — (AP) — The campaign for increased Allied aid to Russia, started by Stalin's own letter to this correspondent, was kept up today throughout the Soviet press.

Newspapers devoted much of their foreign news pages to dispatches from London, Washington and Chungking reporting foreign reaction to the letter in which the premier exhorted Russia's Allies to "fulfill their obligations fully and on time."

Top play was given to second-front discussion in the House of Commons. (Prime Minister Churchill refused Tuesday to get into a discussion of Stalin's letter, urging the members "not to press these matters unduly at a period which is certainly significant.")

The statement of the United States under-secretary of state, Sumner Welles, confirming American policy to give Russia the utmost aid possible, also was displayed, together with Wendell Willkie's comment in Chungking expressing hope Stalin's letter would attract widespread attention among the peoples of the United Nations.

EARL McCREADY WINS SHOT AT EMPIRE TITLE

Ali Adali Defeated in Two Straight Falls in the Main Bout

RING POST BREAKS

Earl McCready started again on his winning ways in a Belleville ring which he hopes will ultimately lead to a British Empire Wrestling title, when he defeated Ali Adali "The Terrible Turk" in two straight falls, at the Hume Arena on Wednesday night, while one of the best bouts in many a moon was halted, when the ring post broke after an exchange of flying tackles off the ropes between Jake Burns of Nebraska and Pedro Martinez. This bout was declared 'no contest' as Burns was slightly injured on the shoulder, when he fell heavily from the ring after being slammed against the ropes, which snapped the post like matchwood allowing the wrestler to fall to the ground. In the preliminary bout Walter Sirois easily defeated George Burns. At the conclusion of the bouts, it was announced that Jerry "Irish" Monnahan had challenged the winner of the main bout and it appears the former "Masked Wolf" also has aspirations on the British Empire title.

Soon The Aggressor

McCready took more punishment than usual but he soon turned to be the aggressor and held the whip hand over the Turk all through the piece. Ali Adali wrestles in his bare feet and this was just duck soup for the Western boy, who used the tootsies for leverage at every opportunity. The Turk was great at hair pulling and McCreadys' head must be pretty sore. Every hold the Turk applied he aided it with grabbing McCready by the hair but Earl got tired of the procedure and proceeded to knock Ali's little boy around in 17 minutes had won the first fall with a top over body press and Adali was perfectly bewildered by the movement. On resuming the fracas Adali secured two punishing arm holds but McCready saw victory in sight and a couple of step over leg holds was enough for Adali and Lawson performed the needful to save him from more punishment.

A Swell Bout

In the semi-final joust, Jake Burns and Pedro Martinez were in the midst of a rip roaring tussle when the ring post collapsed. Both wrestlers are not exactly babies when it comes to roughening it up and they were going real strong, when Martinez grabbed Burns for a flying tackle. Burns hit the ropes with a resounding crash and down came the ring post and ropes in the centre of the ring with Burns being deposited on the floor close by the apron. He hurt his shoulder and examination proved it would be useless to continue the match and the bout was declared no contest. The fans would enjoy having this pair rematched because both of them are tough and nasty. Burns applied the more punishing holds, getting Marinez in difficulty with a leg hold, that worked both ways. Martinez bit and gouged his way through the bout but Burns was gradually gaining the upper hand, when the bout was halted by the accident.

Walter Sirois had too much ring craft for George Burns in the preliminary canter but the boys displayed the best wrestling of the entire night. The end came in 17.15 when Sirois applied a couple of body slams followed by a full neckhold. Another card of excellent bouts will be held next Wednesday night.

COMBINES TAKE FIRST GAME OF LACROSSE FINALS

Kip Routley of Western Team Sustains Broken Bone in Ankle

SCORE IS 10-7

Toronto Oct. 8. (CP) Jack Woods hasn't given up yet on his dream of a Dominion Lacrosse championship in his freshman coaching year, but a mounting casualty list among his New Westminster Salmonbellies has even Woods convinced today that the dream is in danger of turning into a nightmare..

Woods had three hospital cases on his hands last night when Salmonbellies moved into the first game of the best-of-five Mann Cup Series against Mimico-Brampton Combines and when it was all over Salmonbellies had lost the contest 10-7 and one of their star players to boot.

Actually, it was a slashing penalty to defenceman Ed Downey late in the fourth period that set up the deciding goal for Combines, but Woods and Manager A. G. (Grumpy) Spring were more concerned about the injury suffered by Clifford (Kip) Routley a few minutes later.

Routley, who obtained belated army leave to travel east for the game, suffered a broken bone in his ankle and was taken to the hospital for X-ray examination. He joined Art Mathewson and Doug Ross, who suffered injuries in a semi-final series against Lachine-Ville St. Pierre, and Art Pruden, who became ill with influenza late yesterday.

Combines Always in Front

But the New Westminster casualties failed to taint the Mimico-Brampton victory. Combines always were in front. They swarmed all over Salmonbellies in the opening minutes, running in three goals without a repy, and every time the British Columbia titlists drew level, the Combines pulled away again.

Downeys slashing penalty almost was superfluous. In the closing minutes, Combines looked good enough to win at any time, and after George Masters made it 8-7 on a pass from Bill Isaacs, they simply coasted home.

The gold star for scoring honors belongs on the report card of Kenny Dixon, Ontario Lacrosse Association leader this season. Dixon beat 19-year-old Bill Scuby in the New Westminster net four times, all of them on individual efforts.

The other six counters were split evenly between Onions Smith, Don McPhail, Mickey McDonald, Scoop Hayes, Masters and Whipper Arthurs.

Jim Douglas, who came out of retirement at the end of the regular schedule this season to astound everybody with his stickhandling and scoring ability led the New Westminster attack with three goals. Bill Wilkes scored twice and the other two were divided by John Douglas and Harold (Mouse) Davy.

Toronto, Oct. 8 — (CP) — Helpful hints to young city baseball players who require taxicabs to take them around the corner to the ball park: At Copper Cliff, Ont., the midget baseball team consented willingly to a seven-mile walk and then won the district championship with a no-hit, no-run, no-error performance.

Scheduled to play the final game away at Creighton after winning the first at home, the Copper Cliff youngsters found themselves without transportation. Nothing daunted, they started to walk but fortunately were given a lift after three miles. At Creighton, 14-year-old Gordon Heale pitched a no-hitter and Copper Cliff won 4-0, then the laddies started walking home. This time they were picked up by a truck after two miles. Enthusiasm, what?

It was Heale's second no-hitter of the season. In the seven innings, only one Creighton batter reached first base, on a walk, and he was nipped trying to steal second. Heale struck out 15 and coach Gordon Alcott predicts a bright future for the lad, who has a good curve, a drop and a sizzling fast ball.

The expert says:

Bill (Owen Sound Sun-Times) Dane, commenting on Toronto's sale of the National Hockey League star, Gordon Drillon, to Montreal Canadiens: "The fans in Toronto have long hollered about the lackadaisical type of play of Drillon. Well the Leafs have finally got rid of him. We wonder how long it will be before the Leafian fans are hollering for a right winger who can pop in goals 'like Drillon used to do it.' "

Sports Director Lionel Conacher avers the R. C. A. F. will not pack hockey teams this winter but there's no doubt the winds of chance will bring good icemen together. Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 8—(AP)—Travel troubles: Alabama's footballers who made one trip via "U-Drive" cars, will go to Mobile the same way for this week's game with the Pensacola Fliers. They say it's good training for driving jeeps, which most of them expect to be doing before long. . . . Harry Mendel comes up with a story of a six-day bike ride who solved the transportation problem by pedalling from Buffalo to Montreal for the race. . . . The North Carolina-Rice game next week has been called off because of travel difficulties. . . . So has intercollegiate basketball at Louisiana College. . . . The Eastern United States Amateur Hockey League may go under for the same reason—and the fact that Canada will call up 19-year-olds.

One-minute sport page:

One danger resulting from the recent World Series is that other clubs will try to run like the Cardinals — thereby producing a record number of spavins and shin splints among the old guys who will be playing ball next year. . . Sailor Fred Apostoli, former 160-pound champ, may be the next middleweight opponent for Ray Robinson, if the Navy doesn't have other plans for Freddie. . . . Latest report around town is that Branch Rickey definitely has that Brooklyn job sewed up and the hunt for a manager has narrowed down to Bucky Harris and Chuck Dressen.

War is what?

Navy Lieut. Jack Miley, who, as a sports scribe, tabbed himself "just a mugg from Wisconsin," walked into a local restaurant the other night and encountered Chief Boatswain's Mate Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. Alf, according to regulations gave Jack his smartest salute. . . . "This is a helluva war," commented Miley. "Who ever thought a Vanderbilt was going to salute a Miley?"

Buffalo, N.Y., Oct. 8—(AP)—Art Chapman, coach of Brooklyn Americans, National Hockey League team the last two seasons, has been signed as playing coach of Buffalo Bisons in the American League, General Manager Eddie Shore announced last night.

Chapman was left free when the Americans withdrew from the National League. He formerly played with the Americans and Boston Bruins

AMERICAN LOOP PRESIDENT PLANS FULL '43 SEASON

Directors Plan to Make Only Three Road Trips During Year

SIXTY IN FORCES

CHICAGO, Oct. 8 — (AP) — Will Harridge, President of the American League, said today prospects for a full 1943 baseball season still looked "good" despite transportation handicaps and the call to military service of many players.

However, he indicated several changes were in order. These included a contemplated switch from four road trips a season for each club to three, and the possibility of a shorter season. Harridge said eliminating a fourth road trip would save the clubs 20,000 miles and would ease transportation difficulties which caught up with baseball clubs near the season's end.

"But all these things will have to wait until the December meetings," he declared. "In the meantime, discussions between the individual clubs and the two major leagues as a whole will be carried on by mail."

Other than to say "There is always the possibility," Harridge would not comment on reports the baseball meetings, scheduled for New York, would be held in more centrally located Chicago.

Calling 1942's war time summer a season "better than we expected" and one in which "we solved a lot of problems", Harridge had this to say of 1943:

"If conditions are the same next year, we'll be able to have a full 24-Sunday season again. The American League already is represented in the armed forces by more than 60 players and there will be more. But 1943 looks good, too. A lot of youngsters may get a chance."

Many Veterans to Return

Next year also may mark the return of many veterans. Detroit, which lost such stars as Hank Greenberg, Pat Mullin and Birdie Tebbetts, has started marketing for veterans and "family men." Yesterday the Tigers acquired Paul Richards, 32 year old catcher who recently resigned as manager of Atlanta's Southern Association club. Richards, who formerly played with the New York Giants and Philadelphia A's, has a wife and two children.

Regarding 1942 attendance, Harridge said it was about 8 per cent off, but was not a general decrease. A recent survey disclosed Washington, St. Louis and New York all had boosted their attendance. The rest lost, Cleveland being the heaviest loser, possibly because of the lack of a pennant contender and the absence of pitcher Bob Feller, who joined the navy.

There will be many more absences of players next year. Here are just a few of the other leading American League players who have joined the armed forces or are about too:

Tom Henrich, Phil Rizzuto, Ken Silvestri and Johnny Sturm of New York; Johnny Rigney, Taft Wright, Ted Lyons and Bob Kennedy of Chicago; Cecil Travis and Buddy Lewis of Washington; Frank Pytlak, Ted Williams, and Johnny Pesky of Boston; Sam Charman, Joe Gantenbein, Benny McCoy and Al Brancato of Philadelphia; and Joe Grace, George Archie and John Lucadello, of St. Louis.

RAY VINCENT is a 220-pound giant doing tackle duty at Northwestern University. But he also is an artist and a good one. He's a clever cartoonist—about the best the student body ever has boasted.

NEW MATHEWS, a halfback in football, but just a sub in the with the Detroit Lions, is a regular movies. But even a sub keeps busy if he can do a good job of doubling for a star. Mathews was in twenty pictures between football seasons.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

FO. RAY BARRETT, President of the Bay of Quinte Service League, announced today that all district Air Force bases will confine their future sports activities to service competiton. Already the Quinte district airmen have organized their service teams for the winter months. In badminton, which opens at No. 6 A.R.D., on the 21st of the month, Picton R.A.F., Mountain View, No. 5 I.T.S., Trenton Central Flying School and No. 6 A.R.D., will all compete. However, in hockey and basketball the Picton R.A.F. base will not be included FO. Barrett announced. FO. Alex Munro, chief sports director at No. 5 I.T.S., has been named convener of the district Air Force basketball program, which may not function until after Christmas. At No. 5 I.T.S. they also are sponsoring a rugby football squad and open activities with an exhibition game at Port Hope on Saturday versus the Trinity College gridders.

IN THE MATTER OF HOCKEY Prexy Barrett intimates all games will likely be played at the Hume Arena. "We propose playing a doubleheader one night each week throughout the season, but according to information from the No. 1 R.C.A.F. Command, we cannot compete against civilian teams in the future," explained FO. Barrett. However, efforts to have this ruling modified were announced in Toronto recently. The Mountain View Bombers' hockey team will be coached by none other than FO. Stan Jackson, former N.H.L. and International Hockey League defenceman, who is stationed at the district Bombing School. Coach Jackson announced today that pre-season' training for his hockey team will commence next week. "We have PO. Al Campbell, who played with the Ottawa Flyers, Allan Cup champions last season, stationed at Mountain View, as well as several other named pucksters," revealed PO. Jackson. Rumors have some good hockey players stationed at Trenton also, so it looks as though Quinte district hockey lovers will be in for some thrilling hockey games after all.

INTERSCHOLASTIC SPORTS in this district got the green light and go sign when the Bay of Quinte C.O.S.S.A. group heads met and re-elected President Les Shiels and Secretary T. E. Moffat, the latter being the association's efficient secretary and treasurer for these many years back. Actually two separate groups will function, Tweed, Madoc and Stirling at 12-man football and hockey in the northern group and Albert College, Belleville Collegiate and St. Mikes at six-man senior and junior football and subsequently school hockey in the winter. The basketball groups may see only the local "Collegians" and Albert College in competition, as both of these schools intend to adhere strictly to the Department of Education's ruling pertaining to travel for school sports for the duration owing to gasoline and tire restrictions. Absent for the first time in years were delegates from Napanee, Picton and Trenton, but otherwise the student bodies can rest assured they'll be called upon to cheer for their school teams once again.

WHEN IT COMES TO surprises Jake Burns, of Nebraska wrestling Burns clan, got surprise of his life last night when the Hume Arena ring collapsed almost on his floggin. Burns was battling Pedro Martinez, a mere 234-pound ruffian from Mexico, when the fun opened. Of course Burns only tips the beam at 232 himself, so the smaller of the Burns boys and Senor Martinez tried some flying mares in our Hume Arena squared circle with the result that Senor Pedro hurled Jake into a neutral corner and the resounding percussion could have been heard a city block. The force of the impact snapped a six-by-six pine ring post as though it was matchwood and now Manager Walt Gerow has to purchase a new ring post. That play gave the fans something to appreciate, but insofar as the McCready-Turk bout was concerned, Earl had a good workout and accepted a challenge from "Irish Jerry" Monnahan for next week. "I'll take 'em all on from now in; all I want is a shot at Katan's Empire title," assured McCready.

REMEMBER WHEN Charlie Conacher, then a young right winger with the Toronto Marlboro juniors, signed with the Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League 15 years ago today and quickly proved himself one of hockey's best all-time right wingers? "Big Chuck" retired after the 1939-40 season with the New York Americans.

THIS AND THAT—Already the major ball loops are preparing to curtail travelling next season. . . Instead of the customary four swings around each circuit, the clubs will visit each other city three times. . . . During each road trip, however, the clubs will remain in a city for five days, instead of the customary three. . . Already sixty-one players who held American League contracts in 1942 are in Uncle Sam's armed services and more are to follow. . . However, like the National Hockey League, the major ball loops are already looking to the teen-aged crop for future big league talent. . . .The absence of lefthand pitching and Terry Moore's seemingly supernatural fielding are attributed to the downfall of the Yankees. . . . Maybe, but Billy Southworth had those youthful St. Louis Cardinal kids really on the baseball beam. . . . Last year Flash Gordon beat the Dodgers almost singlehanded, this year he struck out seven times and was actually waving at 'em. . . . Five of the six wrestlers to appear at the Hume Arena last night are included in Skipper big show at the Maple Leaf Gardens tonight when Nanjo Singh meets Longson for the title. (Did you say "What title?")

Willard Crocker Keeps Airmen Fit

Halifax, Oct. 8—(CP) — Newest weapon to be used against the Axis is Willard Crocker's tennis racquet.

The big, slow-talking athlete from Sutton, Que., who for nearly a decade carried Canada's hopes in Davis Cup competition, is now stationed at the R.C.A.F. "Y" Depot here as an aircraftman. He's assistant to Sports Officer FO. William Such.

His job is to help keep the airmen fit. And, naturally, his pet way of doing this is to get them playing tennis.

They are doing just that, on tournament-like proportions. During the past summer dozens of eager racquet-wielders were bounding over the asphalt courts of the depot and Crocker says these enthusiasts will be playing all winter. Indoor courts will be laid out in the gymnasium and play will go on.

ROY CULLENBINE of the Yanks doesn't subscribe to a somewhat popular belief among baseball men that too many movies hurt the batting eye. Roy's 1942 movie-going record is seventeen full-length shows in one week. He then was with Washington, and five games of that particular week were stopped by rain.

AT THE McCARTHY

"The First Commando"

To everyone desiring to see a truly great motion picture, "The First Commando" now at the McCarthy Theatre is highly recommended.

From the opening scene until the final fadeout it is a film that holds one's interest, unfolding a story of a true adventure of an English factory foreman who goes to France to bring back vital war machines. His experiences before getting back to England and also the workings of French fifth columnists to prevent his return are breath-taking.

Heading the cast of this picture which received a five star rating by Roly Young, of the Toronto Globe and Mail, are Clifford Evans (the foreman), Constance Cummings, Tommy Trinder, Robert Morley and Francis Sullivan.

"Dudes are Pretty People," a laugh packed comedy featuring Jimmy Rogers, (son of Will Rogers), Noah Berry, Jr., and Marjorie Woodworth, the second feature on the program, makes the show one of the most enjoyable offerings to be desired.

This is also Foto-Nite at the McCarthy Theatre with two offers, first for $175 and second $30. This may be the evening that your name will be selected, come.

AT THE BELLE

"A-Haunting We Will Go"

Howls, long, loud and frequent will be heard at the Belle Theatre where Laurel and Hardy find themselves innocently involved in magic, mirth and murder in "A-Haunting We Will Go", the latest and best episode in their merry screen careers.

Even Dante, the great magician, is unable to help them. However, he does succeed in projecting thrills of the necromancers art never before seen in a motion picture —disappearing dames, floating funsters, gagging ghosts, scintillating spirits and other stunts that tantalize the eye.

But the entire proceedings are on an antic level and most of the sequences are plain side-splitters. Stan and Ollie are at their hilarious best and are appropriate buggs for that sauve magician, Dante. The situations they find themselves in are ludicrous— and the spectator will be convulsed when a pair of 'con men' take them over the bumps. They peddle Stan and Ollie a money-manufacturing device and their pantomimed preoccupation with it is a comedy highlight.

Stan and Ollie meet a lot of interesting people; beauteous Sheila Ryan, for one, and John Shelton, Don Costello and Elisha Cook, Jr., among other—and all contribute to the hilarity of the proceedings.

"The Man Who Wouldn't Die"

Mike Shayne scores again! 20th Century-Fox has produced a lightning-action film designed for thrills and chills for the fast talking detective, entitled "The Man Who Wouldn't Die" the thrilling co-hit.

Lloyd Nolan, as the carefree unpredictable Mike Shayne, comes through with another of the sparkling performances he is famous for. His characterization of the dubious detective, Shayne, is well-nigh perfect. The versatile actor carries his audience with him throughout-changing his pace neatly to the entertainment of all.

The story concerns Mike's efforts to trap a "killing corpse". After a few suspenseful meetings with this "dead man who walks and talks", Mike gets some startling information about him. Namely, that he was reported dead at least three times before. Mike lays his trap —carefully— and the results are unusual, to say the least.

Marjorie Weaver, Shayne's main diversion from his detective work, is both charming and capable in her role, and expert supporting bits are contributed to Helene Reynolds, Henry Wilcoxon, and Richard Derr.

"The Man Who Wouldn't Die" is a real screen thrill well worth your money at the Belle Theatre.

"When Air Raids Strike"

The March of Time issue "When Air Raids Strike!" to be presented on the same program dramatically shows Canadians what to do and what not to do in case of an air raid. It compares actual facts with rumors. The issue grapically shows how Canadians can protect their lies and property for utilizing the methods employed by forty million men and women of England who gallantly fought the Nazi bombing attacks upon their homes.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Riot Squad"

(First Belleville Showing)

An exceptional cast appears in "Riot Squad," Monogram's thrilling melodrama of gangsterism which comes to the Capitol Theatre next.

Important supporting roles are played by John Miljan, Mary Ruth, Herbert Rawlinson, Mary Gordon, Donald Kerr and many other well-known Hollywood screen players. The picture was produced and directed by Edward Finney, with Al Herman as associate producer, and the original screenplay was written by C. C. Coons.

"Arizona"

Galloping out of the heart of the west, into the hearts of a nation, a magnificent and mightily moving drama of love and adventure, told against the sun-splashed splendor of cactus, adobe, desert and sky, the most memorable and breath-takingly thrilling frontier drama of them all, recapturing as never before the tumultuous color, romance, glamor and excitement of America's early pioneer days, Wesley Ruggles' "Arizona," the added great attraction now playing at the Capitol starring Jean Arthur, William Holden, Warren William and Porter Hall with cast of thousands.

A colored cartoon and the ninth chapter of the thrilling serial, "Spy Smasher" complete a grand weekend bill for the entire family.

John Lewis Quells C.I.O. Unity Plea At Convention

By GORDON C. NIXON
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Cincinnati, Oct. 8—(AP) — The United Mine Workers of America marched away from the congress of industrial organizations today, still obeying the wishes of their leader for 22 years, John L. Lewis.

Delegates to the U.M.W.'s 37th constitutional convention voted almost unanimously yesterday to withdraw from the C.I.O. The vote came after Lewis answered opponents to the split with the challenge to choose between him and the congress.

In a 56-minute speech climaxing debate on the C.I.O. issue, Lewis turned opponents into supporters and at the same time squelched reports he might step down from the U.M.W. presidency.

He didn't say he might quit. He declared: "If you do not adopt this report (recommending withdrawal) then you do not want a man like me as your president. You want a man with more rabbit in him than I've got."

No Use to Talk Unity

He said there is no use to talk of unity between the U.M.W. and the C.I.O. because "there can be no unity unless your adversary wants it" He added the C.I.O. rejected peace talk offers last winter. Phillip Murray, now C.I.O. President, who was ousted last May as U.M.W. Vice-President, declined comment in Pittsburgh last night.

(At the American Federation of Labor convention in Toronto, President William Green said he did not regard the U.M.W. action as having "any effect on the peace negotiations of the A.F.L. and the C.I.O." scheduled for next month.

(He expressed surprise that both Murray and emissaries of Lewis had been reported in Toronto and denied that A.F.L. leaders planned to meet with either. Delegates speculated the U.M.W. might be planning to return to the A.F.L.)

Declaring he had no "personal axe to grind" and no wish for public office, Lewis said the way was left open for peace between the U.M.W., the C.I.O. and the American Federation of Labor if the latter two wanted it.

HEALTH CHATS

Post-Operative. Gallbladder Distress Requires Patient-Doctor Cooperation

When the gallbladder is removed, the pain usually disappears almost at once. Occasionally, however, the removal of an infected gallbladder does not completely rid the patient of pain. Such a person should cooperate very closely with the doctor and follow his instructions exactly, to avoid needless pain and distress.

It is encouraging to note that much can be done to relieve these patients of their pain and discomfort. It is advisable, says Dr. William Senger, of Pueblo, Colorado, to avoid all foods which are found to disagree with them. It would appear that some of these patients are over-sensitive to certain foods and, following indigestion, they have pain in the abdomen and, perhaps, sickness to the stomach and vomiting. When this occurs, these foods should no longer be eaten.

Overeating and eating too fast are other things which may cause distress. Taking too much fluid with meals, mental strain and physical fatigue all contribute to the distress of these patients. Besides avoiding these things, there are certain positive ways in which the patients can aid themselves. One suggestion is that they take two glassfuls of hot water on arising in the morning. Another is that they take a half-hour walk before breakfast.

To relieve constipation, if it is present, the doctor may prescribe the proper amount of such medicine as magnesium sulphate in water, taken each morning. After lunch a half-hour rest and a ten-minute sun-bath may be taken everyday possible.

Also important is to keep the weight a little below the average for the age and height. Any fruits, raw or cooked, that agree with the patient, should be taken in abundance. It is necessary, since the diet may be restricted, that attention be given to seeing that enough vitamins are taken. This can be accomplished by the use of vitamin preparations, such as Vitamin B-complex capsules or tablets, and capsules of Vitamins A and D.

To relieve the acute attack of severe pain what may develop in some patients, it is suggested that nitroglycerine or amyl nitrite be used as the phyrician directs. Drugs containing opium or morphine should not be used because they tend to increase the spasm of the bile ducts, which seems to be one of the causes for the pain in these patients. Nausea may be produced by the use of opium-containing preparations.

Before the gallbladder is removed, it is always wise to make sure that the operation has to be performed. Of course, when stones are present and the gallbladder is infected, there is always the danger that the gallbladder may rupture, producing peritonitis, an inflammation of the abdominal cavity.

3 Men Accused Of Smuggling Are Arraigned

New York, Oct. 8 — (AP) — Three men accused of roles in a smuggling ring bringing $2,000,000 in gold annually into the United States were arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner Garrett W. Cotter on a complaint by Assistant United States Attorney Edward Wallace.

The three were Collins Sterling Smith, of Detroit, Mich., and Windsor, Ont., whose bail was fixed at $25,000; Boris Shteinshleifer, a New York gold refiner, whose bail was set at $10,000; and Charles Schwartz of the Bronx whose bail was fixed at $2,000.

Wallace said the three men were "all part of a big racket estimated to result in the smuggling of $2,000,000 in gold into this country annually. One shipment, involving these defendants, was valued by by government authorities at $10,000."

Wallace told the commissioner that Smith was the former president of a Detroit bank and was convicted of embezzling money from the bank. After a three-year sentence, Wallace said, Smith was deported to Canada. When Federal agents arrested Smith they found $2,800 in cash on him, Wallace added.

In Toronto officials of the Foreign Exchange Control Board said that United States Customs officials seized 308 ounces of bullion which the three were accused of having exported into the United States from mines at Timmins, Ont.

They added that the gold seized probably represented only one of a series of similar transactions and that more than $100,000 in bullion was involved. Several people have been "detained" in Ontario in connection with the investigation, they added.

Wallace said here that the activities of the three had been under surveillance by customs and secret service agents for more than nine months.

They said they were forced at bayonet point to work day and night over slippery, precipitous trails.

Many natives died and, survivors said, the Japanese moved forward along the tracks, pushing the bodies aside.

DUCKS GET LONGER LEASE OF LIFE

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 8 (CP)—Mild weather is giving ducks a longer lease on life near here. Game Warden E. T. O'Neil says there are large numbers of ducks but hunters can't get near them because they stay far out in Lake St. Clair when the weather is mild.

TO RUN FOR BOARD

Toronto, Oct. 8 (CP)—Tim Buck, Canadian Communist Party leader, will seek a seat on the 1943 Toronto Civic Board of Control, he announced yesterday, less than 24 hours after his release from Don jail here where he had been held with 16 other Communists.

Release of Buck and his companions came yesterday on orders from Justice Minister St. Laurent.

Fall Silhouette for 1942 Sounds Knell To Glamour Type of Women's Toggery

Restrictions Fail to Suppress Charm And Poise as New Cuts Stress Attractiveness of Tailored Garments

Treading briskly along with a military air, the 1942 fall silhouette marched into the fashion picture earlier this month to sound the death knell for glamor.

While wartime restrictions have failed to suppress charm and poise, the glamor type of toggery is definitely passe and there will be few to mourn its demise.

Casual clothes have taken front place in the style picture. Briefly, the suit's the thing, morning, noon and night.

Instead of possessing one foundation suit which used to be a perfect wardrobe basis, fashion-wise females from their 'teens to their umpteens are even replacing fussy afternoon frocks with dressmaker suits.

Of course, hand-in-hand with suit popularity go the accessories. Suits are playing a dictator role in the choice of shoes and handbags, gloves and even some hats . . . although that's another story.

"Flatties" Figure

When glamor fell from favor this fall it was the signal for the entrance of "flatties," low heeled shoes for round-the-clock wear. Handbags and gloves suddenly emerged streamlined and tailored. The casual beret and beanie slipped in as millinery complements.

Belleville shops offer a fine variety of casual togs. The smart young thing will decide on two or three colors which go well together and then set out to build an interchangeable wardrobe.

Sweaters and blouses can transform the severest tailored suit into a tea-going costume or camouflage a pastel dressmaker into a trim, business-like get-up. . . . and that's the trick of the season. Individuality will be given its chance to run riot.

Those tweed jackets over odd skirts are doing their fall-time duty but with the advent of winter weather they are going to be a little bulky under heavy coats and it's likely that more closely fitted jackets, such as dressmaker suits offer, will take the lead.

High Heels Hiding

With the gals doing more walking, sturdy walking shoes are outselling all other types. High heels are fading rapidly.

Belleville stores offer several variations of "sensible" shoes and they're smart. Square or round-toed is a matter of preference.

While the Wartime Prices and Trade Board has set certain standards in the designing of clothes, the change has been little noted. Women, notoriously, follow the trend of styles, and if the trend is restricted they care not a whit.

With few exceptions, the one-piece frocks of the fall are in suit-style or are out-and-out dressmaker frocks dressed up by skirt fullness.

For the student aged group, beanies get an unanimous vote as headgear for school days, and hair-dos simply fall in line. The long bob is shrinking. Even curls are showing some signs of weakening in popularity. By spring the ideal bob will likely be one of back-of-the-neck length with waves that are easily-managed, but locks will continue to swirl away from the face and upward.

The fall fashion picture isn't complete without the mention of slacks. For wartime warmth and comfort, slacks in all colors will be worn more and more. Although their popularity was beginning to assert itself before September, 1939, the war really put feminine trousers on their feet, so to speak. For a well rounded out wardrobe a cosy pair of flannel slacks is indispensable for leisure hours.

Underthings Modified In Wartime

Time was when we gave never a thought to the problem of underthings—they were allotted so much on our budget of essentials, and we wandered about until we saw just what we wanted—and that was that.

But those halcyon days are gone forever—or until the forever which will come after the war is over, and life is reduced to the old perspective (if ever). And in the meantime we "make do" with utilitarian undies, which in spite of the fact that they are no longer of pure silk, are sometimes most disconcertingly more effeminate than was their wont. Perhaps you are the sort of person who couldn't rise to the luxury height of Alencon lace, and preferred trim tailor-mades to the artificial article. What a shock it must give you to find that you are taking —and taking with only the merest grimace—the slip which ekes out its priority inches of rayon with a frill of simulated lace; And what a shock it would be to your great aunt to know that you have unearthed from one of her battered trunks the cotton petticoats which not so long ago you would have scorned!

Time was, too—remember?—when you would have gazed more than askance at rayon stockings, and sniffed at the bare suggestion of lisle or wool except for golf or country wear. . . .but those dear, dead days are also gone—and you take great satisfaction in the possession of lisle mesh hosiery which do amazingly flattering things for even thickish ankles.

Time was—we could enlarge endlessly on the theme, but time grows short —when the mere thought of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board curtailing your choice of cosmetics, cutting down cosmetic containers from metal to cardboard, would have been greeted with disdain. But it's amazing, as you have no doubt discovered, how you can content yourself with what is a surprisingly wide range of colors and qualities—can keep up the morale which her beauty requisites lend to every fastidious woman, and not miss the unlimited range of yesteryear.

Rayon Stockings Are Leg Flattering

The more Canadian women see of rayon hosiery the more they like and admire it. Rayon stockings are as appropriate for dressy wear as for day after day practical service, in suitable weights. New rayon yarns are constantly being developed by research and these are producing an increasingly satisfactory rayon stocking. What is more, there are different types of finish. These give the hosiery various degrees of lustre and softness, some even increase resistance to abrasion and snags.

How To Get The Most From Your Rayon Stockings

Buy them wisely. Check foot and length measurements in relation to your own individual requirements. Proper size is extremely important in securing satisfactory wear.

Put them on carefully. Like all stockings of this type, they should be handled with care. Avoid runs —do not catch or snag them.

Wash after wearing. Rayon stockings, like all others, will give better service if washed as soon as possible after wearing. Use lukewarm water and mild soapsuds.

Wash carefully. Rayon has less strength when wet or damp. It recovers its strength when dry.

Don't rub them. Squeeze the lukewarm soap suds through the stockings. Rinse well in lukewarm water. Do not twist or wring, but squeeze out water. Hang on smooth rod to dry, away from direct heat and sunlight. Never use clothespins.

Dry thoroughly. Rayon stockings should never be worn until thoroughly dry. After you have washed your stockings we suggest that you do not wear them the following day.

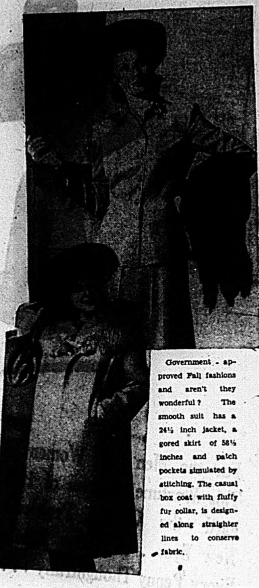
Naturally, it is of prime importance that hosiery be identified as to fibre content, and many manufacturers are seeing that this information reaches the public along with instructions as to proper care. With this identification, you should enjoy the new rayon hosiery for you know that the hose should wear well.

BRIGHT COLORS

A great deal of color, notably fuchsia and purple and green, appears in tweed suits, dinner gowns or afternoon dresses.

SMART NECKLACES

Seed necklaces from the West Indies and the Bahamas are smart and inexpensive. They add novelty and variety to a plain dress and look smart on sweaters or tailored blouses.



Government - approved Fall fashions and aren't they wonderful? The smooth suit has a 24½ inch jacket, a gored skirt of 58½ inches and patch pockets simulated by stitching. The casual box coat with fluffy fur collar, is designed along straighter lines to conserve fabric.

New Fabrics Have Replaced Those Gone to War

Due to American ingenuity and resourcefulness, rayon was perfected during World War No. 1 to replace precious fabrics needed to win the war; so too, out of this war have come (and are still coming) many new and wonderful materials to replace those that have gone to win this war. A great group of new fabrics are the "Victory" rayons, so-called because they are to replace dress-weight wools, all-wool suitings and in some cases, coatings. These "Victory" rayons include blends, mixtures and combinations of spun rayon, rayons, reused and reprocessed wool and cottons. Highlights are dress weight materials that look like ribbed worsted crepes and fleece coatings for sportswear.

Aralac New Wartime Fabric

The newest fabric is Aralac that has been developed as wool substitute and is made of a casein fibre. This new fibre is extracted from skim milk and is woven in the same manner as rayon or nylon. While casein fabrics are the newest on the market, and their potentialities have not been fully developed, it is warm, looks like wool, and is being used in new Fall coats and suits.

Slack Weight Fabrics

Our way of living in this wartime has created a demand for fabrics that are adaptable for suits, slacks, shirts, general sportswear, war work and uniforms for defense activities. These slack weight fabrics are made from a wide variety of spun rayons. These important classic, staple fabrics include gabardines, twills, (particularly cavalry cord and whipcord), spun rayon type flannels and coverts. Men's wear suitings that are adaptable to women's clothes are rising steadily and have a big future ahead because of the popular slim-skirted, man-tailored suit that comes under the new WPB regulations and fits so well in our busy wartime life.

Cold-Weather Cottons

Cottons are no longer just for Summer, they're also designed for cold-weather fashions. Cotton garments can be made to be warm as well as cool, and in the case of Winter sportswear, the water-repellent poplin, cotton gabardine and twill jackets, ski suits and coats have been discovered by explorers and sportsmen to offer the best possible protection from cold and wind. Other cotton fabrics that are appearing in the newest Fall and Winter fashions include velveteen, corduroy, duvetyn and flannelette.

Quilted Linings

Quilted lining are seen in wool coats in which wool interlinings cannot be used by WPB regulation. They're not only more patriotic but they're definitely pretty with their gay colors and contrasting fabrics. Quilted cotton, satin, rayon crepe or rayon taffeta are used in bright greens, reds, or blues.

Wool Blends Used

Wartime needs have heavily drained our available supply of wool, and to overcome this shortage new woollen blends for suits, coats and dresses have appeared. These new blends are composed of virgin wool, reprocessed wool and reused wool, as well as rayon, Aralac, and cotton. Although new wool has a higher percentage of its natural properties than the same wool after it has been reprocessed or reused, a superior quality of reused or reprocessed wool may produce a more beautiful and more durable fabric than new wools of low quality. Other animal fibres are also blended with wool fibres, combined with them in the weaving process. These fibres add softness, lustre and warmth to the fabric. The principal fibres used are Llama, Camel, Vicuna, Alpaca, and sometimes Angora or cashmere. To make sure that these new blends give adequate warmth, the WPB has ruled that no woollen blend may obtain less than 20 per cent wool. Manufacturers who agree to mix new wool with other fibres will receive large allotments from the government.

PUBLIC PROTECTED

The public is better protected now than it has been in the past, because regulations strictly prohibit the misuse of false printing. So if there is a tag marked "all wool" on the purchase, the customer can be satisfied that such is the case. Similarly if the tag reads "Woollen-cotton" he may know that the greater percentage is wool. In other words, those in charge are seeing that Mr. Average Man is through being gyped along this line.

FILLERS FOR WOMENS FASHIO AFTERNOON DRESSES

The return of the afternoon dress is a style which has been widely accepted. Because it is natural that women who wear practical suits or uniforms or overalls by day will want to dress up at night, very formal little dresses have been conceived. These are in stiff fabrics or soft silks or woollens. They are enriched by velvet or sequins and most of their interest is above the table, as a good little restaurant dress should be.

No "Shortage" Of Color For Fall Season

1,500 Dyes Available for Civilian Use

Store windows will be as colorful as ever this Fall. Almost all the shades normally available to American women—reds, greens, blues, and the neutral tones, will appear in next season's fashions. But the American woman will be selecting her colors with greater care.

Nine dyes, the best and fastest browns, have been allocated to the armed forces for their uniforms. The rest—1,500 dyes covering a wide range of colors—are available for civilian use.

The production of good quality, fast dyes is essential to the wartime conservation program, because dyes that run or fade shorten the life of any garment. The shortage of chemicals is a challenge to the dye industry to produce high-grade, color-fast dyes that will make fabrics last longer. The dye industry has the capacity to meet civilian and military demand without any deterioration in its product.

Canadian women can save dyes in several ways: First, by avoiding one-color ensembles and going in for contrasting garments or accessories instead; second, by making sure that the clothes they buy are colorfast to sun and washing; third, by taking care of the colored fabrics they now own.

The color picture is bright this Fall. Gray flannel combines chic wear wearability. Beige will be even more popular than it was last year. Both of these neutral colors make attractive backgrounds for black, brown, and other dark accessories. Red will appear in several smart shades, from tomato red to garnet and fuschia. There will be plenty of browns too, Malaya Brown and Sumatra Brown, for example—to fit in with the wartime scene. And greens will be popular, particularly the new Chinese or jungle green.

NAZI GIBE TURNS

Zurich (CP)—"The Germans will fight to the last loaf of other people's bread" says the Swiss newspaper "Volksrecht" in parody of the famous German gibe against Britain and is being circulated among the Germans themselves.

Rayon Hose Are Test-Tube Miracle

Gone are the days when rayon hose were baggy, shiny, ill-fitting —worn not at all by women of discriminating taste. However, thanks to the miracle of test-tube ingenuity, rayon hose have acquired beauty and wearing qualities to make them take their rightful place among the different types of hosiery!

The new rayon hose are really flattering. They're sheer, dull-textured and with the proper care —will give you highly satisfactory wear.

Rayon hose offer much to the modern women of fastidious taste. It is extremely durable when completely dry. However, since it is weakest when wet—great care must be taken in laundering, preferably as follows: Wash your rayon hose after each wearing, as soon as you take them off. Use only mild soap suds and lukewarm water—cake soap rubbed into your hose will weaken the fibres. Dry over a smooth rod, away from sun or heat, after squeezing gently in a towel and allow from 24 to 48 hours for complete drying.

Another very interesting feature of rayon is that it does not soil readily —due to the smoothness of the fibre from which it is woven. They may be had in a full range of rich colors, which are dyed to retain their permanence.

New Slimmer Silhouette Result Of Wartime Fabric Conservation And Women Welcome It

Gadgetry in fashion is gone—simplicity is here to stay—not only for the duration we hope—but for good. Government ruling for fabric conservation around which the fears of the fashion world centred for so many months, turned out to be a blessing in disguise. Because the new silhouette evolved from this famous government ruling is a simple, slim, figure-flattering silhouette that is wholeheartedly welcomed by women. Never before have clothes been so wearable, so casual, so precisely what every woman likes and looks best in—and for which she formerly had to hunt. Very largely if not completely responsible for this new slim silhouette, the rule was definitely the electric shock fashion needed. Quickly and firmly it stripped fashion of all its frills and furbelows which in reality were in extremely bad taste and not at all flattering, and put the accent on good basic design rather than on "gingerbread". Most important, the ruling will save about 100 million yards of cloth a year for the war program.

Fashion Not Regimented

Very definitely "simplicifation and not regimentation" is the goal of the new government fabric rulings. Instead of stifling fashion, it will stimulate it and act as a strong incentive to our skilled designers who can and will create beautiful new wearable clothes that conform to these rulings. The streamlined slim silhouette is here to stay for the duration. Skirts will be slimmer, there'll be less pleats in them, but what's one pleat more or less when the saving in fabric, multiplied by millions, means thousands of uniforms for our fighting men? Revived is the shorter, more feminine jacket—intensely figure-flattering as it is young and wearable. As for your beloved classic tweed jackets, they're shorter too—and twice as smart because they're ever so much trimmer and emphasize your best figure lines. Shortest of all is the mess jacket, very brief and jaunty. Newest of all is the boxy jacket, just about wrist length or shorter—and simply marvelous over the new slimmer skirts.

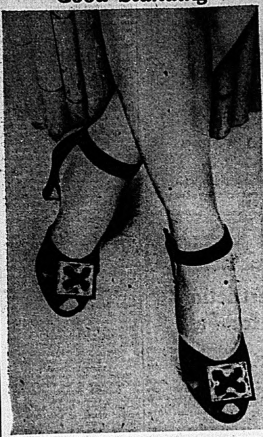
Peg-Top Silhouette Camouflages Hiplines

With a big bow to the War Production Board, dresses have been made beautifully simple—sleek and sophisticated as they are wearable and figure-flattering. A new new silhouette all our own, it features all-important peg-top draped lines or peg pockets, tremendously important because they balance off perfectly the new narrower hemlines—and camouflage hiplines beautifully. Other vital fashions are softly draped skirt fronts, some moderate, some exaggerated. Shirred front peplums and apron affects also are well within the new rulings. Because of its great popularity, the coat dress is noted in many versions, newest of which is the "envelope" coat dress which features soft self sash from either side front waistlines, thus conserving slide fasteners vital to our war effort! Practical as it is figure-flattering too, this 'envelope' sash makes the dress adjustable to any wastline. Drawstring waistlines are also noted in the conservation of slide fasteners. The dirndl that all Canada loves is favored for Fall with wartime fashion news noted in their pert peg-top pockets, new narrower hemlines. Noted in both casual and dressy types, it's the velveteen dirndl that will go dancing with our men in uniform this Fall —and the brighter the dirndl the better!

GET AN UMBRELLA

Add a touch of cheer to the next rainy day by getting yourself a gay and cheerful umbrella, or, better still, start hinting right away that that's what you want for your birthday. They come in pretty flowered designs, bold stripes or plain bright colors, in a wide price range.

Good Standing



This newest evening slipper of a famous American designer is made of black suede and it has a flattering high ankle strap. The big news is, however, its lashed on, square mirrored buckle . . . twinkletoes, but really.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

THE fashion to set off one's ankles in new shoes with a serpentine of ribbon, or a neat, narrow band, carries on into the coming formal season, off from a good start via ballet influence last season.

Many of our formal frocks will be street length for the duration, and while an evening slipper should always be a pretty, even if hidden somewhat by a sweeping long skirt, it just has to be very pretty if it has no skirt draperies to help it look that way.

Delman

Fashion Flashes

IT ISN'T OFTEN these times that we don evening clothes and so a jacket should be of the type that can go beautifully with either day or evening things. A grand fur jacket is of natural coney let out to give the effect of real chinchila. Lined with soft gray wool, it is snug and comfy.

Something new in the way of colors is a soft misty gray with bluish overtones and aptly named "mirage". A smart daytime dress is of mirage gray, collarless with deep surplace closing slim and draped at the waistline, the drapery held at the side of the waist with a big jet ornament.

Ready for town duty this fall is a grand boxy coat cut on square lines fashioned of deep chamios-yellow wool with big collar and cuffs of black Alaska seal. On either side are two flap pockets, one immediately atop the other.

Place a sailor firmly atop your neatly coiffed head, for this shape, but in a neat, small form, is still the favorite hat shape. Black velvet makes a neat little sailor with slightly rolled brim and wide crown trimmed with red cording and tiny red cord bows.

First favorite in the coat world seems to be the cloth coat with impressive fur tuxedo revers. Coats are cut loosely for wear over suits. Bright red woollen with a huge pouch collar and tuxedo fronts of black woollen adds up to a grand idea

A bit of glitter on your after-dark dress is what the service men voted for at a recent service men's club party. The boys admired a frock of black crepe with embroidered bowknots of electric blue sequins on the bodice and bandings of the sequins on the modified peg-top pockets.

SPARKLE HELPS

Sparkle lends gaiety to date dresses, utilizing sequins, beads and jet to create a bright picture at the theatre or wherever semi-formality is the order of the occasion.

Slinky lame or crepe, smartly draped in the new mode offers a smart interpretation of the season's most alluring style.

QUILTED LININGS

Quilted linings are seen in wool coats in which wool interlinings cannot be used by WPB regulations. They're not only more patriotic but they're definitely pretty with their gay colors and contrasting fabrics. Quilted cotton, satin rayon crepe or rayon taffeta are used in bright greens, reds or blues.

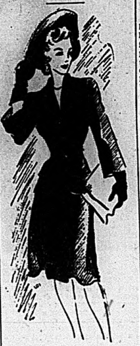
Double Duty Designs



Wool crepe jacket dress.

By VERA WINSTON

THE TWO-piece model that can be worn as a dress or used as a suit is a fashion favorite for the new season and it appears in every fabric and color, as well as in various price brackets. This model is made of dark brown wool crepe with three carved amber buttons down the jacket that has a double peplum. There are a few little tucks at the shoulders and sleeves, and gracefully shaped revers. The skirt is straight in back and fully flared in front.

RAYON HOSE

Rayon hose, like everything else, need a certain amount of care — and respond accordingly. They should, for instance, be washed in water at wrist temperature, with gentle soap flakes or suds. It is well to remove rings when washing stockings of any kind, to avoid snags. Rayon is weakened when wet —so it is only good sense to avoid ringing, stretching or rubbing too strenuously. Also, rayon generally takes longer to dry than silk — and to speed up drying, they can be rolled in a towel to soak up excess moisture; and then be hung over a rod, or laid flat. Rayon requires from 24 to 48 hours to dry.

FILLERS FOR WOMEN'S FASHI ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENTS

Brighten a dull costume with a sudden dash of color in the form of a fantastic bird of paradise in gold and enamel, or a spray of flowers or an amusing little animal or bird. These attractive ornaments come in fascinating variety at any jewellers and can give a wonderful lift to a costume or a morale; wonderful for birthday presents, too.

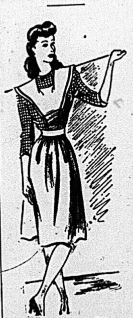
Pinafore Days



A youthful fashion.

By VERA WINSTON

JUMPERS and pinafore frocks appeal to the college girl and the young careerist for they repreant a fashion that is youthful without being fussy, and allow for plenty of change through the medium of different blouses. Upholstery fabric is used for this pinafore frock in light brown with black and brown trimming. With it is worn a black, white and brown checked blouse with a high round neck and slim sleeves.

Genuine Duration Quality Feature Of Wartime Fashion in Furs

Banished for duration is the pre-war extravagance of the here-today-gone-tomorrow fashion in furs. Today your fur coat has a genuine duration quality to it, and the fabulous fantasies of ante-bellum days have no place in the present scheme of things.

Furs have been more fortunate than fabrics in the wartime survival against the struggle of priorities. True, the furs from far countries are no longer obtainable, but since approximately one-half of the marketable furs of the world come from this continent the Canadian woman finds it no hardship to content herself with our native peltries. No rations confine the purchase of furs; rules, yes — as in every other form of commerce — regulations, of course — but these are to do with linings and the like —your furs themselves may be as wide, as long, as fine, as your purse or taste dictate.

Linings — well, after all, that was to be expected — must be lawful; wool linings and interlinings have gone by the boards —but, as Vogue said the other day, "If a mink's skin keeps a mink warm, why shouldn't it keep you warm?"

There is no fur shortage, of course. Canadian furriers as usual looked ahead, and the result is that stocks are plentiful. Canadian mink and Alaska sealskin, silver fox, beaver and muskrat — who on this continent could ask for more luxurious furs? Moreover, this year as never before, these beautiful wear-with-all furs are an investment. Choose the dominating fur coat fashion, loose, full-length, deep-armhole — in mink, if you are so fortunate, in nutria or Persian lamb, and you possess a wear-forever easy to wear over suits by day and elegant when wrapped snugly of an evening.

But there are other popular fur coat fashions this season. Reefers, belted back, single or double-breasted, and sash-belted trench coats strike a note military, but not masculine, in soft nutria or smooth Persian lamb. And for the woman who has a weakness for the dressmaker look, Persian lamb and broadtail do wonders in the just-made-for-you manner of pleats and bloused effects, intricate pockets and fabric inserts.

Your fur may be humble in origin, but this year it will have an expensive look, its cut embodying all the fashion interest of an expensive coat. Roll-back cuffs, tuxedo collars, flared backs — you'll find that it has all the fashion features of an expensive coat. But whether its origin is lowly or exalted, remember always that it needs beauty treatment — cleaning and glazing at least once a year, possibly reblending — but always professional attention.

Time and the natural process of oxidation with its discoloring effect do nothing for the beauty of your furs. They are beautiful only so long as they are useful — so wear them and enjoy them while they are at their best. And remember always that it is better to buy the best quality of an inexpensive fur than an inferior quality of an expensive type. When you buy a fur coat, in these days of added income tax and extra commitments, you are making an investment for duration — and if you are a wise woman you will go to a fur house in which you have complete confidence — and ask advice from a furrier who is only too eager to place his posal.

HERE'S A TIP

Don't wear your suit skirt without the jacket. The skirt always wears out first anyway, and now you've got to make it last as long as possible.

Get an odd skirt to wear with gay sweaters and tailored blouses. All round pleats are smart and are allowed in separate skirts. Some of the pleated skirts come in a soft wool jersey that would be very smart and warm and comfortable.

An Atlanta inventor has designed a rack to hold a bag to be filled with sand or other loose materials that includes a chute into which its contents can be shoveled.

EXTREMES

Most universal of new fashions is the street length dinner dress or suit. In its most extreme interpretation this style is cut with an off-the-shoulder line adorned in sequins or pearl beads at the oval decolletage and ends just below the knee. This kind of a dress invariably is accompanied by a feathered hat. More conservative is the little dinner suit. This can be a discreet black woollen or a more dramatic woollen or ermine collar and cuffs. Or it can be of silk brocade and tailored neatly to the figure.

Slim Fur Suit

FURS THAT are supple and that lend themselves to expert handling are a joy to the fine furrier.

One of our finest craftsmen uses South American lamb to fashion a beautifully and strikingly original fur suit. The color is a rich cocoa brown. The circular skirt is gored with inserts of matching wool and the jacket is piped with a belt of the same wool. Unusual buttons of plastic and wood complete this suit, that is as slim and graceful as though fashioned of fabric.

Smart Blouse

By ALICE ALDEN

ONE GOOD suit and a supply of blouses is a fashion formula that can see a girl through a season, especially if the suit is of the type that lends itself to dressing up or down. For after-dark doings, wear a lace blouse. Julie Bishop wears a charming model that is ultra feminine but not too frilly. It is white lace with a front panel of white net accented by neat little ruffling for the neckline. It would go well with a dinner skirt, too.

Armful of Elegance

A FINE glove, beautifully cut and styled, fashioned of good skins, is not a luxury but an investment in good service and style, the more so if the gloves are washable. Long gloves in pale beige, with ornamental zig-zag stitching, would be a compliment to the most elaborate or the most simple of frocks. Fine pliable doeskin that takes to suds with enthusiasm, makes a glove that is as fine as anything ever imported from abroad.

Conservation is More Than a Catchword

There's a wealth of practical knowledge, hints and helps hidden away in old-time almanacs and scrapbooks, telling how to take care of things, to make them last. Borrow a leaf from the old scrapbooks and almanacs today, and learn how to take care of what we have; to make things last "for the duration'. And here are just a few practical ideas for conserving — patriotically!

Fabric Care

Cottons are sturdy, most of them are washable and all-around satisfactory; but they do appreciate care, and show their appreciation by lasting longer—and looking better in the process. White or fast-dye cottons take to washing machines just naturally; but it is always advisable to use a good soap solution to protect the fibres. Sheer cottons, however, last better if washed by hand; and if ironed before thoroughly dry. Loosely woven cottons, such as homespuns, also respond better to washing by hand, and usually need no ironing, if smoothed out while damp. The crinkle cottons, such as seersucker, are real labor savers—stretch them into shape when damp, and they are actually much better when not ironed at all!

Foundation Facts

Foundation garments and girdles take to nice rich, luke-warm water and mild soap with the same degree of satisfaction as a duck taking to water. Hot water is definitely OUT (in either case!) —when it comes to foundation garments or girdles, it just isn't to be heard of these days. Hot water devitalizes elastic, and the rubber situation allows for none of that! Also, a mild soap is a necessity—to avoid damage to both elastic and fabric. Several rinsings, to remove soap deposits, are important—with handpressing in a towel as the last step. To dry, hang over a line, away from the heat—and if any ironing is necessary, it should be confined to shoulder straps and fabric panels; with a warm iron—not a hot one.

Glove Washing

Both fabric and leather gloves benefit by being washed on the hands; in rich, mild suds. They should be patted between towels, to remove excess moisture, and dried either flat or on forms. When almost dry, they can be coaxed into perfect shape—and dry up "good as new". Wet or dry, never (!) pull gloves on or off by the cuffs.

Rayon Hose

Rayon hose, like everything else, need a certain amount of care—and respond accordingly. They should, for instance, be washed in water at wrist temperature, with gentle soap flakes or suds. It is well to remove rings when washing stockings of any kind, to avoid snags. Rayon is weakened when wet—so it is only good sense to avoid wringing, stretching or rubbing too strenuously. Also, rayon generally takes longer to dry than silk —and to speed up drying, they can be rolled in a towel to soak up excess moisture; and then be hung over a rod, or laid flat. Rayon requires from 24 to 48 hours to dry.

Care of Wool

Woollen garments should be brushed and aired frequently, and keep their shape best if they are always hung on hangers. Before storing a woollen garment it should be dry-cleaned, or brushed and aired. Store it in a sealed package or closet—use a reliable moth preentive Do not unseal the garment bag until you are ready to use the garment again. Very often it is wiser to send woollen garments to the cleaners, than to wash them at home.

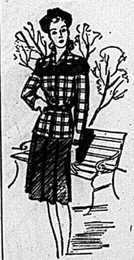
Autumn Suit



A clever combination.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

PLAIN FABRIC combined with patterned sections is a fabric alliance that appears in almost every collection for fall. This nice suit uses dull green woolen combined with beige and green plaid woolen. The plain green is used for yoke top and sleeves also for the skirt, which has two unpressed pleats centre front. The collar, which is really only revers below a shoulder yoke, is of the plaid. Three carved composition buttons close the jacket and the twisted belt is closed with matching buttons.

Wrap-Around Frock

By ALICE ALDEN

IT SEEMS that the new frocks, made with benefit of the WPB rulings but without benefit of slide fasteners or other metal closings, are smarter than ever. A designer who started all the fanfare with his drawstring waist frock comes through with this wonderful dress made with a slim wrap around skirt that entirely eliminates the use of zippers. This elegantly simple dress comes in pure black silk. The waistline is held firm with a narrow tie belt with a bow in back. The only trimming is a large patch pocket in jet set diamond-wise at one side.

Government Restrictions Tighten Skirts for Fall

Beautifully appropriate and simple are the clothes we'll all be wearing this Fall — for Government restrictions, in addition to restricting the length of jackets and the width of skirts, seem to have inspired designers with a new restraint which has resulted in fashions of superb good taste and notable feminine charm.

From the New York openings come ecstatic paeans over some of the outstanding triumphs of the opening season — each and all of them of interest to Canadians since our own smart clothes are to such an extent inspired by these same designers. Here are just a few that have been underlined by the American fashion writers, with prophecy of first-rank success:

Charles Armour: An absolutely new suit dress, which looks like a suit at front and dress at back. Alsa separate gilets made to match suits, and necklace and fruit embroidery dinner dresses—subtly chic.

Rose Barrack: Wonderful short dinner suits, notably the black wool with the little high ermine collar, which is everywhere — and short dinner suits with beaded satin gilets to match small, rounded collars.

Clarepotter: Typical sports dresses, pretty and casual little black dresses, and sports coats with a dashing swing all their own.

Louise Barnes Gallagher: Trim little suits, notably a black with pale green velvet strips outlining the jacket — romantic grey velveteens and wearable ensembles.

Kiviette: The use of beautiful and vibrant colors in town suits and dinner dresses, and the feeling for drama, this season interpreted in shirtwaist dinner dresses.

Norman Norell: Soft shirtwaist dresses in unusual fabrics — and this season's sensation, fur pants with matching slippers.

Suzanne: Some of the loveliest and most subtly draped crepes and woollens to be found anywhere—dinner dresses, in particular, done with originality and true French sophistication.

Mark them all — and mark our words, you'll discover them among the clever clothes Canadian women will be wearing this Autumn and Winter.

Victory Varieties

You'll fall for the Fall accessories, they're so distinctive and vital to a well-rounded wardrobe. With simpler dress silhouettes, slim lines and "transition" paramount in busy lives, accessories assume new and first-place importance. A backlog of a few good "transition" dresses, aided and abetted by a battery of smart accessories to build personality; and even the busiest woman can look "right" for work, play and war activities.

Beautiful Bags

Handbags reflect the accelerated tempo of life and living, for Fall 1942. There are tailored glossy leather knapsacks for the woman in uniform — with detachable shoulder straps for quick-changes. Then there are big, squashy pouch bags that have a place-for-everything, including knitting! For formal afternoons and dinner-in-town evenings, nothing could be sleeker than velvet-smooth black broadcloth, dressed up with prystal, and draped with dressmaker finesse. Formal evenings are "in the bag" with a wealth of beaded pouches, quilted satins — and slim little envelopes piped with metallic kid, trimly tailored for wear with evening dinner suits.

Black is still the same old smoothie for formal afternoons, for suedes and for broadcloths—but color goes in for considerable self-expression! So add color to your handbag wardrobe, and punctuate your dark costumes with exclamation points of color!

Georgeons Gloves

The glove is the thing! Classic slip-ons will continue to fill the bill for many costumes, and on many occasions; but the new streamlined silhouette very often demands excitement — and amaginative gloves provide just the right degree of simulation!

Take, for instance, the longer length gloves with vertical V slashes underslung with color, or bridged with cluster strands of brilliant beading. This sort of treatment is particularly spirit-lifting for black suedes, or dark costume-color doeskins.

The sleeve glove will not hibernate this Fall and Winter! Instead it will go to new lengths for applause, in plaid taffeta, jewel-tone suede rayon and brushed-surface fabrics — long and langorous, to pull over dress sleeves to well up over the elbow, with shirrings and bandings in between.

Give the new-season gloves a hand! They deserve it — they're original, colorful — and full of personality.

FRINGED HEMS

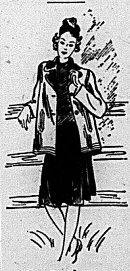
Those draped dresses with fringed hems, designed for pretty legs? Well, if you have them—the legs—then consider this way of calling attention to them.

TALL TALE

One —of the tallest stories of the year—and one you can believe in... six inches of hat, black silk grosgrain faced with velvet, an ostrich plume nodding above.... it's the charmer meant to wear with your new short dinner-dress.

Six new railways will be built in the southern part of Chile, the government bearing half of the cost and taxing adjacent property for part of the remainder.

Fur-Lined Box Coat



Smart and warm.

By VERA WINSTON

A NEW and useful addition to the wardrobe of the busy woman is a short boxy, fur-lined coat. A mixture of wool and camel's hair is used for the model shown which is lined with baby lamb, with collar and revers of the same. Stitching at hem, slit pockets two-button closing. Shown with honey-colored corduroy skirt and beige slip-over jersey blouse.

Canadian Women Approve Wartime Work Clothes

Simplified to save fabric—this slacks outfit is tremendously smart. The blouse has a modified cuff band—the slacks are cuffless and tapered. Material used 4⅜ yards.

It's the girl of today who stands squarely behind the man behind the gun. In thousands of factories all over the nation, she is helping to turn out the munitions and equipment so desperately needed by fighting men the world over. Like the sensible Canadian girl she is, she dresses for the task . . . simply, neatly and smartly.

Utility is the watchword in her work clothes. No extra frills here, the clothes are designed for work, yet with that trim smartness for which Miss Canada is noted. Slacks or overalls are requested by most of the factories. No unnecessary fullness, or cuffs on the slacks . . . but their clever cut gives ample room for the active working girl. In many cases the trouser legs snap or button tight on the ankle, so that there will be no loose edges to catch in the machinery. Flat pockets are the rule, in special cases pockets are designed specially to carry certain needed tools, such as micrometers or screw drivers. In cases where there are buttons, they fit snugly and button firmly. Many coveralls are designed without buttons or buckles, and are held closed by a belt which passes through slots at the waistline.

Short sleeves are preferred in most cases, especially in work around moving machinery. Arm holes are deeply cut for action-freedom. Blouses are cut with a back yoke, or an inverted pleat. For essembly shop work long sleeves are preferred. Here the sleeves button snugly around wrist, and are slim and practical. Where our worker might be required to immerse her arms in an irritating solution, water-proofed sleeves are provided. Many blouses are designed to tuck in or out, for wherever it is possible, it has been found that it is cooler and more comfortable to have the shirt-tails hanging out.

Coveralls Popular

Slacks are not the only type of uniform worn by the woman worker. Coveralls, jumper, slack suits, mechanic suits and utility dresses are also worn. Trim and simple jumper dresses, or sometimes culottes are worn by women in less strenuous jobs. The jumper dresses are cut so that they may be worn without a blouse, if necessary. This is a simple and utilitarian style preferred by many women, because they can add a dash of color to their working clothes by wearing bright, washable blouses.

Mechanic suits are of the one-piece coverall type. Some are designed without hooks, snaps or zips. The smart surplice side closing holds it firmly closed. Big patch pockets are designed to hold all her odds and ends. Others have fly-front closings, with a neat set-in waist band. Very often the one-piece coveralls are designed to look like slack suits . . . collars as well as cuffs are often eliminated. These garments are easy to get in and out of . . . and save minutes dressing of times. Factories re- in dressing. Factories requiring this type of coverall have emphasized the desirability of the drop seat feature. Snugly buttoned coveralls are preferred in munitions plants handling gun powder and other inflammables, because there are no metal buttons, pockets or open seams.

Washables Long Wear

No matter what type of garment selected, they all must meet certain basic requirements. They are sturdy, but not too heavy, wash easily, designed with necessary fullness, and as a very important factor. . .they have enough style features to build up the morale of both the men and women workers.

Every woman wants to look attractive whether she is at home, in the office ,or in the factory. Keep th woman worker's moral high. . . and you also keep her efficiency at the top peak. Yes, the working clothes are utilitarian, practical and functional but they are also attractive. Chambray, denim or cotton covert are the most popular fabrics. The clothes are so smartly designed that they often do double duty for work or play, and the busy housewife chooses them for her work in her Victory garden.

GLOVE ADVICE

Never buy a glove that is too small. On a properly fitting glove the thumb hole is large enough to contain most of the ball of the thumb. The first clasp or button should come at the wrist joint to hold the glove firmly on the hand. The right hand is usually one-quarter size larger than the left, except for a left-handed person. Always use the larger measurement. Exact glove sizes may vary with the nature of the leather and with different manufacturers, so it is unwise to rely upon being fitted to a former glove size.

Way to Help Shirt Wear Longer Given

For the woman of the house who buys and takes care of men's shirts, it might be well to drop a few hints on their laundering and other care at this time.

1. Turn up the collars on collar attached shirts before they are sent to the laundry. If the collar rim is badly soiled, wash it out prior to the laundering of the whole shirt with some mild soap.

2. Use only a minimum amount of starch, because fabrics have a tendency to break down quicker than unstarched fabrics.

3. Institute a plan to buy a shirt a month instead of a dozen shirts at a time. Thus shirt stocks will be replenished each month and shirts will ultimately wear out on this basis instead of all wearing out at the same time. Furthermore, a tremendous stock of shirts not constantly used and laundered only one or twice, is liable to become mildewed in certain climates.

Conservation

Conservation and care of all wearing materials should be uppermost in consumers minds during these days, because shortages will most certainly touch everyone. A good plan of conservation and care is far more to be desired than a great horde of wearing apparel stocks which may become outmoded and deteriorate before the wearer even gets a chance to wear them.

No manufacturer today is in a position to forecast what the future style will be. Already plastic buttons are making their appearance because ocean pearl buttons, formerly shipped from the Dutch East Indies, are not obtainable. Consumers are readily accepting this plastic button because it wears just as well and looks just as dressy as the ocean pearl button. Although it lacks the iridescence of ocean pearl, it is undoubtedly more masculine looking.

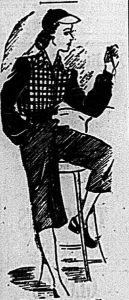
Jumper First On School Girls' Clothes List

Probably first on the wanted list for every 1942 school girl is the jumper —not a newcomer to the school picture, but now with variations that make it news. The California type jumper with the surplice neck closing is first in popularity, rivalled only by the Jeep style; a lean looking, tailored, button-down jumper. Still in the fashion picture is the pinafore, while a new, square neck, midriff-hugging jumper also puts in its bid for school girl favor.

Culottes also show fabric-color interest in our country's conservation effort. Newest and most attention compelling is the culotte of solid colored flannel with a set-in cotton trouser pleat to match its own separate cotton blouse.

For active sports, the 'teen age crowd favors the tapered kneecap length shorts that are a longer version of any shorts worn before. In line with the long-shorts theme, knickers have something new to say about themselves. They come in streamlined gay 90's form, appropriately done up in checks, plaids and plain colors.

Campus Specialists



New slacks outfit.

By VERA WINSTON

CLOTHES FOR action, styled for comfort, is what the campus demands this year. The outfit sketched is typical of a smart college shop offering. The dark brown blouse has a checked green and brown woolen front. It is a single breasted model with classic revers and one slit pocket. Dark brown leather belt on the light tan slacks with one large curved pocket. The short slacks, so popular this year, can be worn with other accessories and are ideal for the cyclist.

Work Clothes for Women Combine Style, Utility

The lady behind the lathe may have to wear overalls, but that doesn't means she forgets all about line, fit and femininity in the process.

Work clothes for women have developed rapidly into first-line fashions, with a war to win. The vast numbers of women who have entered our war industries have demanded work cloths that will boost their morale—and more power to them!

Slacks—or rather "pants", are practically the unanimous choice, whether in separates, suit sets, or overall adaptations. Above ankle length has won favor with many workers, as a safety measure in plants where there is moving machinery close to the floor. These short slacks are also cooler in plants of this type, where the floor is always bathed in heat from dynamos and motors.

Two piece denim overalls, with taper pants having ankle button-straps are also a popular type. Concealed drop seats, and fly bodice closings to prevent buttons from catching in machinery, are practical features—and they also add to the trim finish for a tailored-look.

Slacks sets with in-or-out shirts are cool but sturdy, developed in navy or tan poplin. Bodice patch pockets with cuff tops having embroidered twin eyelets are an innovation worth considerang. A badge or passport pin can be attached or removed quickly and easily—without damage to the fabric, or wear and tear on the nerves.

For bench workers, the jumper dress is just about right—because it is cool, allows the arms plenty of freedom, and can be worn with a change of blouse for freshening up. In fact, there are jumper dresses cut high enough under the arms to be wearable without a blouse on very warm days, or for work in hot places. And then there is the culotte dress, for workers who require freedom but do not necessarily have to wear slacks. The culotte has the advantage of looking like a dress, and being wearable to and from work quite inconspicuously.

Overalls are the answer, when the work is of a type that is likely to soil clothing. Overalls, like jumper dresses, have the advantage of being wearable with a blouse—and a blouse with button-tab epaulettes just about perfect. The overall straps can be buttoned under the blouse tabs, and will stay-put through thick and thin. And that is a nice little feature any active worker should appreciate!

Work dresses, simple styled, and made of sturdy fabrics are preferred by many women who wear large sizes— and they're usually suitable for these "large women" since their work is seldom of the very active type that would demand slacks. Also, many older women prefer the work dress to slacks—and here again it is usually a logical choice, since these women are also usually employed in less strenuously active jobs.

Whatever the occupation, the figure, the age or the problem, there are work clothes to be found that will stand up to the job at hand, while keeping an eye on good lines and becomingness. Women at work, and women at war are synonomous—and when Canadian women go to war and to work, they insist upon doing it efficiently and with the assurance of feeling "properly dressed for the occasion"—as always!

OPTIMISTS' CHOCOLATE

Laundering With Care Is Important

Increasing the serviceable life of textiles is all important these days to cut down consumption of raw materials, and decrease the man-hours of labor, and machine-hours used in manufacturing them. Here are two precautions in laundering. First, don't hang laundered clothes out all day in the sunshine. Bring them in soon after they're dry. It has recently been shown that sunlight damage to fabrics is quite appreciable. Secondly, don't hang wet clothes out of doors in winter in smoky manufacturing cities. In such cities the sulphur dioxide and trioxide in the cold air reaches relatively high concentrations. This is absorbed by the wet fabric, and becomes oxidized to sulphuric acid, which, when subjected to the heat of ironing, is very destructive to the fabric.

DICKIES DO THINGS

No longer do dickies mean just a plain, white "school-girl" collar. This Fall they're striped or plain, with bows, lace edging, gleaming satin or "glitter" trims. Wear a dicky to adorn your new Fall suits and dresses. Be a quick-change artist and make your clothes do double duty with dickies!

Feather Flattery

By ALICE ALDEN

NO MATTER what particular style is the fad of the moment in the millinery scheme of things, it's the beautifully handled feather-trimmed hat that always draws admiring glances. A favorite milliner of the movie stars displayed this most attractive hat at a recent showings. It is made of delicate mustard-gold yellow velour and its conservative lines are offset by a magnificent turquoise blue ostrich plume.

Clothes for Fall Planned to Fit Women's New Double-Duty Life

Without a doubt, the government rulings on fabric conservation was one of the best things that has happened to fashion. Because by simplifying fashion, these regulations have glamorised it by putting the accent on basically sound, flattering design and eliminating the frills and furbelows which are really unnecessary to good taste. As a result, the clothes you'll wear this Fall and Winter are the simple casual, beautifully easy-to-wear clothes you love. Clothes that will serve you smartly, endlessly, clothes that fit in perfectly with your doubly-busy life. Frankly the modified slim silhouette was really casting its shadow on the fashion scene, and thanks to these government ruligs its arriva lhas been speeded up—for which we say bravo! Because it's a new, exciting silhouette. Utterly feminine and flattering. It features sleekly moulded body lines, suavely draped, shorter skirts, slimmer hemlines — all in all—a silhouette that underscores your best figure points. Best of all there are many variations of this slim silhouette, each as wearable and flattering as the next. The draped silhouette is most important and is interpreted in various ways. Suavely draped bodices, intricately draped waistlines and draped hiplines are noted everywhere and side draped skirts are exciting to see as they are to wear. A very wearable version of the draped silhouette is the envelope dress which features two soft folds of fabric from either side front of waist and ties centre front. The drawstring waistline is another adaptation of draping—easily adjustable to any figure—and very flattering. Peg-top hiplines, peg-top pockets that minimize hiplines are definitely fashion-important and noted in both sports, casual and dressy dresses.

Hiplength

Provocative peplums are "within the law" and they are fashionable as they are flattering — wonderful for Sunday "Best" or for furlough dating. Hiplength they achieve a smart two-piece effect and work wonders for your figure. Very new are the self-fabric peplums in thickly ruched, pleated or braided effect to give them a pert "stand-out" air. Fabric contrasts are new in peplums, for instance a black crepe dress with a rippled peplum of black velveteen — definitely a charmer for party-going. Excitingly new and festive are the peplums achieved through jet-embroidered borders, lace or fringe trims. "Tea Apron" peplums for party-going are noted, the peplum in front only, posed over a slim skirt. Jewelled belt and buckle accents are used dramatically. Velveteen and crepe combinations are noted for "date" dresses. Bright colors, color combinations as well as bright colored accents are right with us again this Fall—lovely as they are lawful. Wear color—wear it patriotically—it's spiritlifting. Bright red, purple, various tones of green, gray and beige as well as smart black are fashion headliners this Fall.

High Necklines Newest

"Plain high necklines are just plain pretty" this Fall—and a blessed relief from the plunging low V-necklines we've been wearing for so long. The simpler they are the smarter. Young yet sophisticated they're so completely fresh looking, so very lady-like that they're charm magnets. Besides which they serve as a marvellous back drop for your pearls, for a huge flower, newest when tucked right under your chin, or for a brightly striped bow-tied scarf. Along with slimmer skirts, smoother shoulders and fine detailing, these new high necklines are a smart follow-through on the all-important simple fashions this year. And because you'll be wearing suits practically all day for business and defence duties—you'll want and really need one of these new ultra feminine dresses for after hours. A marvellous investment would be one of the new basic dresses, really new too, with suave wrap around skirt, slim hemline, and upswept high high neckline, and of course, slim long sleeves. So you see these government rulings for fabric conservation are really marvellous. We not only help save fabric for our fighting forces—we also help ourselves to good sound fashion.

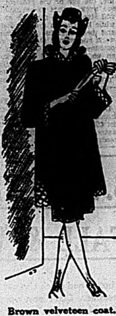
Quilting Bee



Brown velveteen coat.

By VERA WINSTON

ALL OVER quilting marks this useful coat fashioned of brown velveteen with rolled collar and turned-back cuffs of quilted velveteen in turquoise blue. It is a boxy model with a slight flare from the self-corded shoulder yoke. It goes beautifully over evening things and can also be worn with day clothes.

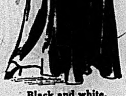
Time Marches On

These are times when nothing stands still, and this is undoubtedly as true of hair styling as of any other thing under the wartime sun. Busy women, whether they are wearing the uniform of the forces, the overalls of munitions, the smock of Red Cross, or the common or garden tailored frock each and all have less time in which to bother over their grooming—but never less desire to look well-groomed.

And so it is that the coiffure trend is simplified, as is the clothes trend. Classic simplicity is the keynote — but always with variations. Still upward is the movement, since upward is the answer to the military regulations, the smartness-with-less-bother civilian requirements — but curls are being superseded by waves. Graceful, symmetrical — straight back from the brow or flatteringly and serviceably parted — waves are a prediction of the new style trend certain to gain the approval of every woman who delights in a hair style which will be equally chic during her workday and leisure hours.

Among the "white hyacinths to save a soul" to the average woman is that modicum of grooming which determines whether she wears her last year's hat with an air, her not-so smart frock as if it were the dernier cri—and this Autumn it would seem that there had been a happy conspiracy of hairdressers to assure that she might look her best whatever the exigencies of time and tariff.

For Dancing



Black and white.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

TWO SHADES as well as two different fabrics is the formula for some of the newest and prettiest of dance frocks designed for furlough evenings and important in-aid-of dances. This charming dinner and dance frock uses white jersey for the long torso bodice made with surplice closing and short sleeves. The gathered skirt of black taffeta is joined to the bodice by a band of black jet embroidery.

Two-Scarf Ensemble

The plaid design of the scarfs shown on head and at neckline, above, may be bright and bold with color, or subtle with pastel hues.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

THE warmer the clothes, the happier the winter to come . . . that is, if you don't live in the land of Dixie. And even there, it's just as well to own some snugly clothes for that "unusual weather" which haunts all resort climates.

It may become difficult to find wool underwear later on, but right now there is no trick at all to picking up wool outer wear. Scarfs, sweaters, shawls, are just as important wool accessories as mittens and stockings, when it comes down to the basic issue of keeping warm.

In this photograph, above, the pretty sister has a camel's hair skirt and top coat, a pullover and two wool scarfs to keep her toasty. One scarf is for bundling the neck, or covering chest and shoulders. Its mate is used as a turban which can be tied high, as in the picture, or compactly over the ears and crown to combat head chills and colds.

New Styles Offer Men Chance to Spruce Up

Brown Is Color Predominating In Fall Suits

Coming on winter, every man begins to think that it is time he got himself a new piece of headgear. This year medium and wider brims are still favored, with a trend to slightly higher crowns. Snap brims are still the strong favorite and the demand is distributed between raw and bound edges. Take your pick. The binding on the hats will harmonize with the hat itself rather than the band. As with the suits, dark brown will be the leading color with an equal demand for medium and dark greys, blue greys, tans and greens. The dark homburg, popularized by Anthony Eden, will be in exceedingly good taste with dark shades of overcoats.

How has the war affected the hat situation? The fur felt supplies are not affected in any way, apparently due to the fact that they have practically no place in the war effort. Machinery in hat factories cannot very well be adapted to war needs, and in this country civilians still need head covering, so manufacturing proceeds as usual.

Overcoat Styles

As for overcoats, loose fitting coats will still predominate. In this style the raglan coat popularity has given way to the fly front box coat styled with military collar. Fullness has been restricted to a certain extent, but a large percentage of men were always against the fullness of the body of most loose fitting coats. This style applies to both light weight top coats for fall and the winter coats.

In the matter of cloths, there are fleece cloths, tweeds and elysians. The elysian is identified by a furrowed effect with a rich velvety finish, shown in navy blue and grey. It makes an ideal dress coat. Fleece cloths are shown in light, medium and dark shades. Here again is a strong favorite. Lastly the tweeds. The herringbone effect predominates with the demand being equally distributed amongst blues, greys and browns, with a demand for green being still present.

All in all, what the well-dressed man is going to wear this season is quite on a par with past efforts, in fact, maybe even an improvement and he need not worry about whether he'll be able to get what he wants. There is enough variety to satisfy the craving of any man.

The fact that war restrictions have reduced the variety of materials and suits, may prove to be an asset to male customers, clothing merchants think, because their cutomers are always complaining that there were so many kinds of materials that they could never make up their minds as to what to choose. Now the matter has been taken out of their hands. With a reduced variety, they should not experience much difficulty in hitting the jackpot right away.

Brown Is Leader

Brown is to be the leading color this year in men's Fall suits. It has been a long time since this color has achieved such a prominent position, and there seems to be no halfway measures. There will be a wide variety of tweeds and Donegals—salt and pepper—and Donegal effects. The latter vary from the straight salt and pepper style of the original Donegal cloth. Along with this there will be multi-colored mixtures, particularly the green-grey and the blue-grey mixtures. In the tweeds, the herringbones and the overcheck design have made their reappearance with a slight trend on diagonal weaves. In worsted suitings, widespread stripes will predominate, and this should be good news for a number of men.

The materials to date are equally as good as they have been for the past two or three years, and reputable merchants have prices exactly the same as a year ago, due to the price control. Even with a smaller variety of stock, there is still considerable choice for materials and there is no danger of everyone looking alike.

Home Dress-Makers Must Follow Rules

The home dressmaker, who like the custom dressmaker and the custom tailor, is classified as a clothing manufacturer under Government orders that have to do with paper patterns and clothing, will find many opportunities for using her ingenuity, as well as helping the war effort, under the new regulations.

Clothes that depend not on manipulation of material or other decoration, but good line, cut and material are at any time admittedly smartest. The new stream-lined patterns shorn of all unnecessary yardage and detail need not mean sacrifice of style. No regulations have been imposed on the purchase of material by the yard, but new patterns must conform to simplification orders of Wartime Prices and Trade Board, and it will be not only dowdy and unpatriotic, but outright illegal to be fussily dressed.

With colors and designs sharply limited, there will be little change in these each season. If blue, for example, is good this year, it will probably be equally so next year, and maybe the next.

More than ever, it will pay to buy the best materials one can afford and exercise the utmost care in making them up. Durability may be increased by re-inforced shoulders and waistlines, full-width, rip-proof seams and carefully finished edges. With shortages in dry cleaning materials likely, and curtailment of services already in effect, material that can be cleaned with soap and water is a wise consideration wherever possible. Elimination of extra pockets; double and French sleeve cuffs, and reduction of pleats and tucks will make ironing and pressing easier.

Meeting the curtailment of use of elastic—it has been cut to 50 per cent of its former use in most garments—neat darts and gussets will mean a smoother, neater fit, if a little more labor in many undergarments and children's clothes.

To a great extent the home dressmaker will find herself on the way back to the pre-elastic, pre-zipper period, but the more she can help in making her own and her family's clothing, the greater will be her satisfaction that she is releasing additional man and machine power for the struggle for

Call to Colors Predominant In Fashions

There is a rousing "call to colours" this Fall. With only a few colors barred by wartimke regulations you are assured of a wide range of rich, bright hues in your whole Fall costume.

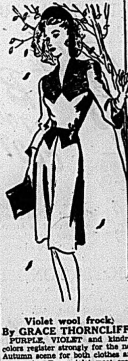
Designers Love Color

In all the new Fall collections, colors run riot. The designers believe that the American woman lovse color, and that wartime will sway many women away from perennial black. It's the "let's look charming and cheerful" mood, and the "dressed up to the uniforms" idea that calls for color. Black isn't gay and we don't want to look sombre. Bright shades are being used for dresses and suits, not just touches of color in trims. Some of the newest Fall dresses and suits are in vivid green, clear red, royal blue, bright purple, gold and plenty of light, flattering shades such as aqual, powder blue, pearl grey and pale beige.

Greens and Reds

The greens and reds are still battling for supremacy, and it is not just one shade of each which predominates, but whole families of reds and greens are seen throughout the entire Fall picture. The reds range all the way from palest to darkest tones; the bright erds include a clear paprika red shade, and there are a lot of new bluish reds from bright American Beauty to dark fuschia and magenta. There are warm shades of coral red that bring a glow to your skin and rich, dark garnet red for drama. The newest greens are bright, real, heart-warming shades. Emerald, kelly, peacock green and warm bronze greens.

All-Day Dress



Violet wool frock.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

PURPLE, VIOLET and kindred colors register strongly for the new Autumn scene for both clothes and accessories. Deep violet wool crepe is used for a charming fock designed to take a busy woman through an active day. Matching faille is used for the yoke and for the insert at the waist. The collar and revers turn back above a pair of link buttons. The same type of buttons are used at the waist. There is a centre seam front and back of the slightly flared skirt. The sleeves are wide at the hem and are lined with the faille.

War Is Reflected in Men's Styles With Conservation Stressed

For the first time since the beginning of the war in Europe, men's clothes are beginning to show the cumulative effect of military influence, conservation measures and a greatly accelerated trend toward simplicity that was just beginning to make itself felt in pre-war days.

An overall description of the new fall clothes is simplicity and conservatism. The jackets, top-coats and overcoats are all shorter, have fewer "frills" attached and no longer sport the large, roomy patch pockets so noticeable during the past two seasons. Cuffs are gone, pleats in trousers have been erased, the vest has become almost obsolete, and the two-button, single breaste suit is king of the field.

Much of this evolution in styling has been brought about, or at least hastened, by war and the government's conservation measures designed to make wool supplies last as long as possible and to act as a brake against possible future supply shortage.

Shipping Causes Shortage

Although there is no actual shortage at the present time, government officials months ago anticipated the present acute shipping problems from South America resulting from Axis submarine warfare, and also felt that our supply lines might become increasingly more dangerous to maintain.

Consequently, conservation measures were taken for men's and boys' clothing (and women's clothing as well) to stretch out the mileage in available wool fabrics.

The problem is doubly acute with an ever-growing Army to clothe, and with the consequent necessity to create and maintain a wool stockpile that can be used for civilian and military needs in the event of complete cutting off of supplies from South America and Australia.

The obvious result of these precautionary measures has been the creation of greatly simplified suits and overcoats. Although these changes are not at once obvious, or startling, they have subtly transformed the average young man and business executive into a more serious and conservative looking individual.

For years prior to the Wartime Prices and Trades Board order for finishing trousers without cuffs, the gentleman who wore no cuffs on his trousers was not considered merely eccentric, but was usually a conservative banker, a Boston business man or someone who had been brought up to believe that any departure in clothing styles had to be time tested and proved before it was permissible to take it up.

Cuffless Revival

Actually, the return of the trouser without the cuffs is a return to what has been called by many clothing establishments throughout the country a 'return to simple elegance'. And fancy as that term sounds, the total result of less yardage in suits and coats adds up to something like that.

For the man, as for the woman, the simple things are usually the best looking. The more severely the man is dressed, the more conservative he appears. And the more conservative he appears, the greater the implications of good taste. Fortunately, in normal times, there is the good middle ground of the college and university campus, where simplicity is the keynote, but is relieved by a certain carelessness and disregard for formalized apparel.

In general, the picture this Fall is favorable. The conservative appearance of the clothes is in keeping with a nation at war. And the saving in fabric yardage is a definite aid in conserving the time-honored staple of men's clothing—the natural wool fibre, which is the best guarantee of long wear and service.

FUR LININGS

In coats the fur-lined great-coat is a big fashion. In some of these the fur doesn't show at all—unless your fragrantly fold the coat back. Again the fur is continued in lapels or tuxedo bands as trimming.

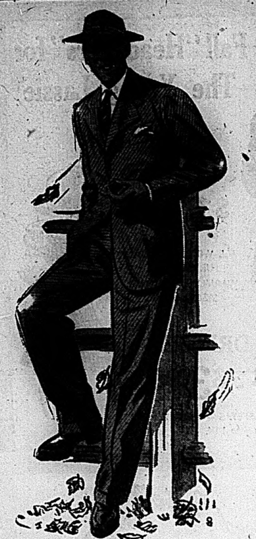
CLOTHIERS OF QUALITY



Patriotic, Practical—Like Canadian Women—Clothes Take on a Character Dictated by Transition to Wartime Services

Salute the new clothes for Autumn and Winter. Like our patriotic Canadian women, they come under the dictates of a national selective service.

On this and following pages are the clothes that reflect the new dress philosophy—inspired by war and patriotism. They're practical for utility; they're adaptable for the transition; they're patriotic as morale-lifters.

Working all day in wartime occupations Canadian women have adopted a new, unique way of buying and wearing. Their buy-word is "Selective Service". Single girls, married women, mothers and daughters, are now buying only what is easy to live in, day after day; what is neither flashy nor mousy; what is smart but conservative; what is durable, long-lasting.

Significant among the women of Canada is the daytime uniform. It may be the khaki of the Red Cross transport driver. It may be the blue smock of the canteen worker. It may be the coverall of the munitions plants. It may even be the simple, dark dress popular with the careerists of the civil service.

But, no matter what the uniform, after a day's work it will be set aside in favor of something gayer—a bit more relaxing. A happy, up-lifting spirit is taken on with these "transition" clothes that achieve an effect and outwit the budget.

Clothes must be simple. One dress must take the place of the three you bought in pre-war days. On the other hand, your 1942 wardrobe need not be sober in spite of the fact that these are sober times, and this is a sober year. They must be cheery to lift your morale—and the morale of those around you.

Eyes still turn to color. And this season is not an exception. Threads of beautiful color wander through the dresses, suits, hats, accessories.

All color is good this season—no color predominates unless it's functional black. Monotones are effective, when spiked with brilliant green, red, cerise accessories. Grey is the most popular of the monotones—possibly because the women of our Royal Family have shown a decided preference for it. Strange, but this fall, navy blue is being promoted as a Fall and Winter color—and it's usually keyed with smatterings of red, white or kelly green. Suits of velveteen worn with fur stoles, will be seen in a striking soft plum shade—good soft plum shade—good enough to eat.

Light colors, although not as practical as the darker shades, are definitely being featured under dark coats. This may be the result of an effort to conserve dyes. In the case of pastels, the dye is spread thinner, and supplies go farther.

No matter what the color—the basic outfit must be of a style that can be completely transformed merely by a change of accessories. It must give triple-duty service. It must look trim and efficient in the morning —and breathtakingly smart at night.

Silhouettes for 1942 are straight, simple, slim. Up until this season, slim skirts have been advised only for the women who is more or less hipless. This is an old-fashioned idea of an old-fashioned slimness. This season, any woman can wear a slim silhouette and wear it becomingly—if it is cut and designed to suit her type of figure. Actually the 1942 silhouette is very kind to the figure. Too-thin women can be made to appear pounds heavier by clever front draping, caught up at the sides. Too-plump madames can look almost sylph-like in one of the new skirts that draw all the fullness (and attention) to the side.

Naturally a great deal depends upon the fabric. Heavy women should leave novelty patterns to the slim, and concentrate on plain rayon crepes that mold and drape easily. Short figures should invest in one of the new corded crepes that add inches of height. Tall women will look shorter in many of the season's novelty weaves.

Autumn and Winter clothes are beautiful—as smart as any we have ever had. And they are more practical than those of previous seasons. Last year's suit-dress, consisting of a dress and jacket, has been replaced by a skirt and jacket. The new version is not only highly decorative but highly practical. Detailed trim on the jacket, such as braid, quilting or appliques, makes it individual and also an extra accessory for a black dress. Separate skirts are invariably straight, except for the odd one that has an inverted pleat, front and back. Often jackets and skirts are in contrasting shades—red jacket, black skirt. Pale blue jacket, brown skirt. Kelly green jacket, black skirt. Two shades of green, and Autumn's favorite yellow and brown.

Daytime wear demands that accessories be tailored — but the same suit may be made to look dressy if an extremely unique hat and bag are selected for evening wear. And that dress-up hat should be high! Tall hats are fashion! Bags are bigger and better—with wooden handles painted to match the fabric of the handbag.

Other suits—to be worn without a coat—are more formal by reason of fur. Pockets, snug collars, lapels, peplums—all of fur are new and exciting. Hats of fur to match the suit, often in toque or pill-box styles, make the outfit complete.

One black dress should be a "must" for every woman. This year it is even more vitally important, for it is the basis of a wardrobe—and the most versatile dress of all. Because of its importance, it should be simple, well-cut, well-made and of quality fabric. It might have touches of satin trim or a velveteen collar. But it is best if perfectly plain with possibly a unique front draping. It will be a dress that can be changed a thousand and one ways—by jewellery — collars — hats — colorful bags — or furs. It will be a dress that can be worn to and from Red Cross and behind a typewriter. A dress that will look smart at a dinner party outstanding at the theatre. A dress that will fit into a triple-duty life.

Extra jackets will extend the uses of a black dress. Brilliantly colored cardigans, with unique plastic buttons are being shown for this purpose. One of wool was especially smart knitted, and trimmed with flashing sequins. Others in wool fabric have rows of short-haired fur, or fringe as trim. Still others are perfectly plain, depending on the new plastic jewellery for individuality. Satin binding is important. Often, such jackets are bound with rows of satin—shiny and rich-looking.

These jackets have a way of coming in handy. Separate skirts become as useful as dresses when topped by a jacket. Velveteen comes into fashion again, as in other war days, in separate skirts to combine with jackets. Even complete velveteen ensembles are shown in two-piece effects — but they are only for the tall slim girl. In fact, before the season is over, velveteen will also be seen in tailored dresses, buttoned down the front.

Twin Rulers For Knitting

The new "ruler knitting bags" just introduced in New York, are not only the last inch in smartness, they are convenient for measuring the progress of a garment, and can easily be made at home. First choose a bright floral fabric which can be used for both the outside and the lining and which is easily washable in rich suds that rinse out the dirt without hard rubbing or scrubbing and so keep the colors gay and bright. Then get twin rulers to use as the frame. Evenly-spaced holes should be drilled through the bottoms of both rulers and bright red cord threaded through these holes to sew the rulers to the bag. A button at one side of the bag with a looped cord coming over the top from the other side will close the bag securely. Bore more holes at the top ends of the rulers to which bright heavily-corded handles can be attached.

Modern Mandarin

A handsome wool fabric in bright red or rich, deep green is used for this mandarin-like Winter coat. The neckline front closing and hem of the model are edged with lustrous black Persian lamb.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

YOU'D better choose a classic model for your new winter wool coat, for it may have to last you longer than usual and classics are least tiresome in the long run.

It's true, however, that there are classics besides the balmacaan, the reefer, et cetera; th Chinese, for instance, have a classic silhouette, and it has attractive Occidental variations.

The coat photographed above is definitely Chinese in background, with its mandarin shape which includes wide sleeves, straight closing and skirt slit. The model covers warmly, has ample sitting freedom and has chic rather than novelty flash appeal.

Young Ones Well Dressed For Fall and Winter

Regardless of priorities— Canadian boys and girls will still go back to school well-dressed as ever this year!

Smart suits are as all-important for teen girls as they are for big sister, and Mother, too. And teens "in the know" will really start with a good classic suit as the basis for a schooltime, playtime wardrobe. Jackets are mostly 25" fitted, single-breasted types, with some variations—such as the cardigan, hug-me-tight and "pea jacket" styles. Skirts are gored, pleated and flared—all within government rulings to conserve fabric.

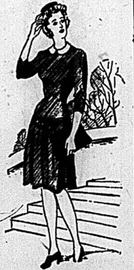
Plaids, perenially popular, will again lead as the No. 1 choice—with herringbones, solids and shetland types close runner-uppers. Coats for tens will, in many instances, match-up to a suit—making almost a complete wardrobe at one fell swoop. And, of course, those ever loving sweaters, blouses and dickeys will be very much in evidence to double the life of teen wardrobes.

"Dressy" coats for dating, and important occasions will be highlighted in rich colors, with luxury furs used as trimming. The button-up princess coat is the fashion favorite. Smooth woollens, fleece-type fabrics, and and interesting surface-textured woollens are most popular.

Smart teens will go back-to-school in crisp, washable cottons—wear them practically through Winter under their cosy coats. Piques, chambrays, percales in Fall color combinations are really news—and a boon to busy mothers, who can pop them in and out of soapsuds and have them fresh again in a jiffy! The most flattering silhouettes include the cute hug-me-tight jacket over dirndl-y skirt, the shirtwaist classic, slim, fitted jacket, with tiered, flared skirt. Ric-rac embroidery and applique trims are also very important.

It's a big year for the jumper dress. Teens love them for their versatility and fresh appearance—a quick change of a blouse, dickey or sweater and another outfit is born. They're grand for school in corduroy, spun rayon or sheer woolens—and pretty for "Sunday best" in velveteen.

Smart Comfort



A cheerful daytime dress.

By VERA WINSTON

THIS NEAT little frock should do well on the campus and would be at home in an office as well. Jersey and rabbit's hair mixture in a bright red, cut on modified middy lines. Detachable white rayon collar. Buttons all the way down one side from under the arm to the bottom of the tunic. Three rows of stitching border the hem and the sleeves. A nice snug frock, made with an eye to colder weather ahead.

Women's Hats on the Up-and-Up

Since your clothes this Autumn must be law-abidingly simple it's definitely up to your hat to give you a lift — and the new chapeaux are rising valiantly to the occasion. They're providing a lift — both figuratively and literally — swinging up to a new high in fedoras, in chechias, in postilions and stovepipes. Up into creases and dents, into folds and twists — both high and highly becoming, doing truly amazing things for even the simplest suit or dress in the world.

Of course the tallest hat stories will be told by night — and they will be hats that are hats, not just an airy trifle as of late years. They will probably be beplumed, and more than probablf be black—and they will have an elegance about them that will delight the wearer and the beholder alike.

By day they'll not be quite so exaggerated — though still definitely high hat. A soft fabric hat, perhaps, or a concise little chechia, just moderately high; a terse postilion or one of the new halfhigh tricornes, or a steeply rising cloche —none of them extreme, but all extremely smart.

But not every hat is 'way over the head. Flat little berets will appear side-by-side with sky-scraping hats. Big pie-plate berets, quilted velvet pancakes, trim little chapeaux speared by a couple of hatpins topped with huge fur pompoms — for those who refer low altitudes rather than high there is an infinite variety of hats on the shallow side.

Let Wardrobe Be Practical Is Suggestion

(By MARGUERITE YOUNG)
NEA Service Staff Writer

NEW YORK — Mainbocher, who used to be just Chicago's gift to Paris dressmaking but who now dresses the WAVES, has made some astonishing new Autumn 1942 clothers out of the ABC's of a practical American wardrobe—like this:

A—Twin sweaters. Mainbocher decks them heavily with braid or metal embroidery, units them with a long skirt or even a short one, and sends them out for evening.

B—Skirts and pickets, two-for-one. Each is made to go with at least two others, sometimes several. It gets to be real fashion blackmagic. The designer takes a slight, short black wool skirt, gives it a couple of sweaters, one black and the other gold. . .then he adds one short tweed boxcoat for an afternoon because the coat is spectacularly embroidered with golden metal half-moons . . .then he changes the same coat into the top of a gala evening suit by subbing a long black skirt for the short one.

C—"One good black dress"—the basic-dress idea that some supposed perished last year, now is risen with glorifying trifles where-with it can become "the" dress for a big night.

Basic-Dress Idea

Mainbocher demonstrated, at the press preview of the collection, by sending out the long black dinner dress in the country of two maids and a tray. The model looked "little evening"; quiet and dignified. The dress was a perfectly plain, straight crepe one, sleeveless, shoulder straight and shirred. Buckled around her waist was a narrow belt, delicately embroidered in gold and apricot, and she wore apricot-colored gloves and a tiny black head-dress.

The maids changed the model's gloves to a taffeta pair of the same color. The belt was supplanted by an apricot-colored taffeta one, to which was attached a front peplum.

And once again a change of matching peplum and gloves turned the dress's character; pink and green lame accessories suggested deliberate elegance. Then, instead of a peplum, a diaphanous net overskirt with alternating vertical panels of black and electric blue, was tied on, a demure bow in black. Sheer romance!

Finally, over the black dress a brilliant red long-sleeved velvet jacket was worn. It was high-necked, smooth to the waistline, and there was a red peplum. . . which made the model seem to be a warm, confident, confidence-giving sort of dinner-outer.

Sweaters For Evening

Those are typical of Mainbocher's painstaking elaboration of his chief ideas. He has an elfin love of turning the tables. But this year he was in earnest.

His sweaters are not exactly what you could run out and find at the corner. They are cashmere sweaters, and Mainbocher cuts them up, at time intricately, to produce his peculiar kind of a fit—never-tight—rather flat-bodied.

He showed some, among his evening clothes, last Fall, included more of them last Spring, and now developes the idea still further. Both contrasting and matching slipover and cardigan are used, always with a separate belt sharply defining the waistline The embroidery is massed at the neckline or cuffs, or both; it is jet, or passenmenterie, or metal . One of his most luscious costumes, however, had none. It was a slim grape wood skirt worn with sweaters of a slightly lighter hue, a lovely mauve. The belt matched the skirt.

Besides that mauve, the collection stressed a gleaming golden yellow, a silvery grey, vivid reds and blues, but these after the magical black.

Daytime dresses were almost all in the silhouette Mainbocher made last Fall—the slim, but loosely rather than tightly fitted dress. skirts handing always from the waist rather than holding on to hips or veering in at the knees. Narrow yokes again on some skirts . . .outlined demurely with a narrow lace matching the fabric of afternoon dresser.

This type was abundant and was made to go into the evening. Daytime dresses were chiefly of wool.

One distinguished new short jacket by Mainbocher fits like a bolero, but it is belted at the waist. This was part of a brown herringbone tweed suit, the skirt of which was duplicated in smooth brown wool. With the brown skirt, a wonderfully jaunty, chunky tweed Norfolk jacket, belted in back only, and lined with ermine. Thus, with a white satin blouse, tweed proved to be thoroughly adequate to a sumptuous afternoon party. That is—tweed plus Mainbocher's imagination

There's a big, strong cue to the average American woman in this designer's collection. . .especially in his ABC's. Wearing her own choice of them in ready made clothes, or those she sews for herself, the woman may not look exactly dressed a la Mainbocher. But she will look pretty rightly dressed.

ONE FASHION that already looks like a winner, judging by the enthusiasm of stylists and buyers is the coat out on trench coat lines. It is as good over slacks as it is with a frock, and in the country it is destined for dinner dress escort. Marjorie Woodworth, the pretty starlet, has chosen a beauty fashioned of cut velvet in antelope beige. For dress wear, Marjorie treats the coat to luxurious black suede accessories.

TALK to any man in our armed forces and he'll admit that when he's on furlough he wants his feminine companions to look as undimmed as possible by war conditions. He thinks he's worth dressing up for, on his precious time off . . . and he's right.

Perhaps we won't get around to many formal costumes this winter . . . betting is even, however, that we will. Common sense dictates getting wear out of the formal togs hanging in our closets from last year; kindness to men cut off from normal living while they do a grim duty for the nation will probably add new models to our collections. The girl above is well dressed for a beau date.

VARIETY IN TIES

This year, stores report a larger amount of English neckwear in their stock than ever before, and there is a splendid range of color with which every man should be able to satisfy himself. "Foulards" are shown in small and medium figured effects, and there is also a large variety of paisley and English botany wool ties, both brands sporting an attractive variety of figured patterns. The English silk and wool poplins are making their appearance as in former years, with plaids and stripes and it is expected that there will be the usual demand for authentic Scotch tartans and the steady favorite, the polka dot. Ties, the experts agree, should be chosen so as to be in contrast to the shirt they are worn with.

As for tie colors, by far the biggest demand is for red, followed by blue and green. Here again the green is unusually smart with tan shirts and brown suits. It makes an ideal accessory. Along with this, colored pocketwear for the breast coat is very popular. In choosing this it should always be remembered that it should contrast with the suit and shirt, but match the tie, althought it may not necessarily be the same pattern.

GIFT OF ISLE OF MAN

London (CP)—The Isle of Man has presented 500,000 pounds ($1,735,000) to the British government as a contribution towards the cost of the war and an expression of the island's loyalty as an integral part of the British Empire.

FILLERS FOR MENS FASHIONS. WIDER BRIMS

Coming on winter, every man begins to think that it is time he got himself a new piece of headgear. This year medium and wider brims are still favored, with a trend toward slightly higher crowns. Snap brims are still the strong favorite and the demand is distributed between raw and bound edges. Take your pick. The binding on the hats will harmonize, with the hat itself rather than the band. As with the suits, dark brown will be the leading color with an equal demand for medium and dark greys, blue greys, tans and greens. The dark homburg, popularized by Anthony Eden, will be in exceedingly good taste with dark shades of overcoats.

NEW BAGS

Among the Fall arrivals are handbags in eye catching colours displaying fine attention to detail. Have yours in ribbed faille or soft broadcloth with smooth suede trim. There are bright plaid shoulder straps with contrasting linings that you'll bless on the dance floor because they leave your hands free. Slack purses are good too, or tailored compact vanities, draped broadcloth pouches and tailored envelopes with lucite trims. Any and all of these inspired bags will add that special touch, and lend a tang of Autumn to your first Fall costume;—With him away, your purse may be your favorite escort so select it with care.

Young Color Scheme

Fresh young red to match the velveteen skirt of her fireside dinner frock is the enamel tint this pig-tailed pretty is using. Top of the frock is wool challis, flower sprigged.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

GIRLS of 'teen age beginning their cosmetic experiments in these wartimes will not have to take lessons on color harmony, at least. With dye stuffs for all civilian needs sharply curtailed, our rouges for lips and cheeks will include little besides a light, medium and a darker red.

A young red, bracing and fresh, is calculated to sit pretty on sub-deb youngsters. Let older sisters choose the darker shade, and leave the palest tint for ladies who don't crave dash in their costuming. A clear young red, moreover, will look best with the bright colors which youth affects in clothes, leaping the pitfalls which lurk for rouges mixed with overtones of orange or purple.

Suits Are Wartime Fashions From Coast to Coast

Never before have suits been so vital a part of the Canadian woman's wardrobe. Without one whit of exaggeration, suits will definitely be the wartime fashion uniform from coast to coast. Ever beloved because of their endless wearability, their fashion rightness round the clock and their great versatility, this year suits will reach the peak of their popularity. More than any other costume, suits fill the bill perfectly for smartness, practicability and long wear—all-important points now when we all want clothes that can take it. This year you'll work in suits, serve in suits and dance in suits—and there are marvelous new suits to fit and flatter every figure. We all know that our government has asked us to forego patch pockets, full flared skirts and extra long jackets in order to conserve fabric for our fighting forces, and really as a result, suits are smarter, more figure-flattering than ever. Our talented designers have created suits that are beautiful as they are dutiful. For instance, the new 25" jacket is much more flattering because it is much more feminine. Rêvers are softer, smaller, more rounded—another nice note. Pockets are smaller, sometimes nonexistent with smart substitution noted in curved slot pockets or pocket flaps. Skirts are slimly flared or feature the new trouser pleat, very new and very tailored and extremely flattering. Of course, the favorite box-pleat skirt is also noted. Most popular suit of all and one t. will serve smart duty this Fall is the 3-button casual "boy" suit with wide fabric choice offered. For instance, it is noted in herringbone tweeds, shetlands, fine flannels, smooth gabardines. These are featured with contrasting topcoats (matching or ı are out for the duration —wonderfully wearable over all your suits as they are atop your dresses and slacks. Handsome as they are hard-working, these jackets suits under topcoats are sound investments, really the backlog of your Fall and Winter wardrobe.

Jackets Make Fashion News

Staging a smart comeback this Fall is the cardigan jacket suit. In 25" length with clean, crisp, collarless necklines, these suits are marvelous with all your blouses, equally smart with shirtcollar or Peter Pan collar styles. And you know how smart they are with your sweaters worn with your favorite pearls. The rib-hugging basque jacket, prime favorite with young Canada, makes real fashion news this year. So very feminine, it underscores a small waist and it is very fashionable in velveteen. There's the smart double-breasted jacket, beautifully fitted and perfect in the new chalk striped grey flannels or vivid checked tweeds. Dressmaker touches are noted in some of these suits with smart velveteen collars or cuffs. Two-tone combinations such as velveteen jacket and bright plaid skirt are also noted. Then there are grand dressmaker tailored tweed suits, more flattering than ever before with gently curved jackets, soft revers, smooth shoulders and gently flared skirts. Contrasting furred topcoats are featured with these many times, and to double their wearability, some of the fur collars are detachable so that you can have a fur collared suit or coat.

"Dress" Suits Starred

For furlough dating and for all the planned and impromptu parties you'll be going to this year, invest in a little "dress" suit. Fashionable as they are practical, these suits will take you smartly to business and look party-pretty for dinner dancing later. Softly tailored in rich velveteen, smooth broadcloth, sheer wool and wool and velveteen combinations, they are supremely chic. Especially lovely are the little basque jacket suits, some with pert peplums, all with gently flared skirts so nice for dancing. Set off with bright eye-catching color, or with twinkling "jeweled" buttons, these little basque suits will be the pride and joy of young Canada. For the more sophisticated, there are stunning cardigan or rever jacket suits all with curved, gently fitted waists, smooth shoulders. You can really bank on suits to take you places smartly straight through Fall and Winter, whether it's work or play.

"CALL" TO BEAUTY

It takes courage to be beautiful, but Canadian women can be lovelier than ever this fall by concentrating on details of grooming. One of your first considerations should be your hair, for you know the importance of regular visits to your beauty shop and a brand new hair-do does lift the morale. The time spent getting professional beauty care isn't selfish or extravagant. It is part of this important job of morale. You'll be delighted with the many versions of short hairstyle so admirably suited to busy living. Select the hair-do that is most becoming to your type of beauty. The new fall styles are extremely versatile, but remember these rules if your coiffure is to be truly successful:— You must combine beauty and practicability and first of all you'll want to banish your particular hair problem by consulting your beauty specialist. If your hair is too dry, too oily or too fine you may require special pre-permanent treatment. If your hair is in good condition, a permanent should leave it natural looking and glossy-smooth.

CARE OF WOOL

Wool conservation is now a patriotic duty. Consumer Information Service reports that to keep woollen garments in good condition they should be washed carefully; kept lively by frequent brushings; should be aired carefully and if possible should not be worn steadily. To wash woollens successfully it is important to use a mild soap and lukewarm water. The same temperature of water should be used for rinsing because the combination of hot water and soap has a bad effect on wool and may shrink, yellow or "felt" it.

CASUAL CLOTHES

Indications are that there will be much less demand for dress clothes this Fall. People won't be going out so much. They'll be staying at home. This doesn't mean reduced buying, necessarily, but different direction of buying—more casual clothes.

For a wide selection of casual clothes, the thrifty male shopper will view the many articles displayed in shop windows.

Prices Board Brings About Slim Styles

The Wartime Prices and Trade Board really did the women a favor when they clamped down on the amount of material that could go into a dress, a suit or a nightie. Gone, for the duration at least, are those voluminous dirndl skirts and all round pleated dresses, that used to add so much apparent poundage in the region of the hips. Instead we have a flatteringly slender silhouette, achieved by soft draping at the front, slightly gored skirts, or very few pleats. Skirts and dresses are slim enough to be economical and inconvenient. Eighty inches is the limit for the sweep of a hem on dress or skirt.

Bells Gone

Gone too, are those long, bell-shaped sleeves that used to dangle into everything, get crushed and untidy under a coat, and were a general nuisance. The all-over shirring, tucking or pleating of a fabric, which reduced its width by half or more, and used up a tremendous amount of fabric unnecessarily, is forbidden. Elastic shirring of any kind is also forbidden naturally. The use of more than nine buttons or a limited number of pockets is also forbidden. All these restrictions make for plainness and simplicity in dress styles.

Robbed of Non-Essentials

Those lovely, but highly unpracticable nightgowns with several yards of material in the skirt are out. Remember them? They were so beautiful it always seemed a shame to sleep in them. And can you picture yourself, tangled in five or six yards of flowered batiste nightie,: trying to get out of the house during an air raid? Pyjamas, too, have been robbed of all their non-essential fancy touches. The use of double fabric for collars and cuffs is forbidden and there will be no pockets, belts or other unnecessary folderrols.

Fall Hats Reach New Heights

With no government restrictions or regulations on hats, the designers have gone "all out" in their effort to create the newest looking, fashion-right hats for this Fall. Hats are really back on the head —a flattering, appropriate hat gives a woman that well-groomed, costumed look that is impossible to achieve with just a bow or flower tucked in her hair.

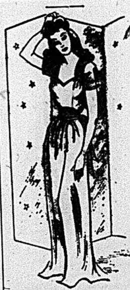
Berets Are Back

This season's beret is quite different from the classic little beret from years past. The Fall 1942 beret comes in almost any fabric, in tailored, sports or dressy styles and in sizes from a very small one th : perches over one eye, or newer still straight on the head, to a large profile-revealing style.

The Forward Silhouette

The forward tilted hat has a distinctly new look about it and is the perfect complement to all the suits that will be worn this Fall. This forward silhouette is created by dip-in-front brims, by eyeline berets and by brimmed hats worn forward. High crowns are news in both over the eye and back-of-the-head hats. Many of the crowns are draped, stitched or sc ,tured with ribbon and feather trims. Some of the tall crowns are draped or creased to give a soft, dressmaker look and many of them have quill or feather trim for added height.

Boudoir Beauty



A pretty blue nightgown.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

A PRETTY nightie or bed-jacket comes under the heading of a useful gift to oneself as well as to a friend. Here is a particularly pleasing design, one that smartly combines two fabric weights. The yoke and sleeves are of robin's egg blue sheer crepe, while the rest of the gown except for the insert at the waist is of the same shade of blue but in a heavier crepe. The waist yoke and sleeves have yellow piping.

Four Ways Of Conserving Power To Keep War Industries Wheels Turning

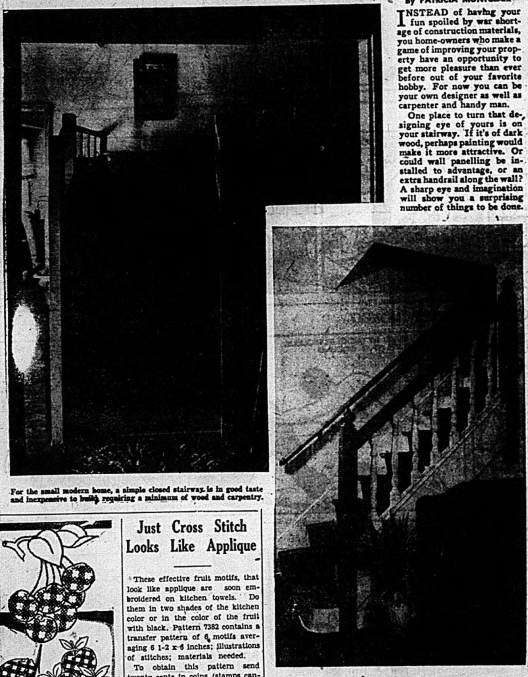
Home lighting has long been a power waster and now that Ontario and Quebec, on account of the power shortage, are living in semi-blackouts, householders are asked to reduce their power consumption by at least 20 per cent. Re-arrangement of furniture, care and proper use of appliances and substitution of more economic equipment will all help cut down power consumption, and provide cash savings as well. Four simple ways to save power are illustrated above. In photo (1) instead of sitting at opposite sides of a room and using up two or three different lamps, this young couple have the right idea. They are using up less light, without causing eyestrain, and sharing not only electricity, but the evening paper. (2) Replace decorative lamps, not used particularly for reading with low wattage light bulbs. In tri-light lamps remove 100-200-300 watt bulbs and replace with 50-100-150 bulbs which are sufficient for reading, or have the tri-light bulb removed entirely, as in picture, and replaced with one 100 watt bulb. (3) Use the oven for cooking complete meals whenever possible. Have the food ready for the oven when it is at the right temperature. Just as this young housewife does, make "all-oven meals your specialty. In this oven process only one does, make "all-oven" meals your specialty. In this oven process only one the cooking surface. (4) When cooking, use "high" heat for as little time as possible, then turn to "low." Turn off the element a few minutes before cooking is completed. Food will continue to cook on stored heat. When cooking vegetables use a minimum amount of water. The cooking time will be shortened and more vitamins and minerals retained.

Stairways Offer Field for Those Seeking To Improve Homes

By PATRICIA MONTCLAIR

INSTEAD of having your fun spoiled by war shortage of construction materials, you home-owners who make a game of improving your property have an opportunity to get more pleasure than ever before out of your favorite hobby. For now you can be your own designer as well as carpenter and handy man.

One place to turn that designing eye of yours is on your stairway. If it's of dark wood, perhaps painting would make it more attractive. Or could wall panelling be installed to advantage, or an extra handrail along the wall? A sharp eye and imagination will show you a surprising number of things to be done.



For the small modern home, a simple closed stairway is in good taste and inexpensive to build, requiring a minimum of wood and carpentry.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN
Good-Bye

"I've been so worried about you, dear," Phyllis said to the bedside of her friend.

So worried, Judith thought, that it had taken her two days to come. What had Max said? "People change." And Phyllis had become more selfish, tardier and, she guessed, more extravagant. Ames wore the look of a man who was learning patience.

"I'm going home," Emily said. "To stay."

Ames' expression was one of understanding. Phyllis seemed about to utter an exclamation at the absurdity of the idea when obviously she became aware of Mrs. Travers' presence and restrained herself.

Judith thought, "I was fond of Phyllis. Her absent-mindedness used to amuse me as much as it annoyed me. Now I feel that she's failing both as a wife and as a friend. And so soon. . .Marriage isn't something to use to your own best advantage. It is something to which you give lavishly of yourself."

Later in the apartment Mrs. Travers said, "This young man, Tim, is he the reason why Emily has made up her mind to go home?"

Judith turned from the dressing table and looked, frowning, at Emily's plain, sensible mother.

"Yes, he is. Most girls would stay, you know. It takes courage to break your own heart."

"She isn't good enough, you mean?"

"In ways that are not important. You don't soon get over a love affair, Mrs. Travers, that teaches you the answers to love."

The older woman shook her head. "It makes a mother feel so helpless."

The next evening Judith found on a table in the foyer an envelope addressed to her in Max's large, bold handwriting. It was another brief, endearing note. . . ."I could do so well with your dark head beside me here," he wrote. "Your letters warm the chilly weather that is never supposed to come to Florida." But he said nothing of returning.

Two weeks passed, bringing more of those brief, endearing notes, and also bringing Emily to the day when she would go home. She had told Tim she was going to rest and recuperate, wishing to avoid any questions or unpleasantness.

Judith and Tim were outside the station that morning when Emily and her mother arrived in an ambulance. Emily, pale and covered by an unflattering blanket, was brought into the station on a wheel chair by Mrs. Travers, Tim and Judith followed.

"Sure you're okay?" Tim asked. Big, healthy, handsome he leaned over her and looked down at her smiling. "You look swell."

Emily said, and her eyes were lying, "I feel swell and being spoiled with all the super-service and attention. It's wonderful being out again and seeing people."

Tim said, "Take it easy. They tell me—I don't know—you wobble pretty badly when you try to walk."

She wrinkled her nose and grinned. "I won't. Walking looks good, too. You don't think how good it is to get around until you can't."

It takes courage to break your own heart. . . .Would she be as gallant, Judith wondered? She bit back tears, seeing them—Emily in the wheel chair and Tim standing over her, not knowing that they were saying good-bye and that Emily was sending him back to the life that had been planned for him and the "right" girl for him. . . "don't think such things," Judith thought. "You'll cry and that's what Emily doesn't want. But you can't help comparing them with Max and you and you knew you wouldn't have Emily's courage if you were saying good-bye to Max. You couldn't bear it. It would be like tearing away a part of you."

Was Emily remembering when she had come? Was she remembering the girl from middle west who had seen too many movies? "A girl doesn't come to New York to find herself. She comes to lose herself." And now she was going home helpless and ill and deeply in debt for the pretty clothes bought for Tim who she'd never see again.

Never to see Max again . . . . Never to look across a table and see his face and hear that voice or feel the demands, the warmth, the words in even his most casual touch. And Emily was feeling it new, everything that good-bye implied, a separation never ending, a last glimpse of a beloved face, memories washing over her.

People were moving toward the gate. There was so much to say this last minute and not time to say it.

Emily held out her thin hand. "Please write and tell me all the news, Judith."

"I shall. You, too." She bent down and kissed Emily's cold check and then she and Mrs. Travers turned away for the good-bye of Emily and Tim.

"Good-bye, Tim. Thanks for everything."

"It was nothing, honey. Hurry up and get well and come back. I'm going to miss you like. . . ."

"I'm going to miss you, too. And —and thank your mother for being sweet to me that night."

"I'll do that. Don't forget to write."

"Oh, of course."

"I might buzz out to see you."

"That would be grand. . .Better start pushing, mother. We don't want to miss this train. . . Good-bye."

She was taken down on the elevator. Judith and Tim stood and watched it descend. Mrs. Travers' shiny face was a trifle grim. But Emily lifted her hand from the gray blanket and gave a gay little salute and smiled. . . . smiled at Tim.

But Tim was no longer smiling.

"Well," he said and sighed. "I guess that's that, Judith. She looks pretty bad, doesn't she?"

"Her doctor didn't want her to leave so soon." Emily had said it was costing too much and she simply couldn't afford to stay longer.

They walked out of the station together.

"Going home or to the store?" Tim asked, "I'll drop you off."

"I'm going back to work."

He said soberly. "Emily is one swell girl, Judith."

"I know. She hasn't an enemy Her boss, the editor, hated to see her go as much as we do." She could not guess what Tim was thinking.

He glanced at her and smiled. "Don't look so down. She'll be back. In the meantime are you planning to live alone?"

"I don't know. I haven't thought about it, really." If she and Max would marry soon. . . ."Have you any plans, Tim?"

"Plans?" He frowned. "Nope. The same old stuff, I suppose. I may run down to Palm Beach in a few weeks and join Mother and Dad. Things are slow at the office."

Before the store he said, "Call you up sometime, Judith."

She stood in the sun and watched his car move slowly with the traffic. Finally she lost it—lost it as surely as Emily had lost him.

Birthdays and holidays are not the only dates you remember. Judith was to remember not only a certain day in January, but the days that preceeded it, vividly for the rest of her life. There was the apartment in which no Emily stood over the kitchen stove at night to greet her or to chat with her in the morning while breakfast was prepared. The telephone was a silent thing. Judith could not remember when she had been so conscious of silence and loneliness in a city where there is little silence and where one is never supposed to be lonely.

On a certain night in January she rode down on a crowded elevator and listened to a fellow-artist tell her about a bargain in the fur coat she was wearing. Then the dark, crowded street received her and she stopped to buy a newspaper before she walked to the bus.

The faces of men and women hurrying to some shelter for the night had never failed to interest her. Where were they going? To what and to whom? Slim girls in teetering heels and silly hats and older women with tired face marked by tragedy. Young men with roving eyes and older men with tired eyes fastened on newspapers. All going somewhere to those little worlds they had created for themselves.

Judith felt snug and happy and fortunate with her own lot. There were no untied ends to her life. Her job was established, her family well and Max would soon return. It was like a warm, protecting mantle, her love for him, that seemed to set her apart from the people on the crowded bus.

She walked briskly from the bus to the apartment and asked for mail. The clerk, a pleasant young man, gave her a letter, smiled and said meaningly, "Another!" She thanked him and smiled back, seeing that it was a letter from Max.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was looking at her paper and pop was looking at his, saying, Did you read about that woman blacksmith out West?

What woman blacksmith? ma said, and pop said, The one that won a horse shoeing contest at the county fair and beat all the men blacksmiths for miles around.

Well, guess it just proves a woman can do anything if she puts her mind to it, ma said, and pop said, —Not to speak of her mussels There was a story on the sport page about a girl shot putter. She threw a 16 pound shot 60 feet, or maybe it was a hundred and 60, I forget. Anway, it was the world's record for any sex, he said.

I wouldn't call it a very ladylike sport for land sakes, ma said, and pop said, Maybe she's not a very ladylike girl, but she certainly can put a 16 pound shot.

And he kept on reading to himself and pretty soon he said, It seems to hold true all over the world. Here's an —account of a woman in Russia who lifted a horse out of a well, he said, and ma said, Now William that's impossible, even in Russia.

How can it be impossible when it's right here in the paper? pop said. Her nome is Anna Overandova, he said, and ma said, Isn't there anything in that paper except articles about strong women?

Women are just naturally the strong sex, apparently, pop said. And while we're on the subject, would you mind calling up Herb Lewis and telling him I wont be able to have lunch with him tomorrow? I feel too weak to move, he said, and ma said, Now isn't that just like a man, exhausting himself making up excuses not to move his little finger. I wont do anything of the kind, the idea, she said.

Only she did just the same, proving they may not be the strongest but they're probably the best natured.

Illegal Entry Brings Jail Term For 26 Canadians

Buffalo, N.Y., Oct. 8 —(AP)— Twenty-six youthful Canadians, described by the United States Government as members of Jehovah's Witnesses, were sentenced in federal court today to 75 days each in a penitentiary for illegally entering the United States.

Judge John Knight said he had intended to impose 90-day sentences, but took into consideration the fact that the defendants, who pleaded guilty Tuesday, had served 15 days since their arrest on Grand Island Sept. 22.

Assistant U. S. Attorney Robert M. Hitchcock asserted the men had crossed the Niagara River in rowboats to attend a Jehovah's Witnesses convention in Cleveland and were on their way back to Canada when arrested.

"The organization of which they are members," he added, "is recognized officially in Canada as injurious to a nation at war. It has occasioned and, I believe, instigated conduct on the part of its members in the United States that has interfered with our war effort, particularly referring to the application of our Selective Service Act."

Judge Knight, commenting on the question of conscientious objection, said he believed that in some instances it was an attempt to evade army service.

"That's an unfair statement," said George Amos, 25, of Toronto, one of the defendants.

"I'm stating my opinion and not questioning the sincerity of any particular individual," the jurist asserted.

Reasons for Failure of Versailles Treaty Discussed by Former Austrian Journalist at Women's Canadian Club

Dr. Franz Klein, L.L.D., noted Austrian author and journalist, now residing in Ottawa, in his address at the Women's Canadian Club Wednesday evening on "Our Second Chance," analyzed in an interesting manner some reasons for the failure of the Treaty of Versailles and discussed the insight shown by leading statesmen of the Allied Nations that points to a peace which will carefully avoid the disasters of the past.

Mrs. E. A. Geen, President of the club, presented Dr. Klein to the audience. Dr. Klein is now editor of "The Voice of Austria," a monthly magazine published in Canada and is a correspondent of the Swiss newspaper National-Zeitung. His experience in journalism as League of Nations correspondent, and as war correspondent in the early years of the war brought him into close contact with the European situation.

Dr. Klein chose the title of his address from words of Vice-President Henry A. Wallace, who said, "Our second chance is now with us; but there will still be those who want to repeat our former blunders."

The lack of organization within the British Empire has contributed considerably, the speaker said, to tempting the Germans into this war. People here are very prone to blame Chamberlain for his appeasement policy but Great Britain was obliged to prove to the dominions that war could not be avoided even to the extent of making concessions and accepting humiliation. The British Empire is an association of self-governing, independent countries and Great Britain is not able to take the dominions into a war. Hitler certainly did not believe that the dominions would support England in a European war, and thought that the British Empire would disintegrate.

New League of Nations

It seems that the hopes which were recently voiced in the House of Lords by Viscount Bennett and Lord Selbourne—hopes for transforming the Empire into a federation—are almost Utopian. None of the dominions seems to accept the idea of an empire parliament, an empire Foreign Office, an Empire War Office but if this be so then other ways must be found to organize collective security after the war in spite of that lack of organization within the Empire.

"I think," the speaker said, "that this points towards the creation of a new League of Nations to which the dominions would be more willing to yield a part of their sovereignty rather than to an Empire federation."

It is very fortunate, Dr. Klein pointed out, that the Atlantic Charter avoids a repetition of the slogan of "Making the world safe for democracy." The adoption of this slogan was one of the reasons why the Allies lost the peace in the very hour of their military victory. Not every nation is ripe for this highest form of community. In 1919 the slogan was linked with the idea that republics are by nature more peaceful and democratic than monarchies, an idea which is not borne out by victory. The consequence was that the Allies contributed to destroying whole series of legitimate regimes of European continuity. The peace of 1919 was a revolutionary peace, therefore led to a world revolution, whereas the words of the Congress of Vienna in 1815 after the fall of Napoleon secured peace for one hundred years simply because it consulted history and took care of legitimate continuity.

Make World "Safe"

This time the world should not "be made safe for democracy" but should be made "safe." Freedom from fear should be our slogan and this freedom includes the other free freedoms mentioned by President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, freedom of speech, freedom of religion and freedom from want. To live as genuine democracies is every nation's proudest achievement but we cannot contrive a shoe that would fit every foot.

After all even old democracies have little reason to be too proud of their pre-war record. It is rather humiliating to think that the only statesmen who recognized the nature of Nazism were three dictators; Stalin started at once in a gigantic re-armament; Marshal Pilsudski of Poland proposed twice preventive war to his French allies before he compromised with Hitler and Mussolini resisted the German imperialism as long as he felt strong enough.

System Not Cure-All.

Under these circumstances it would be rather pretentious of the old democracies if they offered their system as a cure-all to every nation. The reply would perhaps be to be shown first that democracy, too, can be watchful, far-sighted and well prepared some time before a quarter to twelve. If democracy by its complacency invites aggression then many people will prefer the native dictator to the alien one.

If there is anything which can mitigate the immense guilt of the Germans then it is the fact that their innate lust for world domination was time and again tempted by the British Empire's military weakness. Anti-imperialism acted as a strong incentive to German-Japanese imperialism.

G. K. Chesterton, one of Britain's most enlightened brains, wrote, "We have to remember that civilization as it goes on ought not perhaps to grow more fighting but ought to grow more ready to fight. The more valuable and reposeful is the order we have to guard, the more vivid should be our ultimate sense of vigilance and potential violence."

Discussion Period.

Queried about the Nazi trends in Austria, Dr. Klein said that Austria is regarded as a German-occupied country and its subjects in America are not classed as enemy aliens but as friendly neutrals. The most bitterly disappointed in Austria were the Nazi-Austrians who found that they did not receive the high positions they had hoped for. Germans from Germany did that. Nor were they able to plunder and take all the booty. The Germans were much more efficient and more experienced at robbery and thievery. Nazism did not mean prosperity but war, and war in its more terrible form with Austrians sent to the most dangerous spots. But the trend is so far away from Nazism now that Hitler cannot trust the Austrians. The development in Spain is hopeful. Franco is a Spanish patriot, no matter what opinions one has of him. He will not sacrifice his country for German military purposes. Nothing but disaster comes to allies as well as enemies of Germany for Hitler intends to use all the world as a slave market. The attitude of Brazil has a strong influence too on Spain.

Italians still loath and hate Germans and the speaker felt that Italy intends to change sides as soon as possible. Italy never expected France to collapse and when it fell Mussolini had to climb down from his fence and enter the war with Germany, otherwise Italy would have been the next country to be occupied. In Italy as in Spain, the influence, too, of the Roman Catholic Church against Nazism would have a deterring effect on both nations. It is noticeable that Italy has sent only 40,000 troops to help against Russia. This in a nation of six million men is very small support for Hitler. Mussolini is obviously economizing his men.

The appreciation of the club was ably expressed by the president, Mrs. Geen, at the close of the lecture.

CANADIAN GOV'T ANXIOUS ABOUT RECENT NAZI ACT

Hold Consultations With British Gov't. Respecting Manacle Order by Nazis

MAY TAKE REPRISALS

Ottawa, Oct. 8—(CP)—The United Kingdom and Canadian Governments are holding "urgent consultations" regarding possible reprisals for the German manacling of Canadian and British prisoners captured at Dieppe, an External Affairs Department spokesman said today at a Press conference.

The Berlin radio announced today that prisoners taken at Dieppe had been manacled since noon, claiming it was in reprisal for similar treatment of captured Nazis.

The departmental spokesman said here that no decision has been reached as to any reprisal steps against the thousands of German prisoners held in Canada.

(Dispatches from London said the British Government, in a quick reply to the German action, threatened to bind the hands of German prisoners in British hands up to the number of Canadians and Britons taken prisoners at Dieppe.)

Almost all the Germans held as war prisoners in Canada were captured by British forces, the spokesman said, and therefore any act of reprisal would be a matter in which the United Kingdom Government would have an important voice.

The majority of prisoners taken by the Nazis at Dieppe were Canadian. Consequently, the Canadian Government was particularly disturbed by the Berlin radio report, he added.

Exact Number Not Known

(Exact number of Canadians taken prisoner at Dieppe is not known, since the Germans so far have not forwarded an official list to Ottawa, through the International Red Cross at Geneva. More than 2,500 Canadians were reported missing after the battle, however, and a considerable proportion are believed to be in custody.)

Thousands of prisoners of war—the exact number is kept secret, are confined in camps in Canada and most of them are believed to be Germans. They include submarine men, airmen and soldiers, a considerable number of whom were brought from the North African battle zone.

Started in 1940

The first large movement of prisoners to Canada started during the summer of 1940, after the fall of France. With an invasion attempt against the British Isles anticipated, Canada agreed to take charge of large number of prisoners held there. It was feared they would be a source of danger in the event of a German attack.

Prior to that, Canadian internment camps had been mainly for the confinement of civilians—both enemy Nationals and Canadians—who were considered a danger to the state. The enemy Nationals were those Germans and Italians resident in Canada who were thought to be a menace.

The bringing of numbers of combatants from overseas necessitated construction of a number of prison camps scattered across the country. Most of them are in comparatively inaccessible spots in northern Ontario and western Canada.

Number of Escapes

Although there have been a considerable number of escapes and attempted escapes from camps in Canada, so far only one prisner, Baron Franz Von Werra, a German airman, has succeeded in making his way to freedom and returning to Germany. He was subsequently reported killed in action. All others have been recaptured and taken back to custody except for a few who were killed during pursuit.

The job of guarding the prison camps has been performed by the Veterans' Guard and the custody of the prisoners during transit is the responsibility of the Canadian provost corps.

IT WASN'T THAT KIND OF A HORSE

"They used to hang people for this offence," jokingly remarked Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., in Thursday's County Police Court when an airman from the Trenton R.C.A.F base appeared on a charge of stealing a "model Black Horse." The article stolen was displayed in court before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd by Chief J. C. Hayes of Tweed, after the officer had found a miniature model Black Horse, advertising a well known beverage, in the airman's possession. The accused agreed to repair the model, which had been damaged while in his possession after being taken from a Tweed hotel. The case will be finally disposed of on Oct. 22nd.

NAZIS THREATEN TO MANACLE MORE PRISONERS

Will Take Action If British Carry Out Reprisal Step

Have Bound 1,376 Prisoners Already; May Shackle Three Times That Number

ITALY CHIPS IN

London, Oct. 9 — (CP) — The Germans, announcing that they had shackled the hands of 1,376 British war prisoners, threatened today to manacle three times that number at noon tomorrow if British authorities carry out their announced determination to take counter-measures against German prisoners in Britain.

Presumably many, perhaps most, of those shackled in Germany were Canadians captured at Dieppe.

The new threat from Germany, and another by Italy, aggravated an already-bitter wrangle over the treatment of captives and threatened to undermine restraints against inhumane handling of war prisoners.

The issue between Britain and Germany is based on the Nazi contention — which British authorities have repeatedly denied — that British soldiers handcuffed Germans captured during the Battle of Dieppe Aug. 19 and in a Commando raid on the channel island of Sark last Sunday.

Wrangle Develops

It has reached the stages of alleged reprisal, and the threat of counter-reprisal and counter-counter-reprisal.

The entry of Italy into the exchange of accusations came with a Rome broadcast today that Fascist forces had found a document during British attacks on Tobruk which, it alleged, "stated that all Italians in a certain sector were to be killed."

It contended that this supposed order was "for the integral suppression" of Italians without discrimination and that "our more than legitimate reprisals have thus been rendered inevitable."

There was no immediate indication of what measures the Italians contemplated or on what authority the Rome broadcast was based.

Carry Out Threat

The Germans threatened Wednesday to fetter prisoners captured at Dieppe; announced yesterday they had carried out the threat, and said today that the shackles had been placed on 107 British officers and 1,269 non-commissioned officers and men.

In swift answer to yesterday's announcement, the British War Office declared that if the manacles were not removed an equal number of Germans in British custody would be handcuffed at noon Saturday.

Now, the Nazi high command has retaliated with another threat — that if British authorities fulfill

Seven Killed As Plane Crashes Into Fundy Bay

Halifax, Oct. 9 (CP)—Loss of an aircraft with its crew of seven from the Royal Air Force at Greenwood, N.S., was announced Thursday by Eastern Air Command officials, a few hours after the plane crashed into the Bay of Fundy two miles north of Port George, N.S.

The plane sank almost immediately and the seven airmen have been listed as missing, presumably killed. Names of the men have been withheld, pending notification of the next-of-kin.

No details of the crash were available.

Miss Josephine Edwards said she had watched the big plane drift up the harbor, circle close to shore off the fishing community and then turn to retrace its course.

Just after it turned, she said, the roar of its engines ceased and the aircraft, already flying at a low altitude, slid off to one side and smacked into the water.

"It seemed to go right under," Miss Edwards said. "There was the sound of the crash, a cloud of smoke, and that was all."

Ambulances and rescue planes rushed from Greenwood in answer to her phone message found only a large patch of oil.

GERMANS START OFFENSIVE SOUTH OF STALINGRAD

Calculated to Cut Through Kalmyck Area to Volga Delta

KALMYCKS TO FIGHT

By EDDY GILMORE

Moscow, Oct. 9 (AP)—The Germans, grinding slowly forward in an industrial district of Stalingrad but with victory still denied them there, were reported today to have started anew on a wide flanking invasion further south, obviously calculated to cut through the Kalmyck territory to the Volga Delta on the Caspian Sea.

A dispatch to the government newspaper Izvestia from Astrakhan, at the mouth of the Volga, contained the first Russian announcement that the Germans had entered the Kalmyck area which lies west of the lower Volga and south of Stalingrad.

This indicated a developing activity on the German right flank across the steppes between the Don and the lower Volga concurrent with the desperate see-saw struggle for Stalingrad.

Izvestia's dispatch said representatives of the Kalmyck people, Asiatic descendants of Mongolian Nomads who settled in southern Russia, had held a council of war at the village of Ganukovo, heard reports that the Germans were burning and killing in their territory, and vowed resistance.

A speaker at the meeting said the Kalmycks would spare nothing in the defence of their land, the dispatch said, and the representatives adopted an appeal that all Kalmycks mobilize for resistance. They sent a message of allegiance to Premier Joseph Stalin.

(According to German claims, the enemy entered the Kalmyck territory several weeks ago when Elista, the capital, 180 miles west of Astrakhan, was reported captured. The Izvestia dispatch suggested that this penetration now was being extended.

(The route from Elista to Astrakhan traverses some of Russia's worst terrain for the support of an invading army. The region is arid, the great plains rumpled with sand dunes and overgrown with scrub vegetation. The pastoral nomads who inhabit it are almost constantly on the move in search of water and vegetation for their flocks.)

As for the Russians' own flanking drive northwest of Stalingrad, Izvestia said that the advance continued in some sectors with German resistance overcome and counter-attacks repulsed.

Northwest of the city the Red army occupied an important hill, Izvestia said, and hurled back three enemy counter-attacks.

On the Caucasus front, second in importance only to the Stalingrad line, the German offensive persisted in the Mozdok sector while southeast of Novorossisk the Germans were attempting to retake positions recently lost by their Rumanian allies.

Near Voronezh, 300 miles northwest of Stalingrad, the Red army was reported holding firmly against German efforts to regain lost ground on the west bank of the Don, while on the Leningrad front the Germans were said to be bringing up siege guns in the Pulkovo sector.

U.S. Tank Man Maltreated When Japs Capture Tank in Solomon Is.

The following account of action in the Solomon Islands, distributed by the Associated Press and the Canadian Press, was written by a United States Marine Corps correspondent in the combat zone.

By SGT. RICHARD T. WRIGHT

A U.S. Outpost Somewhere in the South Pacific, Sept. 12—(Delayed) — Private Eugene Oliver Moore, United States Marine Corps is living on borrowed time.

Sixty-five Japs trapped him in his tank on Gavutu Island, ripped open the hatch, threw hand grenades into it and set it on fire.

Smoke and fumes forced Moore out of the tank after the other crew members had been killed. The Japs grabbed him, knocked him down, kicked him, jabbed him with a pitchfork, knifed him, then picked him up and bounced him off the side of the tank.

"I guess they thought I was dead," Moore recalls. "I had quite a bit of blood on me and was unconscious."

Moore, whose home is San Francisco, at first was believed to have been killed in action. Rescued by his comrades and skilfully cared for by navy doctors, he is very much alive today, after being evacuated from the Solomons to this base with other marine wounded.

He told his remarkable story from his cot in the mobile base hospital which the navy has stationed here.

Japanese Belted In Surprise Solomons Attack

MUST BASE NEW ORDER ON FAITH SAYS MR. KING

Prime Minister Outlines "National Minimum" For the Post-War Period

SPEAKS TO A. F. L.

Toronto, Oct. 9 (CP) — New lessons of co-operation in industry and in international relations being taught by the necessity of war, will play an important part in meeting post-war problems, Prime Minister Mackenzie King said in an address prepared for delivery today at the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor.

As a "national minimum" for the post-war period. Mr. King gave these requirements:

1. Useful employment for all who are willing to work;
2. Standards of nutrition and housing which are adequate to ensure the health of the whole population;
3. Social insurance against privations resulting from unemployment, accident, death of the bread-winner, ill-health and old age.

"The new order must be based on faith leading to co-operation between the parties in industry and among the nations of the world," said Mr. King. "The new order must be based on human rights, not the rights of property, privilege or position. The new order must be a world order. It must be governed by a universal rule of law" . . .

"The era of freedom will be achieved only as social security and human welfare become the main concern of men and nation."

The Prime Minister's speech was broadcast over Toronto outlets of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and was scheduled for rebroadcast over the eastern CBC network at 7.30 p.m. E.D.T. and over the western network at 11 p.m.

A Struggle of Freedom

The war, Mr. King said, is primarily a struggle for freedom—and freedom he defined as "the absence of fear."

Next to the fear of war the greatest fear to most men was that of unemployment. There was continual questioning why, if there were no lack of work in wartime, there could not also be abundant work in time of peace.

"I believe the war is teaching us that the obstacles to full employment were not real obstacles; that a partnership of management, of workers and of the community can make useful work available, in time of peace no less than in time of war, for all who need or want to work," Mr. King said.

Son of Actor Joe Brown Killed in Air Crash

Long Beach, Calif., Oct. 9—(AP)—Captain Don E. Brown, 25, son of Actor Joe E. Brown, was killed today in the crash of an army bomber near Palm Springs. The army ferrying command said Brown was on a routine flight from the Long Beach air base to Utah when the crash occurred. Brown only recently was promoted to a captaincy, after having been commissioned a second lieutenant in the air forces July 11, 1941.

Thousands of Canadian Troops Safe in Britain To Join Armored Corps

Reinforcements for Other Formations Including Airmen in Convoy

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

A British Port, Oct. 9 (CP Cable)—Thousands of Canadian soldiers from a score of formations across Canada have arrived in Britain to join the armored division command by Maj.-Gen. F. Worthington.

The cheerful bronzed Canadians sounded their own welcome as the big troopships which carried them across the Atlantic without incident moved slowly to berths.

Most of the arrivals were beretted troopers of the armored division, but there were reinforcements for other formations as well, and hundreds of Canadian, British, Australian and New Zealand airmen.

The convoy also brought Canadian nursing sisters, firefighters and a draft of the Royal Canadian Navy.

Sir Arthur Bromley of the Dominions office welcomed some of the troops while Col. J. L. Ralston, Canadian Defence Minister who was unable to meet the convoy personally, sent a message expressing "very hearty congratulations on your safe arrival."

Ralston Sends Greetings

"I join in the warm welcome you will receive from your comrades here," the Defence Minister said. "Canadian fighting forces have mad a fine name for our Dominion. I know you will keep up the good work. Cheerio and great success."

Ordnance Men Termed "Right Leg" of Division by Gen. Worthington

By FRANK LOWE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

An East Coast Canadian Port, Oct. 9 — (CP) — Eager to tool their tanks down the roads leading to Berlin, another section of Canada's fighting 4th division sailed from this port on a crisp fall morning, just a few weeks after the first section of the tank corps had been greeted in Britain by their rugged commander, Maj.-Gen. F. F. Worthington.

Safe arrival of their convoy in Britain was announced today.

With them sailed reinforcements for units already in Britain, nurses slated for active duty in front line hospitals, airmen, with brand new wings shining on their tunics and a group of prisoners.

But the tank men, with their maintenance units, formed the greater part of the movement. All appeared anxious to get overseas. Calling the tune for the battle-minded soldiers was Staff Sergeant H. J. Heissner of Montreal who said, "Let's get over there and trim hell out of Jerry."

Tired of Hanging Around

In fact, Heissner said he was so tired with hanging around in Canada he was almost ready to swim over. He might have made a stab at that homeric feat too, as he won the Dominion Service swim title at Verdun, Que., in 1941.

CANADIAN NAVY TAKES PART IN ALEUTIAN LANDING

Five Canadian Ships Worked With U.S. Force Says Macdonald

WORK WORLD OVER

Ottawa, Oct. 9. (CP)—The Royal Canadian Navy participated in an offensive action in the Pacific—taking its share in seizing the initiative from the Japanese—by co-operating with the United States force which recently landed in the Aleutians, Navy Minister Macdonald announced last night.

Mr. Macdonald said five Canadian warships worked with the American force. He added he was unable to amplify his announcement for reasons of security.

In telling of the part played by Canadian naval nits in the Aleutians operation, the Minister said Canadian navy men have been and now are carrying out naval operations the world over.

Canadian naval men saw action recently at Madagascar, in the Mediterranean, in the naval raid on Tobruk and in the combined operations assault on Dieppe. Canadian army men constituted five-sixths of the military force which landed at Dieppe.

On Oct. 3, the United States navy announced in Washington that positions in the Aleutians'

WENDELL WILLKIE GETS A TASTE OF REAL DANGER

Four Jap Shells Explode Near Railway on Which He Was Travelling

VISITS FRONT LINE

With the Chinese Army in North China, Oct. 9 — (AP) — Wendell Willkie, touring the Yellow River front, got a taste of real danger when four Japanese shells exploded yesterday near the railway on which he and his party were travelling by hand-car.

Earlier Willkie missed by only a few hours a heavy Japanese air raid on Loyang, during which enemy planes machine-gunned a blue railway coach similar to the special car in which he made part of his trip to the front.

Thirty-five planes participated in the attack on Loyang, the most violent raid on a North China town in months. Six persons were killed by the raiders, who might conceivably have been under the impression that Willkie's special train was then in the station.

As it happened, Willkie was 130 miles away in the front-line trenches.

It was on the last stage of his trip to the front that the four enemy shells came screaming across the Yellow River in the general di-

1,108 Repatriated Britons Return Home From Japan

A British Port, Oct. 9 —(CP—Cable)—Eleven hundred and eight repatriated Britons, including Sir Robert Craigie, ambassador to Tokyo when Japan opened her war against Britain and the United States, arrived here today from Japan and China in two steamships.

The ships were the Elnil, which had 230 passengers, and the Markunda, with 878. Government officials, missionaries, doctors and their families made up the greater part of the passenger list.

GREAT AMERICAN AERIAL ARMADA SWEEPS N. FRANCE

Joins R.A.F. Fighters In Heavy Air Blow Against Targets On French Coast

AIMED AT LILLE

London, Oct. 9 — (CP) — More than 100 United States bombers attacked the industrial Lille region of Northern France today in the biggest American bomber and fighter force ever to take the air in the European war theatre. It was understood Canadian airmen made up part of the large fighter escort.

United States Army Air Force Headquarters, promising a more detailed announcement later, issues this terse communique:—

"More than 100 U. S. A. A. F. bombers attacked targets in the Lille area this morning.

"Many squadrons of fighters took part in this operation."

A big part of the bombing force, an extraordinary number for a daylight raid, was made up of four-motored Flying Fortresses.

Many squadrons of R. A. F. and other Allied fighters joined in the action.

The Evening News said some onlookers rushed for the air raid shelters, fearful that German raiders were bearing down upon them, until the star of the United States Army Air Forces could be discerned on the fighter planes.

(Spitfires had been the only fighters mentioned officially as in use by United States fliers in England so that the bewilderment of the long-experienced residents of Folkestone may have meant the appearance of a type unfamiliar to them. Censorship did not permit clarification of this point.)

The Evening News said anti-aircraft guns opened fire but were believed to be shelling two planes which could be seen flying high above the American fighters.

The Fortresses recrossed the coast at about the same time, flying inland amid waves of planes, while Spitfires hovered over the channel to protect the homeward flight.

More than 100 United States bombers, many of them the big, four-engined Fortresses, made up the attacking force along with an escort of "more than 200 Allied fighters," the Evening News estimated.

The largest number of fighters and fighter-bombers seen aloft in months passed over one south coast town headed toward the continent. Considerable activity over the occupied French coast between Boulogne and Calais was indicated by the vapor trails left by invisible craft flying at about 30,000 feet.

A great force of planes which swept back across the English coast just before noon caused considerable excitement, residents believing at first they were German craft. The white star of the United States army air forces was distinguished on the fighters, however, as they roared in from 10,000 feet in steep dives.

Tough Little Steamer, Crew Arrive After Trip Across Roof of America

By BOB DALDORPH
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Sydney, N. S., Oct. 9 —(CP)—Conquerors of the Northwest Passage for the second time in more than four centuries of exploration, eight seagoing policemen and a tough little schooner stepped into the history books today as the first expedition to sail from west to east across the roof of America.

Over the storied route strewn with the skeletons of ships and men, Sergeant Henry Larsen and his crew of Royal Canadian Mounted Policemen steered the 80-ton St. Roch from the Pacific to the Atlantic in 2 1-3 years of perilous voyaging, back-tracking the trail Amundsen covered for the first time 36 years before.

When the white-hulled St. Roch and her sea-weary crew pulled into this port late yesterday, after a tortuous trip of many thousands of miles through ice-jammed lanes north of the Arctic Circle, she had snipped eight months off her predecessor's time for the voyage across the roof of a continent.

She had set her sails for the odyssey in June of 1940 at Vancouver, and she landed here 28 months later. It took Roald Amundsen an even three years—from 1903 to 1906—to cover the same distance when he forced the passage from east to west, centuries after the ancients had begun the search for the coveted route to Cathay.

But as the 100-foot schooner chugged into harbor on her Diesel auxiliary, her sails furled, she looked like anything but a ship of history. And her crew, casual about the accomplishment and eager only to stretch their legs ashore, told virtually nothing of the journey from sea to sea.

Lose One Man in North

They said only that they had sailed across, had lost one man in the north, and had replaced him with another Mountie at a northern outpost, and had landed safely on the Atlantic side. For the rest

5 Ships, Including Heavy Cruiser, Damaged in Raid

Aircraft Carrier Force Catches Japs Unawares in Shortland Area Monday

8 PLANES DOWNED

By JOHN H. WIGGINS
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

Washington, Oct. 9 (AP)—Persistently belting Japanese invaders the Allied offensive left surprised enemy forces in the Solomon Islands today with eight less aircraft and five damaged ships including a heavy cruiser.

The latest of the recently-initiated attacks which already have forced the Japanese back virtually to their starting point in New Guinea and apparently driven them out of two of the three western Aleutian Islands they once occupied, struck at the heart of the Nipponese invasion base in the North Solomons.

Catching the Japanese unawares in bad weather, an American aircraft carrier force shattered the enemy's ships and planes in the Shortland Island area on Monday, the navy announced last night.

(Meanwhile, growing co-operation of the Allied forces in the battle of the Pacific was indicated further by announcement of Navy Minister Angus Macdonald in Ottawa last night that five Canadian warships had aided United States forces in occupying the Andreanof group of islands in the Aleutians. Mr. Macdonald said he could give no further details because of security reasons.

Kiska Heavily Bombed

(While no further word came from this front, it is presumed the remaining Japanese foothold at Kiska is being subjected to repeated bombardments by Allied planes operating from the Andreanof base. It is known that Canadian ground and air forces have been taking part in operations against the Japanese in the Aleutian area.)

Without loss of a man or a plane, the navy's aircraft damaged a heavy cruiser and a transport with heavy bombs and two cargo ships and a seaplane tender with lighter bombs. Two enemy seaplanes and two bombers were shot down and four four-engined flying boats were destroyed in the harbor. In addition low-flying craft poured bullets into another cruiser and destroyer.

Thrust Follows Reconnaissance

The new thrust in the Allied offensive program was a result of observations by long-range reconnaissance aircraft in recent weeks, the navy said.

Concentrations of large numbers of enemy ships were sighted in the Shortland Island area and it is considered likely they helped supply and reinforce the Japanese detachments on American-controlled Guadalcanal Island 259 miles distant.

Meanwhile, on the basis of the navy's last report on the Guadalcanal operations, naval and military circles still expect the Japanese will attempt again to recapture the air base taken by the marines more than two months ago.

LICENCE NEEDED TO BUILD HOUSE OVER $500 VALUE

New Order Applies to Building Contemplated and Work Now in Progress

OTHER TYPES NAMED

Ottawa, Oct. 9 (CP)—Tightened building retrictions, effective immediately, requiring a licence for the construction of any house costing more than $500 were announced today by the Munitions and Supply Department.

The new order, issued by C. Blake Jackson, Controller of Construction, is an extension of a previous order which required licences for construction, repairs or alterations costing more than $5,000.

Mr. Jackson said the new order applies not only to work which is contemplated but also to work now in progress.

"Residential construction must be drastically curtailed through Canada," the Controller said in explanation of the order.

Reductions Detailed

In addition to extending the regulations on licensing of new residential building, the order also applies to other types of construction, repairing or alterations. For any such work on a plant the permissible maximum without a licence has been cut from $5,000 to $2,500 and on a grain storage warehouse from $5,000 to $2,500 except on Prairies where it remains at $1.

On any other type of building, including the cost of equipment to be installed, the reduction is from $5,000 to $500.

The permissible maximum cost of the installation, without a licence, of any equipment in a factory or plant is reduced from $5,000 to $2,500 and for any equipment, including construction work and installation, for the conversion of oil or gas burning facilities the permissible maximum has been reduced from $2,500 to $500.

"Equally effective was the work of the Trenton Air Station Brigade. They too, did heroic work, and we are extremely grateful to Air Commodore F. S. McGill, officer commanding, who placed more men at the disposal of the authorities. Mr. Lipson wishes to convey to both these fire organizations, his sincere appreciation of their unselfish efforts, and for the fine work they did in preventing further loss to the community."

Lloyd here today when an application for bail was suggested as Stanley Babcock and Harvey Schryver, both of Belleville, appeared on charges of stealing scrap brass.

Schryver and Babcock were remanded in custody despite suggestions of bail made by Robt. Pringle, local barrister appearing for the accused men. The pair were arraigned on a charge of stealing scrap brass, valued at $4.00, the property of Abraham Safe. The men denied the charge, which prompted Mr. Donnan to seek enlargement. "I have a definite reason for denying any suggestion of bail in these cases," Mr. Donnan assured His Worship. Babcock and Schryver were remanded for one week.

Cole was not asked to plead, although police stated they had recovered the two comforters in the accused man's possessions. On recommendation of Deputy Chief Harman the case was enlarged for one week. Robert Pringle, local barrister, appeared on Cole's behalf and asked that bail be set. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C., agreed to the sum of $300.

Information that two bed comforters were to be found at Cole's address was provided by a woman who also resides on Station St. The comforters are said to have been removed from the Modern Cleaners, where Cole was employed some time ago.

When Alvin Richards of this city, appeared on a charge of vagrancy Mr. Charles A. Payne K.C., appeared for the accused and requested bail after Mr. Donnan informed the court the prosecution was not in readiness to proceed. Bail was set at $500 and provided by Richards' employer.

"This is the chap who is said to have been seen on Mr. Jenkins' premises on Bridge Street, last Sunday night. He is being charged on a nominal count of vagrancy at this time", revealed Crown Attorney Donnan. He agreed to His Worship's suggestion of $500 bail.

WILL TAKE ACTION

theirs, three times the number already placed in chains will have been bound by noon Saturday.

Notwithstanding Britain's specific denial of the Nazi charges that an order for the handcuffing of prisoners in the field had been issued, the Nazi communique said today:

Berlin Statement.

"The British government replied to the statement made by the German high command on October 7, 1942, when counter-measures were announced in retaliation for the fettering of German prisoners of war on the Dieppe beach and the Channel islands of Sark, in an unsatisfactory manner by basing their declaration on statements made by German prisoners of war who had not been fettered, and by declaring that they do not approve nor will approve in the future of fettering prisoners of war on the battlefield.

"The British government, however, refrained from dealing with the fact that despite the previous and present hypocritical declarations made by the British War Office, German prisoners of war have been fettered in a brutal way.

Some Are Exempted

"For this reason, on October 8, at 12 noon, 107 British officers and 1,269 British non-commissioned officers and privates taken prisoner at Dieppe have been fettered after being informed the reason why. Military clergymen, doctors, stretcher bearers and the wounded and sick were not fettered.

"On the evening of October 8, the British War Office announced that on October 10 at 12, noon, the same number of German prisoners of war would be fettered and chained.

"Should this happen, the German high command on October 10, at 12 noon, will have fettered three times the number of British prisoners of war."

Use Term "British"

The Germans throughout their announcement used the description "British" in reference to the prisoners. But as the great majority of prisoners taken at Dieppe by the enemy were Canadians, the presumption was that most of those fettered were Canadians.

The Dominion government has announced that it has been in urgent consultation with the British government, concerning the whole matter.

Some British sources expressed belief that the sudden, bitter issue was an Axis skirmish in the battle of nerves, aimed at diverting their peoples' attention from campaign frustrations.

These sources said Germany apparently was trying to make a weapon out of the fact that she has far more British prisoners than Britain has Germans. They said Britain has some 23,000 Germans in her hands and the Germans have roughly 115,000 Britons.

262,000 Italian Prisoners

Britain, however, also has 262,000 Italians, captured mostly in the battles of Libya and East Africa.

Many Axis prisoners have been transferred to Canada. Others are in Britain, India and Australia.

The British Government in response to Germany's original charges, had invited investigation of treatment of prisoners by Switzerland, as provided by the Geneva convention of 1929 regulating the care of war prisoners, but the Germans spurned this assurance with the declaration that it was up to Britain herself to "disprove", the Nazi charges.

There was one rumor that Swiss legation officials in London had inspected German prisoners yesterday and found them well-treated, but the Swiss denied having received instructions from their government to make such an inquiry.

Other Trouble Brewing

A similar issue apparently was brewing between Germany and Russia. A Berlin broadcast yesterday accused the Russians of killing prisoners taken on the eastern front. It made no threats, however.

The diplomatic correspondent of the Press Association said it was understood the intention of the British Government is to regard all Axis prisoners on the same footing, and make no differentiation between Germans and Italians.

He said the British Government was maintaining "the closest possible" contact with the Canadian Government. He noted the majority of Dieppe prisoners were Canadians and added: "There is the greatest indignation throughout the Dominion at the treatment of their men."

The correspondent drew attention to the fact there are many thousands of German prisoners interned in Canada, including a number from the Africa corps, captured in desert fighting.

Trenton and District

Schools Participate In Fire Drill Practice

Trenton, (Special)—Fire Prevention Week is being carried out in Trenton in every detail this week by Fire Chief Harry Filion and his staff. Complete inspection is being made of all factories, business places and public buildings in the town with a view to reducing fires to a minimum in Trenton. Fire Chief Filion was loud in his praise of the efficiency with which school children in the town cleared their classrooms when the fire signals were sounded, this having been achieved by much practice from year to year and careful attention being given to every detail of the drill. College Street School which has the largest number of pupils of any of the town schools, 533, was completely cleared in one minute. Dufferin school with 440 pupils took only 50 seconds while the Separate school and the High school each took forty seconds, the former having 231 pupils while T.H.S. has 232. An inspection of the North Trenton school is expected to be made during the next few days.

Personals

Mr. and Mrs. Murray Dixon and Miss Ruth Dixon, Frances Street, left on Wednesday for Moncton to attend the wings parade of their son LAC. Murray Dixon who graduated on Friday.

Mrs E. Shiere and daughter Shaila are visiting the former's parents in Cannington.

Sought since May last for desertion from the Canadian Army, Private G. L. Phillips was apprehended in Trenton on Thursday and will be turned over to the proper authorities.

Boys Admit Break-in Late on Wednesday night it was discovered by a local citizen that two boys were hauling a large quantity of coal which they stated they had bought. Sensing that something was wrong the citizen phoned police but in the meantime the boys quickly disappeared leaving their wagon in the lane. They were later traced and it was found the coal had been taken from the McInnes Coal Co., Quinte Street. The boys admitted having broken into the Grist Mill of Mr. Fred Rose on Sunday afternoon. They have only recently moved to Trenton from Toronto where it is alleged they had been before Juvenile Court in that city. Due to their tender years they were given a warning by the police and their parents were also notified of the offence.

Driver Reported

Mr. Fred Gitelman, a local merchant, reported to police that on Thursday while his car was parked at the corner of Front and Elgin Streets another car collided with it doing extensive damage to the bumper. The driver stopped and picked up the broken piece of the bumper threw it into the Gitelman car. This was observed by another citizen who took the number of the offending car and turned it over to the police.

MUST BASE NEW

"When the war is won there will be an immense task to repair the great physical destruction caused by war; there will be a pent-up demand for all the goods and services which are increasingly denied in wartime; there will be the huge task of providing food for the starving peoples of the old world.

"These tasks alone will provide work for millions of men and women for many years.

"But the work of repairing and restoring the ravages of war will not be enough. Fortunately, we are also learning that the only limit to our productive capacity is the limit of our resources, and our will and skill to use them to satisfy human need instead of human greed."

Before the war there was much talk of the conservation of national resources but less was heard of the conservation of human resources.

Must Promote Happiness

"When the war is over we must use our natural and material resources to conserve human resources—to promote the health and happiness for all the people."

In war the existence of the community was placed before the interests of individuals, and this too was a lesson for peace.

Despite the general will for victory there was a danger that Nazi propaganda might have a harmful effect.

"We begin to hear it said that the war must end in a stalemate, in some kind of compromise," Mr. King said. "This is a dangerous suggestion for the very reason that it exploits many of our deepest fears—the fear of the hardships, burdens and sacrifices of war; the fear of the loss of our loved ones."

At the best a stalemate would mean an armistice with both sides remaining prepared for a renewal of the struggle.

"The worker of today cannot escape a return to serfdom save by the might of the armed forces," he continued.

"The freedom of the world depends on the combined efforts of the fighting brotherhood of warriors and the producing brotherhood of workers."

"At the close of the last Great War the Unknown Soldier became the symbol of humanity's struggle for freedom. To my mind, that symbol told but half the story. In the symbolism of the unheralded forces that are contributing so largely to victory in the present war, the hand of the unknown fighter will clasp the hand of the unknown worker. Together they will stand, the symbol of those who fought and worked to save their fellow men."

GREAT AMERICAN

The regular communique of the Ministeries of Air and Home Security made no mention of German aerial activity over Britain during the night, but later reports said there had been some action over the southeast coast.

Bad weather meanwhile forced a break in the R.A.F. offensive against Germany for the second straight night.

Two German planes which appeared over the Channel were driven off by a fighter patrol.

THOUSANDS OF

The arrival was typical of scores of others since Canadian troops started to come to this country almost three years ago. As the grey liners appeared thousands of soldiers lined the rails, climbed onto lifeboats and peered through portholes for a glimpse of shore.

They piled onto the docks shouting, singing and whistling. Many threw cigarets and small coins into the crowds.

The men were wearing every type of head gear, some with berets, balmorals or stocking caps, others in steel helmets, forage or field service caps. All carried lifebelts until just before they debarked.

Crossing Quiet

There were ordnance, artillery, engineer, army service and medical corps men aboard the ships. They said the crossing was quiet—"You wouldn't know there was a war on," commented Guardsman Horace Caron—but they admitted the weather one day left them "woosy."

Ptes. W. K. Dick of Toronto and E. J. Tracy of Ottawa, members of an Ontario Field Ambulance unit, were interested in balloons ashore and over ships on the river. "Guess we'll see lots of those before we get home again," said Dick.

The troops were all anxious to have their names taken down so their families would know they had arrived safely and a dozen guardsmen called out theirs almost simultaneously.

They included SSM. F. J. Stephens, Sgt. A. Dugard, S. Sgt. C. Marriott, all of Montreal; Gdsm. K. Sheehan, Ottawa, E. T. Killer, Ridgetown, Ont.

One husky, smiling Canadian was not sure whether he should send his name home or not. He was Pte. James Chabot of Maniwaki, Que., a member of the Forestry Corps, who explained: "You see, I'm not English, I'm an Indian." But Chabot got his name taken down and with a fellow townsman, Pte. T. McDonald, had his picture taken sitting on the rail at the stern of the ship.

Other easterners, who were in the majority in this contingent, included Riflemen Kenneth Rosewell and Camille Ouellette, both of Montreal.

ORDNANCE

He was with the Royal Canadian Ordnance Corps, the unit that Maj.-Gen. Worthington terms the "right leg" of his division. Before he left, that patron saint of Canadian tank men told the ordnance men, "Without you we cannot run, we can only crawl. We depend on you to keep us in running and fighting order."

A trio of athletes were also with the ordnance men. Pte. J. Raymond of Noranda, Que., for four years was a centreman with Lamaque, northwestern Quebec hockey champions in 1939. Another was Pte. M. C. Morgan of Fredericton, who in 1939 won the all-round track and field championship in that city.

Also a track star was Pte. D. A. Standish of Cookshire, Que., who was rated as the best sprinter in Quebec for the years 1937 to 1939.

And "Stan" was going over with a score to settle with the Axis. His brother, CSM. Colin Standish, had been captured with the Royal Rifles at Hong Kong.

Lt.-Col. Rick in Charge

Heading one group of men who will handle the tanks in actual combat was Lt.-Col. Howard W. Rick of Montreal. The trim, jaunty officer was a veteran of the last war, wearing the wings of the old Royal Flying Corps on his khaki tunic.

With him was Major M. C. Finley of Oshawa, making his second trip overseas in this war. "These men are mostly a bunch of kids," he said, "but by harry, I bet they will put up a mean scrap when they have to."

One man in the crowd—Tpr. W. C. Ball of Montreal—had already seen action in this war. As a merchant seaman, he helped in the evacuation of Dunkirk and was torpedoed there. He said he was going back to the sea as soon as this "little job is cleared up."

But it took Brig. A. M. Thomas of Toronto to give the example that showed just how keen these fighters were to get overseas.

"It was a great temptation," this publisher-general said, "but not one man that I know of in my brigade got drunk on his embarkation leave. They were frightened that if they did so they might lose their chance."
